What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

The ease of manner and the appearance of satisfaction which pervade a well dressed woman, arise from a confidence in her own attractiveness. Her toilet is winning because it is becoming—her womanly instinct is responsible for its becomingness—and as her gown has been washed with Ivory Soap it looks new and she is content.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

An auxiliary has been organized in the King Hill church, St. Joseph, by the wife of the pastor, Mrs. R. N. Davis. We are not yet informed as to the officers, but hope to hear soon that the new auxiliary may be entered on the roll of Missouri's faithful. Mrs. C. O. McFarland, the new manager of Nodaway disdrict, reports a new auxiliary at Bigelow, with 26 members and eight Tidings. The Tidings will be read by 13 members. This is fine and we most gladly welcome these new bands into our number.

The objects for our special funds, to the extent of $2,600 as decided by our last state convention, are at last selected by the committee appointed by the president, Mrs. M. M. Goode, for that purpose. The work at Mexico will receive $1,000, as recommended by the convention. Mattie Burgess, our home missionary, for a season, $600. Jamaica, the needy, $400, and two mission points in California, Berkeley, where E. W. Darst preaches, and Palo Alto, where W. E. Crabtree ministers, $600. Your committee and board have been a long time making this selection, and have done what to our prayerful thought seemed best, and we call upon our dear sisters to stand by us, and one and all pray that every dollar that we have pledged to this special work may be more than paid. We have taken a home field, and think this one in California, where our boys and girls are flocking to set up homes of their own, will be especially attractive to our people. But sisters, prayer alone will not pay this money. We must pray, but also do! Do! Do!

May the new year bring peace and joy to our friends everywhere.

Another Peace Conference.

Despite the fact that a war marked by great loss of life has been in process for months past, 1904 has gone into history leaving a great promise. To our own government is due much credit for taking steps towards securing a second meeting of the Hague Conference. Practically all the Powers save Russia have assented to Secretary Hay's inquiry whether they would consider joining in another meeting. Russia suggests delay and Japan consents provisionally. The details of the meeting must be left to the permanent administrative council at The Hague. One of the points of interest is the effort of the Vatican to join the council. That the Pope's influence would be on the side of peace we are sure, but Italy is certain to protest, as before. The promise of such a gathering is indeed great. It is not a chimera, but it will be a federation of nations for legislation that none of them will dare to break.

The President and Missions.

Whether Democrat or Republican had won at the last election the country would have had a Christian President. Most of our former Presidents have been Christian men, but we believe it has remained for the present incumbent of the White House to be the first, in the long line of leaders of the nation, to head a committee for the promotion of foreign missions. The two incentives which have led President Roosevelt to accept the chairmanship of the committee are of course loyalty to his university and to the Christian cause. At Harvard a missionary movement of great promise has been organized, the first object of which is to support a Harvard student, E. C. Snyder, as secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in India. Further than this is the effort that will be made to secure twenty Harvard men to go to the foreign field within the next five years, and to have them maintained by the university contributions. President Roosevelt has promised to serve as chairman of the advisory committee that is to counsel with the executive committee. Yale already has a successful university mission, all her men being in one field—China. Harvard will scatter her forces.

Christian Union Abroad.

Some one has said that the sublimity of wisdom is to do those things living which are to be desired when dying. But "wisdom is rare," unfortunately. A movement which has been on foot for some time to secure the organic union of all the Presbyterian missions in China seems to partake of the kind of wisdom which Solomon meant when he said it is given by the Lord. The Mid-China mission of the Southern Presbyterian church has just voted in favor of consolidation. The other bodies—nine of them—have already given their consent. In the very center of the present field of war, Mukden, there is one native Chinese Presbyterian body, and hard by, another. When starting there was plenty of neutral ground between the two missions, but now they overlap, and it has seemed wise to the leaders on the field that the converts should be brought together into one denomination. Some years ago the Presbyterians of Japan carried out a similar plan, the results of which seem to have given complete satisfaction. That in such union will the mission problem be solved is being more and more realized by the workers as well as by the intelligent natives in mission lands. And if Christian union be desirable abroad, how long will it be before we find that it is equally valuable and desirable at home? A journey of a hundred miles is begun with a step. Let the Presbyterian brethren keep on stepping. After a time thev will walk over into the stamping ground of the Disciples of Christ.

No Liquor for the Indians.

The Senate committee on territories has not done the wise thing. It has, by a majority of six to four, reported in favor of concurring with the House in two statehood bills, Arizona, which is to include New Mexico, and Oklahoma, which is to include Indian Territory. Whether this be the best disposition of this vexed problem we do not now discuss. A more important part of the report is the Senate's amendment that the prohibitory law now in force in Indian Territory shall be continued for a period of ten years. This by no means is satisfactory except to the liquor seller and the man depraved by him. The people of the territory have asked for perpetual prohibition and that is a small matter to grant them. It would be bad enough to throw open the floodgates of whisky to the white people who would be abused by it, but it would be criminal on the part of the United States, knowing the character of the Indian, to make it easy for him to be the "wild Indian," crazed by drink. The people of the United States owe much to the Indian. They owe to themselves not to owe him any further debt of a criminal kind.

A Big City and Its Mayor.

Mr. Harrison has decided, after four terms, not to seek re election to the mayoralty of Chicago. There are many reasons for this course, but Mr. Harrison just says he has had enough of it. One of the leading candidates for the position is a prominent brewer, and we trust the people will not support his nomination. Chicago has been improving from the civic standpoint, and the good work must go on. Just fancy a beer mug winning the chief honors for a great city's citizen. Will it be possible? Then think of the embarrassment of a brewer mayor when one of his best customers is brought before him charged with maintaining a saloon, by which all the laws of the city—to say nothing of good society and God—are broken or set at naught for private gain. A brewer mayor would have a hard time in Chicago and Chicago would have a harder time with its brewer mayor.

Port Arthur Yields.

"To-day gold—to-morrow dust!" The impregnable fortress has fallen. The siege of Port Arthur is ended. The Russian commander, after a stubborn defense lasting many months, has had to surrender what is regarded as the most powerfully fortified position in the world to the Japanese, who from August 7 to December 10, after driving the Russians before them mile by mile, began their desperate and persistent assaults upon the forts surrounding the main fortress. Many positions were taken and retaken, with fearful loss of life on both sides. Then the Japanese began tunneling, and during the past month they have destroyed by dynamite and assault fort after fort. The turning point of the siege was the capture of 203 Meter Hill, which gave the Japanese a commanding position whence their guns could destroy the Russian fleet and sweep the town. At 9:30 Monday night the terms of the surrender were signed by the commissioners appointed by the two generals. The understanding is that the Russians will have all the honors for the vanquished accorded them.

Looking Forward.

The New Year upon which we have entered promises to be a most interesting one in its developments in many directions. The war in the east will probably have run its course and accomplished its results before the close of the present year. These results are likely to be far-reaching in their character.

In our own nation, the peace sentiment is rapidly growing, and treaties of peace between ourselves and other nations are being formed and will, no doubt, be ratified by our own government and the other nations involved. The spirit of reform is on the increase throughout the country, and there is a growing desire and determination on the part of the people to correct political abuses, punish official dishonesty, curb the power of monopolies and trusts, and purify and elevate the tone of our public service. We may hope to see considerable progress in this direction during the coming year, though it will take a long time to eradicate the evils mentioned.

In the religious world, the most noticeable features are the evangelistic wave that is sweeping over the country, affecting all the great Protestant bodies, and the union sentiment which is steadily increasing and is assuming a practical form in many cases. There is a close connection between the two facts mentioned—the spirit of revivalism and the spirit of union. They have a common root in the growing consciousness of Christ's presence in His church, and a clearer discernment of His mind concerning His church and its work. It is only as the church recognizes its true relation to Christ, as the agency for carrying out His will in the world, and puts itself in line with His purposes and plans, that it can accomplish anything great or permanent, either in the line of evangelism or of duty.

There is much in the outlook to encourage us. Everywhere things are moving, and generally in the right direction. Slowly but steadily this old world of ours is rolling out of the mists of ignorance, superstition and moral blindness, into the clearer light of truth and righteousness. Everything shows that God still reigns and that He is carrying forward, through the ages, His sublime purposes and plans. Let us see to it that we are so aligned with Him that He may use us in the accomplishment of His gracious work. May the end of the year upon which we have entered find this a better world in which to live, and all of us better prepared to live in it and work the will of God!

As for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, we never had so many things we wished to convey to the brotherhood through its pages, as at the beginning of this good year of 1905. This coming volume will be crowded with good things from the ablest men among us, and good news from a great multitude of workers from different parts of the great field. Help us to send these messages to the widest possible constituency.

Is There a New Evangelism?

This question would be answered in the affirmative by some and in the negative by others. It does not follow, however, that those affirming and denying would differ essentially from each other. The confusion arises from the use of the same terms in different senses. We believe there is a new evangelism, and in this article and others which are to follow, we propose to point out the respects in which the evangelism of our day is new. Before doing this, however, let us define our terms, that our readers may understand us.

The evangel, or gospel message, in all that is vital and fundamental, remains the same from Pentecost to the present. Salvation from sin and from death, through Jesus Christ, on the conditions of faith in, and obedience to him, is the essence of the gospel which Jesus charged his disciples to preach among all nations. This gospel is for all men, and whosoever will may share in the redemption which it offers. This is the old evangel announced by the angels, and preached by the apostles with the aid of the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven. This is the gospel which is "the power of God unto salvation, unto everyone that believeth." This is the gospel which lifted the ancient world out of its hopeless degradation and darkness, and set it in the pathway of progress, filling men with new inspiration and hope.

We need not say how that gospel has been perverted from its original simplicity and universality, nor by what false methods of evangelism its progress has been stayed and its triumph hindered. All this is told in the pages of church history. God's purposes were narrowed down to suit the limited vision of man, and his gracious plans and methods were misunderstood and misrepresented by zealous sectaries and bitter partisans. The God revealed by Jesus Christ was obscured, and displaced by the God whom the imaginations of men had created after the image of an oriental monarch. And Christ himself—the divine man of the New Testament—who comes so close to our human hearts and sympathies, was discarded for a cold, ecclesiastical or theological Christ, between whom and sinning and suffering humanity there was a great gulf fixed. The arbitrary methods which God used in the conversion of men, according to this old evangelism, were in keeping with his arbitrary character, as the men of that age conceived him to be, and bore not the slightest resemblance to the method of evangelism which we find in the New Testament.

It is with this dark background of the old evangelism that we affirm a new evangelism. But what of the New Testament evangelism—is not that the old evangelism? No, that is the new evangelism. "That which is old is ready to vanish away." The New Testament evangelism is still new. So far from its being ready to "vanish away," it is getting ready for new and higher conquests than it has ever had in the past. Not for eighteen centuries, perhaps, has the church been so well equipped for an evangelistic campaign, in the spirit and according to the methods of the new evangelism, as it is in this first decade of the twentieth century. It has taken centuries of patient and painful preparation to put the church where it is today as an evangelistic agency for the extension of God's kingdom on earth. It is not yet perfectly equipped. Parts of it are loaded down with the traditions, and hampered by the creeds and preconceptions of the past. But take it as a whole, the church to-day has a better conception of God—his nature and purposes and methods—a better conception of Christ, of the Holy Spirit, of man, of sin, of salvation, with a wider outlook upon the world and its needs, and with a more catholic spirit than in any previous century in its history.

In future articles it is our purpose to deal with these new conceptions which enter into modern evangelism, and to note some of the changes which have taken place in our own evangelism in the natural order of its adjustment to new conditions, and to indicate some further changes in the way of additions thereto that must be made in order to the larger success of the work which has been committed to us. Entering as we are upon a great evangelistic campaign with the purpose of doubling our membership before our centennial in 1909, the time has seemed to us propitious for a reexamination and fresh discussion of the whole subject, in which we shall only lead, and in which we hope to enlist the best thought and widest experience among us.

Union of Free Baptists and Disciples.

VI. Difference of Emphasis.

(3) On Christian baptism. Happily there is no difference between the two bodies as to what baptism is, in its New Testament meaning, nor as to our duty in perpetuating this ordinance in the form it had and for the use it served in the beginning of Christianity. Indeed it cannot possibly serve all the purposes specified in the New Testament, except its original form be preserved. It was a symbol of Christ's burial and resurrection, and of the believer's death to sin and resurrection to newness of life (Rom. 6:3; Col. 2:12). Christ's divine sonship is said by Paul to have been declared by his resurrection from the dead (Rom. 1:4). In testifying to Christ's burial and resurrection, therefore, baptism testifies to the most fundamental and the one essential article of faith in Christianity, namely, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of the living God. That high purpose it cannot serve if its form be so changed that it suggests neither a burial nor a resurrection. Neither does it serve the purpose, in this subverted form of reminding the unfaithful church member that his life is a contradiction of what his baptism signified, namely, that he had died to sin and must henceforth have no fellowship with unrighteousness (Rom. 6:2).

There is probably no difference, then, not even in the matter of emphasis, between Free Baptists and Disciples, on the subject of baptism as relates to its form and our duty to preserve that form in order that its significant symbolism be preserved. But there is a difference in emphasis, no doubt, on the question of what has been called the design of baptism—a word which we would gladly see dropped for another less involved in theological and philosophical discussion. We prefer the word place or use of baptism, rather than the term design of baptism. What place does baptism hold in New Testament evangelism? What use did the apostles make of it in carrying out Christ's great command to "make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit"? As to its place—did it come before teaching or preaching, and before faith and repentance? Some so believe and practice, but clearly this is not the New Testament order. "Many of the Corinthians hearing, believed and were baptized" (Acts 18:8). "They, then, that received his word were baptized" (Acts 2:41). "Repent ye and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, unto the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit" (Acts 2:38). "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16:16). "But when they believed Philip preaching good tidings concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women" (Acts 8:12).

The foregoing passages, with many others that might be cited, including the great commission itself, make it absolutely certain that baptism did not in New Testament times precede, but followed, faith in Christ, and was the overt expression of that faith. The same passages make it equally certain that it preceded membership in the church; that it is an initiatory ordinance; and that it stands closely related to "salvation" and "remission of sins," and that it is in some sense precedent thereto. That it is not the procuring or meritorious cause of man's salvation, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ are perfectly agreed. That it possesses no power to change the mind or heart of the sinner, and that without faith or repentance as its precedents, it is without meaning or value, they agree in holding and teaching. They are one in denying that baptism possesses any magical or mysterious power to regenerate a soul or reform a life. And yet, in the light of New Testament teaching and practice no one can deny that baptism holds an important place in New Testament evangelism. Its place is immediately following a penitent faith that is seeking the answer of a good conscience, as the visible expression of the soul's faith in Christ and its purpose to submit to him as Lord and Savior. Its use is to put into concrete form both the faith and penitence of the believer, and to enable him to claim, with assurance, God's promise of forgiveness, and the gift of the Holy Spirit. It is a divine adaptation to the needs of a human soul that is seeking to enter into discipleship to Christ, and to experience the joy of sins forgiven and fellowship with God's people.

In seeking thus to restore Christian baptism to its original place and use, the Disciples of Christ have no doubt laid more emphasis on the ordinance than have the Free Baptists. Probably some among us have laid too much emphasis on it, relatively, at least, in their efforts to counteract an opposite teaching. Perhaps some Free Baptists have not given sufficient emphasis to certain practical phases of this question. If so, a free intermingling and interchange of thought would soon neutralize these errors of excessive and defective emphasis. Indeed, they soon correct themselves among people who are devoted to New Testament ideals and who acknowledge no other rule of faith and practice.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Our readers may remember the old story of the clock that suddenly stopped ticking at the beginning of the year. On being asked why it did so, the clock replied that it had been calculating how often it would have to tick during the year, and it was so overwhelmed with the magnitude of the task that it had decided to stop! On being reminded, however, that it had to tick off only one second at a time, and that if it would look after the seconds the year would take care of itself, it decided to resume operations and its familiar "tick!" "tick!" "tick!" was heard once more. The Easy Chair has been thinking a little over the work of the coming year in the light of former years, and the work does seem to assume large proportions in the aggregate. Think of writing between 500 and 600 columns of printed matter, every word and sentence of which must be carefully thought out, in a single year! Add to that as many hundred letters to all kinds of people, on all kinds of subjects, from questions of higher criticism to the complications of a personal love-affair! And then there are special sermons, addresses and lectures enough to absorb any surplus vitality that may remain. Now if one stops to think of all that in advance, he is liable to have "that tired feeling," which the patent medicine people tell us about, and want to stop as the clock did. But, after all, it is just "one step at a time," one duty at a time, and one day's labor at a time. Sufficient for each day is its own tasks and burdens. It is by meeting each duty bravely as it arises, and performing each task faithfully as it comes to us, and by living, one day at a time, to the best of our ability, that we can accomplish the largest results in a year. It is only on that principle that we can find courage to take up the tasks and face the duties and responsibilities of the New Year.

There is another question that comes to us at this season that troubles us more than the magnitude of the work we do, and that is, Will the work abide? "If any man's work shall abide he shall receive a reward." What appears to be more frail and perishable than the work which one does on the pages of a newspaper? Will it abide? Very little of it, if any, in its outward form, as it goes forth week by week. Only that abides which is taken up into the thought and life of others, furnishing nutriment for living souls, which, in turn, transmit it to others, and so on in a line of endless succession. Whoever touches and molds into a fairer and more useful form any human life, does an immortal work. The monuments we build for ourselves, or that others build for us, in marble and brass, will crumble to dust; but the human life that has been touched and quickened, and fashioned after the divine image, will live and glow with unfading beauty, when suns and stars have exhausted their fires and ceased to shine. It is not, therefore, in the bulk of the work done that we can take any pride. What of its quality? Has it touched and influenced for good any deathless, aspiring soul? To the extent it has accomplished that, and to that extent only, will it abide. If, then, only that part of our work will abide which builds up character—our own or that of others—after the type of Christ's character, what manner of people ought we to be, and what kind of work ought we to seek to accomplish in the world?

This meditation has brought us to a point of view where we are able to judge the value of all our religious work. As this is the Evangelistic Number, it is natural to apply the principle to the work of the evangelist. It was in connection with that work that Paul said: "If any man's work abide, which he hath built thereon, he shall receive a reward." How much of the evangelist's work will abide? Only that which helps to fashion souls in the divine likeness; which brings men out of darkness into light and from the bondage of sin into the liberty of the children of God. It is not the size of his audience, or not even the number of his baptisms, nor of those whose names are enrolled on the church books, that measures the abiding value of the evangelist's work. These are only the outward signs by which men measure the success of the evangelist. The real standard of measurement only the Lord can apply, but we may rest assured that every tear of true penitence, every upward look of faith, every aspiration for a truer and better life, every reaching out of a trembling hand to grasp the offered hand of Christ, every prayer for pardon, and every purpose to follow in the footsteps of Christ, every life made holier and happier, and every home made brighter and sweeter by the presence of Christ, through the labors of the evangelist, will be recorded as very precious in the sight of God, for which he will give due reward. What other class of workers has greater opportunities for doing the work that will endure forever than the evangelists of the cross? They are the heralds of a wonderful Savior, and of a great salvation. They deal with immortal beings, whose hearts can be satisfied only by the message which they bring. Just in proportion as they bring the divine power of the gospel into vital touch with the lives of men will their work be enduring and their reward sure. "Who is sufficient for these things?" Only those whose sufficiency is of God, who walk with Him, and who are filled with His Spirit, and who can love men with something of that divine passion which moved Christ to give His life for the world.

But whether as evangelists, pastors, teachers, singers, elders, deacons, editors, or unofficial members, shall not we all seek this coming year to do the best work possible for us in our several chosen lines of activity, in order that our work may abide? Should we not look out for opportunities for doing the kind of work that will endure? To win a soul to Christ; to educate and train an orphan child; to recover a wayward soul from the path of sin; to give of our means for the spread of the gospel; to endow or assist in endowing a college for training young men for the ministry of the word—all this is work that will endure, and will go on duplicating itself when we have finished our course and have gone to our reward. Better rescue one child from orphanage and ignorance and neglect, better prepare one consecrated heart to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, better light the fires of hope on the hearthstone where dark despair had come; better perform any service that will assuage human sorrow and put into operation some force that will work for human good, than to win millions on the stock market, or enlarge one's fortune by greed and avarice.

"So shall we join the choir invisible Whose music is the gladness of the world."

Notes and Comments.

Dr. Lyman Abbott's address to the Harvard students, which made such a sensation in the newspapers, turns out to be nothing more than his oft-repeated position concerning the immanence of God. It is unfortunate, however, that a man of Dr. Abbott's ability can not so express himself on such occasions as to avoid the impression that was made on newspaper reporters as to his denial of a "first cause." Of course, people who have read after Dr. Abbott, know that he is not an atheist, and yet the newspapers gave wide currency to his alleged denial of a "first cause." If he simply meant to affirm that creation is a continuous process, and that God is still carrying it forward in his universe, that idea might have been conveyed, it seems to us, without giving aid and comfort to unbelievers and materialists.

Of course, no one was shocked or surprised to see Dr. Savage quoted as saying in his Christmas sermon that "all mothers are Madonnas," and that God is in all children just as he was in Jesus of Nazareth. Dr. Savage is a Unitarian, and does not see anything unique in Jesus of Nazareth. Minds of the type of his have no logical difficulty in accounting for the stupendous miracle of Christ's life and character, and of its influence on mankind, on the hypothesis that he was a man like other men. But to most people who see a relation between cause and effect, and who must trace an effect back to a legitimate cause, all this seems exceeding superficial and unsatisfactory.

We are giving large space this week to the subject of evangelism. We are giving our readers the direct testimony of several prominent evangelists as to their methods. A number of pastors present the matter from their point of view. It will be both interesting and instructive to all our readers, and particularly to ministers, to learn how these evangelists win their successes, and upon what methods they rely. It is not difficult, however, to read between the lines the fact that it is not the methods, but the man behind the methods, with his heart aflame with the gospel message, that does the work. Last of all, and perhaps least of all, is the introductory editorial, outlining a discussion on this subject, which will, perhaps, continue through several weeks. It is altogether proper that the subject should have this prominence at the beginning of a year that promises to be so marked by widespread evangelistic efforts in all our churches.

It is a little remarkable that the evangelists who have explained their methods in this number say little or nothing about their use of tracts or other literature in connection with their meetings. We can hardly believe that this means of enlightening public sentiment, and preparing the way for preaching, is entirely neglected, but it is very plain that it does not have the prominence that it ought to have in our evangelistic work. This may result, in part, from the lack of suitable tracts for such use, and we are ready to admit that many of the tracts which have been so used are out of date, but there are tracts among us well adapted for evangelistic purposes, and they should be used most liberally in connection with evangelistic meetings. They will go where no preacher is likely to go, and will be welcomed where no preacher is likely to be invited. Let tract distribution become a characteristic feature of our new evangelism.

It should be borne in mind that the spiritual atmosphere in which converts are born, and in which they spend the first weeks of their religious lives, has much to do in determining their Christian character and usefulness. Their minds and hearts are in a plastic condition at such a time, and if they find the members of the church into which they come, prayerless, unspiritual, unfaithful in their religious duties, how natural it is for them to conclude that church life does not make any high demands upon them, and how easily they conform to the lower standards, though often not without a sense of disappointment at first! How important, then, that our churches should be in such spiritual condition as to be fit training-schools for those who are new-born into the kingdom of God. If it were better for one to have a mill-stone tied about his neck and be cast into the sea, than to be a stumbling-block in the way of Christ's little ones, how careful ought church members to be in their religious lives and deportment in order that their example should be an inspiration, and not a stumbling-block!

With the end of the old year, when the records of its achievements and failures are closed and we have passed to the opportunities of the new, Christian men should renew the vows that bind them in duty to God and man.

Do right, and God's recompense to you will be the power to do more right. Give, and God's reward to you will be the spirit of God himself, whose life is the blessedness of giving. Love, and God will bless you with the capacity of more love, for love is of heaven—love is God within you.—W. F. Robertson.

The Passing of the Giant Gooseberry

By William Durban

The parliamentary recess is on, and members of the Lords and Commons are scattered all over the world till February, when they will troop back and the political fracas will recommence at Westminster. Meantime, a singular new phenomenon is observable. Formerly, and until very recently, everybody was expected to be interested, when there was no parliamentary intelligence, in all sorts of the most trivial topics for which, under other conditions, no space would be afforded. Somebody would send word that the sea-serpent had again been seen at its antics in the Atlantic or the south seas. This would start a lively correspondence. When that was flagging, from Hampshire or Devonshire would come a description of an enormous gooseberry hanging on a shrub in some cottage-garden. The glorious gooseberries instantly found competitors until the novelty was gone, and then most conveniently it was discovered that a pair of pretty robins had made their nest under the bookshelf in the pew of a family attending an old parish church down in Suffolk, the birds flitting in and out through the windows all service-time without any fear. Immediately it would be recorded how chaffinches were incubating in a letter box under a door-knocker, tomtits in another place had constructed their tiny home just inside the window of a summer-house, and many other ornithological eccentricities were poured in upon editors to help them to pad vacant columns.

Do We Believe?

All this kind of thing is over. The great gooseberry era is a thing of the past, and the periodical apparition of the sea-serpent and performances of nestling tomtits have gone out of fashion. It is surely a most favorable sign of the intellectual change of attitude that the columns of the great dailies of London and the provinces now during the recess teem with wonderfully instructive, able, and suggestive letters on momentous topics, especially moral and religious. For several weeks one of the most popular organs in this country, the great Daily Telegraph, has given up the whole of one of its large pages every morning to a symposium on the question, "Do We Believe?" I do not think I have ever read so profoundly interesting a debate. Educated people of all classes, high and low, as well as even uneducated but naturally thoughtful and intelligent men and women also, have sent many thousands of letters, of which every day the editor is inserting a selection. The discussion shows no sign of flagging. Every Monday and Tuesday, in addition to a quota of the correspondence, appear full outlines of some of the hundreds of sermons preached in all parts of England on the previous Sunday in all parts of the land. Men of science, officers in army and navy, captains and sailors of merchant ships, railway men, merchants, shopmen, laborers, ploughmen, teachers, bishops and clergymen of all ranks, high-born ladies, servants, and even washerwomen, have swelled the discussion. Sir Hiram Maxim was moved to contribute a letter. All kinds of criticism, of course, abound. But the striking characteristic of this discussion, started by an Oxford university graduate, is the overwhelming evidence of actual Christian faith in the vast majority of the people of all classes, in spite of the lamentable apparent public indifference. After all, it would seem that under the aspect of religious apathy, which is almost the despair of many a poor earnest and struggling preacher, is a wonderfully deep and strong current of conviction of the immortality of man, the existence of a Supreme Deity, the certainty of a future destiny, and the truth of the Christian religion. It is encouraging in all the vast confusion of spiritual thought and opinion to note that when the test is applied by an opportunity of free and open discussion on common and neutral ground, the expression of the deep popular faith in the infinite, the supernatural, the eternal, and the divine pours forth in an apparently inexhaustible stream.

The Revival of Unrest.

One of the provincial clergy on Sunday last preached one of the many sermons suggested by this great current discussion. Rev. F. Daniels, addressing a large congregation at Wellingborough, said that they were passing through a revival of unrest in religious life. Every part of their faith was being criticised and subjected to the most searching analysis. Instead of condemning the critics they should congratulate themselves on this evidence of the thirst for knowledge, for he was certain that the facts that must come forth would be found to be the spokes of the ladder by which they would climb from earth to heaven.

More From the Greatest Scientist.

I open this morning's papers, and am unspeakably delighted to find in their columns the report of fresh declarations from Sir Oliver Lodge. I thought that I could not, in one of my recent articles, do my American readers a greater service than by giving them the account I then wrote of this master of modern science. I cannot refrain now from referring to the very latest public utterances of this famous principal of the Birmingham Technical University, the very prince of the young generation of our British physical scientists. The following words were spoken last night by Sir Oliver Lodge, in London, when addressing a company of students at Birkbeck college, the great scientific institution where my young friend Landon Moore pursued his studies when in England.

"I am very much impressed with the power and responsibility of the human race, and with the management of this planet, which seems to be given to it, so that things will not improve unless we improve. I believe in divine guidance, but I believe in a Deity acting by agents, and that when he takes all this trouble through millions of years to evolve a human race with conscience and free will and power of guidance he will practically leave it to them to decide what their future is to be. They may go up or down, just as an individual. So much depends on us—whether we undertake these reforms and give our minds and lives to them in some shape or other, each trying to do what he can. We are a part of nature, but we are an efficient and conscious part. The fact that we are alive is a tremendous responsibility—which people do not always recognize—if you believe that life does not cease or become extinct, that the personality once developed is a perennial thing, and although the body may be and will be sloughed off in a few years, the personality and individuality is persistent, so that before every member of the human race is an eternal destiny."

Do We Get Our Deserts?

Parallel with the long symposium in the Daily Telegraph, another is proceeding in the columns of the Daily Chronicle. This is on the problem, "Do we get our Deserts?" and it is exciting wide interest. On this topic also hundreds of sermons are being delivered. The debate hinges on the question of human immortality. Again I observe that such a discussion in a daily secular paper is a marvellous sign of the times. No daily organ would have given an inch to it a few years since. Truly the public mind is being transformed and that in the right direction. All sorts of writers are joining in the discussion. The preponderating sentiment is that there must of necessity be an after life for man, seeing that he does not get here either what he deserves in the way of good or what is due to him for his demerits. The good are not recompensed here and now, nor do the evil doers meet with their retribution for the misery they work on others. It is singular indeed thus to see the secular journals converted into pulpits for preaching instead of making themselves simply political platforms. We have passed into a new era. The best thought is coming to the front, and avenues are opening for the ventilation of sentiment on the most momentous considerations. And such a tendency of the times makes me more of an optimist than ever.

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

"The acceptable year of the Lord" is the year of grace, of Jubilee. Among the Jews every fifty years came this year of festivity. It was the revolution of seven weeks of years at which time slaves were made free, lands reverted to their ancient owners, debtors were released from their obligations. The design was to prevent the too great oppression of the poor, vast accumulations on the part of the rich; to preserve a sort of equality throughout the families of Israel. It was a type of the gospel state. Our Lord proclaims the true year of Jubilee—good news to the poor, healing for the broken-hearted, freedom for the captives—a trumpet blast of God's great Jubilee in a world of suffering, want and sin. Every year may be an acceptable year of the Lord. It is possible to make the year of our Lord 1905 such a year of grace. The acceptable year is that which is pleasing to God. It is God's pleasure every year to make himself known as our Redeemer and friend. We do not have to wait for eternity to find the joy of his right hand, nor for any dreamed-of Golden Age, nor for the peaceful close of life and the heavenly homegoing. God wills that this year this gift may be ours.

The present interests us all. It altogether absorbs thousands and hundreds of thousands. It seems to be at once so transitory and so urgent, so full of claims upon our attention that nothing else can be considered. "Seize the day!" sings the poet. "Seize the pleasures of the present hour. Let the stern problems of the future take care of themselves," says the Epicurean. "Take no thought of the morrow. Forget there is a future. Bury thought; bury conscience in the grave of sense," is Satan's counsel. "Take no thought of the morrow. Trust to the Father's providence. Work to-day," is the teaching of Christ. "In all thy ways acknowledge him and he shall direct thy paths." Providence has a thousand keys to open a thousand doors for the deliverance of God's own. Duties are ours, events belong to God. While Pharoah builds his treasure cities he is working his ruin. While Israel totters on the brink Moses is born. Believers who watch for providences will never lack providences to watch. Our limbs grow weary; God does not. We sleep; God never sleeps. Without God—without everything. With God—enough. And it is God's pleasure to make the New Year an acceptable year. Shall it be?

The acceptable year is the year when God's plan and God's working, and man's faith, and obedient and intelligent co-operation with God are all in harmony. Our part is as clearly defined as God's. "Work out your own salvation, for God worketh in you." Man is the only being in the universe capable of being by choice God's fellow-worker, or of choosing not to work with God. Some one has said the mathematical bee never constructs a false angle, the sagacious dog seldom is out in his calculations. No fish, no reptile fails of its purpose. Man has the power of choice and man has war in his members between appetite and duty. God's part is perfect. No sinner has to cry to God to be reconciled to him. The call from heaven is "Be ye reconciled unto God!" Man must believe, renounce his sins, yield to the authority of the Lord Jesus in his holy institution of baptism. Christ's interpretation of his mission is "I have come that ye may have life." Christ's complaint is "Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life." Work as a partner with God, in co-operation and fellowship with him. Walk along the same path with God in daily and hourly companionship with him. Wait upon the Lord, refer all matters to him, seek to make all your human plans harmonize with his divine plan; will what he wills, love what he loves, hate what he hates; and the year must flow on happily, peacefully, acceptably.

All the discord in any life, all the strife among the nations, all the clash of creeds among the people, come from failure to hearken to God's voice and harmonize with God's plan. Find out what God's plan is and get into harmony with it. The world is to be saved. The will of God is that none should perish, but that all should come into eternal life. Let the church hear him; let the nations listen for his voice; let the home wait upon him for counsel; let the individual make his will supreme; and what a year this will be in the history of every land and of every life!

The acceptable year is the year when we learn that what God offers is unspeakably the happiest thing for us. If I mistake not we are all seeking happiness. And yet happiness does not come by seeking. Men think to get it through wealth, but who finds it there? A gentleman enjoying the hospitality of Rothschild, as he looked at the superb appointments of the mansion said, "You must be a happy man!" "Happy! me happy!—happy!" Let us change the subject." One said to John Jacob Astor, "You must be happy with all your possessions." "Why," said the other, "would you take care of my property for your board and clothes? That's all I get for it." "I suppose," said Johns Hopkins to his gardener, "you think one with money a happy man." The gardener replied he thought wealth brought its cares as well as its advantages. "Yes," said Hopkins, "you have seen a big hog with an ear of corn running to get away with it and a dozen others squealing after him. Well, I am the big hog with the ear and every little pig in Baltimore is trying to get it away from me." Evidently wealth does not necessarily mean happiness. You cannot buy happiness, but you can have it without money and without price if you will.

In Miss Clara Barton's History of the Red Cross in Cuba there is this characteristic story of President Roosevelt. Early in the day there came to our headquarters an officer in khaki uniform showing hard usage, and a bandana handkerchief hanging from his hat to protect him from the fierce rays of the sun. "I have some sick men with my regiment who refuse to leave it. They need such delicacies as you have here, which I am ready to pay for out of my own pocket. Can I buy them of the Red Cross?" "Not for a million dollars," was the answer. "But my men need these things and I think a great deal of my men." "But we can't sell Red Cross supplies." "Then how can I get them? I must have proper food for my sick men." "Just ask for them, Colonel." "Oh, then I do ask for them!" "All right, Colonel, what is your list? When will you send? They will be ready at any time." "Lend me a sack and I will take them right along," said the Rough Rider. The sack was filled with many pounds, and Colonel Roosevelt, the future president, slinging the big sack over his shoulders went striding off and out of sight into the jungle.

The things which make happiness are not to be purchased. The conditions of peace are easy. The secret is within reach of every soul. The power to make every year an acceptable year, every month an acceptable month, every day an acceptable day, every moment an acceptable moment, is ours. What God has for us to-morrow, what God offers us to-day, is beyond all the happiest for us! Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things that God hath prepared for them that love him even here and now.

"My dear man, I am afraid you are dying," said the minister to one on the mysterious border land. "I exhort you to make your peace with God." "Make my peace with God, Sir! Why that was made 1900 years ago when Christ died. Christ is my peace and I am saved." Yes, yes; this is eternal life, to know God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou alone hast the words of eternal life!" Is your heart heavy from any cause? Are you weary? Is life unsatisfactory? Have the years been unacceptable? Be a Christian. Lay hold on eternal life. Have Christ as your portion. Make this the acceptable year of the Lord.

EVANGELISM*

By W. J. Wright

National Secretary of Evangelism

In its largest sense evangelism embraces "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" on behalf of man. It began in eternity with the Ancient of Days. Before God said, "Come, let us make man in our own image," back beyond the singing together of the morning stars, and "ere the Eternal had ordained the day," beyond that beginning in which "God created the heavens and the earth," before the birth of chaos, and far back into eternity to the point where God determined that a race still uncreated should some time be summed up in Jesus Christ, we must go to see begotten our evangelism, which in due season was brought forth to gladden and redeem the world.

In "nobler speech than angels use" came the evangel to that first erring man, informing him that "the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head"; in the seven colors of the rainbow it assured Noah of God's good will toward man, and that I AM would not destroy the race again with water; it sent Abraham forth "not knowing whither he went," longing as he traveled to see the day of Christ, "and he saw it and was glad"; it enabled Moses, through a testing of 80 years, to endure "as seeing the Invisible"; it guided the judges, upheld the righteous kings, made old men see visions and young men dream dreams; it filled the prophets with God-breathed messages and enabled them to see through lift-up gates the King of Glory enter in; it permitted them by faith to see the very face of God and to know they were his own. I believe, then, that evangelism embraces every heartening and helpful syllable which God has ever spoken to man.

And so, whether awestruck shepherds on Judean hills heard heaven's chorus chanting "peace on earth, good will toward man"; or whether in Judean wilderness an uncouth, hair-clad man told wondering multitudes that heaven's kingdom is at hand; or whether in all the towns and cities whither he himself would come, the twelve and seventy sought to fold the lost sheep of Israel by proclaiming the reign of heaven begun on earth; or whether Christ the King invites worn and weary sin-bearers to find in him rest for their souls; or whether heaven's herald of grace to the Gentiles astonished the Athenians at the Areopagus by announcing the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, it was all evangelism; yea, whether in this tongue, yon clime or that age; whether in church or cloister, field or forest, mount, main or mart, palace or purlieu, men have told of the blessedness of knowing God and doing his will, it has all been his evangel, they his evangelists, and the labor his evangelism which now begins to bear fruit in—

> "Love, which is sunlight of peace,
> Age by age to increase,
> Till angers and hatreds are dead,
> And sorrow and death shall cease;
> 'Peace on earth and good will!'
> Souls that are gentle and still,
> Hear the first music of this > Far-off infinite bliss."

Savonarola, then, and Huss, Luther, Knox, Wesley, and a host of whom the world is unworthy, who hazarded and laid down life for the gospel, mighty messengers of better days, were all evangelists.

And those souls of wide, clear vision, who labored and into whose labor we entered, who through prayer and pains made possible this great gathering which seeks to further the things which are simply Christian, who brought about the conditions which have made this great brotherhood which seeks to restore all that was vital, ideal and permanent in the apostolic church, Stone, Campbell, Scott, Smith, Richardson, Goodwin, Shaw, Tiers, Pritchard, Pendleton, Errett, and a host of others, were all evangelists and magnified their office. With these fathers who taught us to speak where the Bible speaks and be silent where it is silent, who discovered that unity of faith is possible only while the Christ is its sole object, and that where this faith obtains there should be liberty, moderation and love in all else—with them evangelism was not a thing apart: it was the very gospel. With them the spirit of Christ was the spirit of evangelism.

In all religions but ours, a straight line connecting the worshiper with his god is all; but in Christianity there must be two lines, one from God to me and one from me to my brother-man; for, "when God comes down to man, man looks around for his neighbor."

> "Heaven's gate is shut on him who comes alone;
> Save thou a soul, and thou shalt save thine own."

Then hunt in the highway! Search in the slum! Drag all the deeps! Sweep! Sweep till you find! Whatsoever the cost, find the coin that was lost! For, as spake Joseph to his brethren, so speaks the Crucified to us: "You cannot see my face except your brother be with you."

What has made our growth the astonishment of our religious neighbors? The evangelistic spirit with which our plea has been pregnant. After our sermons is the inevitable invitation. So complete may be the sermon without it as to make the invitation appear a mere excrescence and as inharmonious as a collection at a funeral service. Yet the invitation is given, and how easy and unanswerable our defense: "An invitation to follow Christ is never irrelevant to the gospel, but is ever in keeping with the great commission." Our real preachers—God be praised for them—are brave enough to sacrifice symmetry of sermons to soul-saving.

I sat with a thousand others before that prince of pulpit orators, Dr. Talmage, listening to a sermon on "Gates of Carbuncle." The preacher was at his best and the Spirit of God strove with men and bowed them with the thought of their defilement. Like beads of dew on sere and dying leaves, sat tears on sin-stained cheeks, while miserable men moaned for deliverance. Had an invitation been given and pressed, who but God knows the number of broken and contrite hearts which would have found the gospel God's power unto salvation, and which would have been laid at the feet of Christ? But no invitation was given—only the announcement: "If any are thinking of uniting with this congregation, I am instructed to have them meet the elders in the vestry room at eight o'clock next Thursday night." No wonder that even with such preaching, but without the wooing invitation to come to Christ, there was not a conversion in that church in two years, and that "Ichabod" was written on the portal.

How much that invitation means in our work! Here are congregations built up and kept strong through responses to the pastor's weekly invitation. Here are throngs responding when our evangelists, Cowden, Coombs, Harlow, Martin, Northcutt, Small, Scoville, Updike and Wilson, urge men to come to Christ. Here are pastor-evangelists, a mighty host, who win their thousands thus, and some of whom, like that model man and preacher, the much beloved and deeply lamented George Darsie, find time annually for a meeting or two away from home. This last class of men last year, under prompting of the American Christian Missionary Society, and with no cost to the society except for postage, held 597 missionary protracted meetings and added 13,458 members to the congregations.

And, brother preacher, we appeal to you, "Go thou and do likewise." Near you are places which need meetings but are unable to pay properly for them. They will gladly eat the crumbs which fall from the table of great and prosperous congregations. Go, help them! Run to them quickly! You will revive their failing faith and drooping courage; you will put flesh and life where you find either putrescence or dry bones, and as parched fields leap into life with the coming of the early and the latter rains, so at your coming with the gospel of the grace of God, will hearts hard and barren, like

Evangelists and Evangelism

By J. M. Rudy

In a former article, I emphasized the fact that evangelists do much to help or hinder our cause in the communities where they labor. This is so well understood that it hardly need be mentioned, and I would not call attention to the subject were it not for bringing out some things that I feel need emphasis. How often an evangelistic meeting results in giving a very distorted idea of our plea as a people. How often it drives others away instead of drawing them to us.

In conversation with Prof. B. A. Hinsdale, of the University of Michigan, a few years before his death, he dwelt with great earnestness upon this subject of evangelists, their work and their methods. I shall never forget how he "warmed up" to his subject. The following are some of his thoughts and statements upon that occasion. In the beginning of this movement, God raised up some great men. They had a mighty fight to make, and they won many signal victories. Their victories were the victories of faith and the power that moved them was conviction. They saw and felt the awful sin of division, as well as the blight of sectarianism. These great convictions were burning flames upon the altar of their hearts, and this fire and zeal and earnestness seemed to sanctify their severest fights. God gave them vision and strength. They felt the awful wrong of rending the seamless garment of our Lord. They grasped the magnitude of the offense against the peace and harmony of Christ's kingdom. They loved peace and longed for it; but saw and felt that it must come only after a great fight of faith. They kept their battles upon a high plane. They were men of high and holy motives. They pleaded with God and with men to heal the wounds of Zion. They made private homes households of faith and spread therein the supper of the Lord. They were men of the deepest piety and had great power in prayer.

But there came after these giants a generation of roving preachers, who possessed all the pugilism without the brains and convictions of the "fathers." These fellows would "spoil" for a fight. Their idea of preaching was "to take sectarian scalps." They regarded the conversion of a Presbyterian as great a victory as the return of a sinful prodigal. They took a few passages of scripture, such as Acts 2:38 and literally made a "fetich" of them. Instead of showing the broad basis and the common ground upon which any people who plead for Christian union must stand, these fellows bristled with peculiarities. Their work was more destructive than constructive. The evangelist that is stereotyped and formal, that goes to the world with a "brief," and mistakes it for a whole Bible, is not following apostolic preaching. The apostles never thought of talking about the "steps" into the kingdom of God. They did not trouble their hearers about the "plan" of salvation. They preached the love of God as expressed in the gift of the Son of God. They never said, "Repent and be baptized," etc., until after convicted sinners cried: "What shall we do?" The apostles did not recite examples of baptism and then urge these as a sufficient reason for others to be baptized. Baptism to them was not a matter to be urged by force of historic illustrations alone. Be baptized not merely because Peter says so, and not because Paul says so, but understand the awful moral necessity which then existed, and does still exist for being baptized. "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." What they did in Jerusalem or Ephesus or Corinth is not of value simply because it is historic fact, but is of the greatest value because of the reasons that existed for doing these things. Man is to-day what he was then, "alienated from the life of God through wicked works." He is sinful and undone before God. His great concern should be not so much what they did on the day of Pentecost, as why they did it; and to feel that exactly the same moral and spiritual necessity for obedience exists to-day in us as existed in them.

Two men made ready to enter their country's service in the civil war. One said to the other, "We had better be baptized, then if we get killed we are all right, but if we don't it won't hurt us." Think of it! "It won't hurt us." The great question is, am I aided in this and through this act of obedience in my experience of new life in Christ? "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that obeyeth not the Son, shall not see life." Think of the man born blind, who received his sight, remarking, "Well, sure enough, that process of putting a little clay on my eyes didn't do me any harm!" How unlike this did the man feel! "One thing I know, whereas I was blind, now I see." Are we helped through the genuineness of our repentance and the strength of our faith in finding our spiritual sight in this solemn act of surrender to the will of Almighty God? If we are not, then we have perverted a divine requirement like one who partakes unworthily of the Lord's supper, and who "eateth and drinketh judgment to himself, not discerning the Lord's body."

I shall never forget this conversation. The professor closed with this sentence, "Unless God breaks the type [of evangelists] we can never reach and move the thoughtful world with our plea." Professor Hinsdale uttered this sentence with the emphasis on the words "type" and "thoughtful." I need not say that I felt that the professor was pessimistic touching the work of our people, and frankly told him so. Nor need I disguise the fact that I felt he was touching matters of supreme interest and importance to us as a people. I asked him why he did not write these things in our papers. He replied, "Our preachers will not hear them. I tell you they have reached a type, and you have to hear one of them preach or pray but a few times before you discover the earmarks." I replied, "They may not hear you, but that is their fault, not yours. The people of Macedonia did not feel their needs, had no appreciation of their condition, but the messenger of God did, and cried, 'Come over into Macedonia and help us.' If you really feel that these things are true, you should proclaim them as the prophet and messenger of God, and trust results to the Spirit." The good man gave a significant nod of his big head, moved slowly to his desk (this conversation took place in his own home in Ann Arbor) picked up a volume of Froude's "Short Studies in Great Subjects," and—collapsed. The curtain was drawn and I was left alone. I have often thought of this conversation and have tried to profit by it.

A. McLean once wrote: "I think altogether too much prominence has been given to the subject of baptism in our preaching. There has been some provocation for the oft-repeated and vulgar criticism: 'They don't preach anything but baptism. All they want is to get you under the water.' I know there has been lately great improvement here, but there is room for more in some quarters. It is worthy of remark that the New Testament nowhere commands us to preach baptism. We are commissioned to preach the gospel, and baptize believers; to disciple all nations, baptizing them. Neither is it recorded that any of the apostles did preach it. It appears that they preached Christ till a terrible conviction of sin compelled their hearers to cry out in a very agony of earnestness, 'What must we do?' Then they were told, 'Be baptized every one of you.'" Again Brother McLean wrote: "Men of little or no spirituality went about like roaring lions, seeking whom they might devour. They challenged the world to debate with them. They could demolish their antagonists as easily as Sampson did the Philistines with the jawbone of an ass. A statement appeared in one of our papers that a church in which there was not a single praying member wanted a debate on baptism. They felt that they could beat the world on the action, subject and design of baptism; but to live in the Spirit and to walk in the Spirit is no part of their plans or aspirations. It need occasion no surprise if it should be said of such people that they do not believe in heart religion."

Of one thing I am convinced, and that is that "our preachers" are as open-minded, as receptive of what they feel is true, and are as susceptible of change for the better, as any class of preachers on earth. I believe Professor Hinsdale was too hard on them. I am just as truly convinced that a most vital need of this hour is a reserve force of evangelists, bigger in thought, deeper in sympathy, clearer in vision, and stronger in spirituality, and mightier in the scriptures, than some of those who are known as evangelists. Whenever God raises up men among us of the spiritual size and the moral force of Moody and Finney, of sainted memory, and of J. Wilbur Chapman and R. A. Torrey and G. Campbell Morgan and L. W. Munhall and others, who to their spiritual power will add the New Testament method of evangelization, this reformation will move forward as never before. "The world is ruled more by the lawgiver than by the law," said Joseph Parker.

I know that I am asking for something very high and great, but I know too that the plea that we make is meat that can produce Cæsars. If we haven't them it is because they haven't fed on the meat of the plea. The plea is undiscovered. In all human history great ideas have produced great men and been produced by them. If our plea is a great plea, and it is; if our plea is a divine plea, and it is; if humanity needs our plea, and who doubts it, then our people have a right to expect, yea must expect, mighty men, moral princes and spiritual kings, "masters of assemblies," to present, proclaim and interpret this plea to the people.

"O where was Roderic then? One blast upon his bugle horn were worth a thousand men."

Constant Evangelism

BY CHAS. S. MEDBURY.

The committee on national evangelism stands for protracted meetings. It is loyal to the field men, the sacrificing heralds of the gospel, who, turning from their homes and all the personal advantages of a settled pastorate, are giving themselves to the winning of men to Christ. Granting that some mistakes have been made and that some congregations depend too much upon the "big meetings" of stated seasons, it yet remains true that we as a people are under lasting obligations to our field men and that a great part of our growth has come through the special efforts in the churches. While all this is true, however, we shall never accomplish all that we should until our pastors in country, village and city pulpits are thrilled with evangelistic zeal and come to have confidence, too, in the possibility of winning people, and that continually, through the regular services of the church. Without in the least questioning the place of protracted efforts, which will have their place in even the most evangelistic church, the fact remains that there is great danger in our coming to depend exclusively upon special efforts. Our churches should be organized on evangelistic lines all through the year. The people should be led to expect confessions in the regular services. They should be surprised when there are not confessions, rather than when there are. Our congregations should not await the coming of a man from the field to lead them in evangelistic effort. They should feel that the pre-eminent work of their own preacher is to call men to Christ, and that the whole year through they are obligated to stand by their preacher in prayer and zealous personal effort.

It is the feeling of the writer of these lines that our preachers themselves need to cultivate the spirit of personal evangelism. Stalker well says: "I believe that almost any preacher, on reviewing a ministry of any considerable duration, would confess that his mistake had been neglect of individuals." Referring later to his own ministry he says that when he was turning from one charge to another the chief impression made upon him as he reviewed his ministry was that this was the point at which he had failed. Concluding, the same eminent man says: "I said to myself that henceforth I would write Individuals on my heart as the watchword of my ministry." If this resolution should be cherished in the heart of all our preachers, multitudes of people would be thrilled by the example and the whole brotherhood would come to be marvelously evangelistic.

Not one word of what is here written must be considered as reflecting upon our glorious past. We have been a great people in evangelism. The danger is, however, that, having won a place in the world, we may come to be more at ease than were the heroic pioneers of our movement, upon whom was the necessity of struggling for their very lives. May God help us to remember that, while much has been done, "there remaineth yet very much land to possess." More men are needed for the field and as they go forth more prayers should attend them. No man should feel as though standing alone. The work is our work. The evangelists are our representatives at the front. And then more meetings with home forces are needed. And still beyond this, we need the constant and untiring, the expectant and conquering, personal evangelism that yields its blessed fruitage each passing day.

The Way to Victory.

It is a fact that the church moved forward with a most triumphant march during the first century. She was opposed by Judaism on the one hand and paganism on the other, persecutions were bitter, but in about sixty-five years after the apostles commenced under their last commission, her power was felt throughout the civilized world and they numbered over six millions of believers.

Why was it that the church made such rapid progress in so short a period?

1. Because the apostles and their associates preached Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God; how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures, and that he was buried and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures.

2. Because every disciple knew what he believed and why he believed it, and became a teacher or preacher (of what he believed) of the gospel. They went everywhere preaching the word.

3. Because they believed that the world was lost, that mankind was in sin and darkness and that Jesus was the only way whereby man could be saved.

4. Because they were a united church and preached the same thing—the gospel of Jesus Christ, one head, one body, one message for a lost world.

If we go forth into the great harvest field, the world, in the same spirit, with the same faith, and with the same message that the apostles and their co-laborers went, our number will be more than doubled by 1909. A million and a quarter Disciples preaching Jesus, the old Jerusalem gospel, will renew the scenes of apostolic days and will record in the acts of the Disciples of the nineteenth century, "and the multitudes believed and obeyed the gospel."

The Literature of Evangelism

By H. O. Breeden

The crying need of the church of Christ is the creation of a literature of evangelism. One who surveys the purely evangelistic literature begotten in our eighty years of history must be chagrined over the paucity of it and sometimes distressed over the character of it. The distinctively evangelistic works put out by our people are so meager as to excite wonder that with them we have accomplished so much. Some of them are so cheap and superficial as to humiliate a thoughtful mind. Our oral evangelism—that is to say our evangelistic preaching—clothed, as it always has been, with a living personality—"a flame of fire"—is a thousandfold stronger than our literature.

Among the helpful evangelistic books may be enumerated the volumes of Sermons by Franklin; The Gospel Restored, by Scott; The Living Pulpit, edited by Moore; The Western Preacher, by Mathes; Sermons by Updike; Talks to Bereans, by Isaac Errett; Seeking the Old Paths, by Moffett; Sermons by Sweeney; Evangelistic Sermons, by Mathews; several biographies; a few score of valuable tracts dealing with elementals, and among the best, "First Principles," by Davis.

But it may be contended, and rightfully, that a distinctive evangelistic literature is not needed where access is so easy and free to the one peerless source of all evangelism—the Four Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles. All evangelism must find here its source and its power, its root and its flower, its center and circumference. Still the stream of evangelism so fresh and invigorating might be broadened and deepened and its current wonderfully accelerated by the creation of a literature of the evangelistic type, such for instance as we are beginning to accumulate of the mission type. A wise evangelistic literature will constitute indestructible fuel for the fire of zeal which must be piled upon the slumbering embers of faith. Literature will beget interest, and interest will beget inspiration, and inspiration will unlock the treasure house of resources. Literature will furnish equipment to evangelism; it will elevate its ideals; it will panoply it for success.

This literature should be of twofold character: 1. Historical. It should be a chronicle of successes and victories. 2. Didactic and dynamic.

It should have at least six clear and definite characteristics:

1. It should be apologetic, presenting the new evidences of Christianity as well as the old.

2. It should be doctrinal; dealing with elementals, stating in the terms and language of to-day the great principles of the plea which have constituted the artillery of the church.

3. It should be logical, scientific, rational, scriptural, showing the harmony of these in the gospel of Jesus.

4. It should be tender and tolerant, simple and sympathetic.

5. It should be hortatory and persuasive, abounding in incident and illustration for effective use with the common people.

6. It should, above all, be vital and spiritual, emphasizing possession rather than profession, character rather than creed.

The literature of other religious bodies is more abundant and far more comprehensive. This is due primarily to two reasons: 1. They are older and have had ample time to create and develop an evangelistic literature. 2. They have given more constant and consistent attention to this great department of religious activity. It may serve to stimulate and aid some Christian workers to catalogue a group of recent valuable books on evangelism by successful and well known evangelists and students of evangelism. As I write, I have on my study table a score of new, fresh, vital works on evangelism, all from the press of the Fleming H. Revell company. Let us open this little red covered volume of 100 pages on "Evangelism," by G. Campbell Morgan. Its five chapters are so many jewels, bright, sparkling gems of the first water. They are: The Evangel, The Church Evangelistic, The Evangelist, The Evangelistic Service and The Present Opportunity. Every page in this volume glows with helpfulness.

I take up another vital book, "Quiet Talks on Power," by S. D. Gordon. Of its eight chapters I hardly know which to characterize as most helpful. No earnest mind can read one of them without an inspiration to be himself a man of power with God. "Thirty-one Revival Sermons," by Lewis Albert Banks, is a repository of fine, new, fresh illustrations and beautiful poems, all redolent with appeals to the sinner to come to Christ. These appeals are based upon a study of Old Testament characters, but nevertheless "feeding" and fine. "Treasury of Illustrations," by Henry Ward Beecher, is a compilation of the best things ever said by the greatest preacher in his long and brilliant ministry. The illustrations under the title, "The Spiritual Life," will yield richly to the treasure house of the evangelist. Two books by R. A. Torrey, one of America's greatest evangelists, now touring England with his far-famed singer, Alexander, will prove themselves of surpassing worth to any preacher or Christian worker. These are: "How to Work for Christ," a compendium of effective methods, and "How to Bring Men to Christ." The volumes of sermons by John McNeil, the great Scotch evangelist, are strong, vigorous presentations of vital spiritual truths. Our people would not accept all the teaching of these volumes, but all would be profited by their supreme emphasis on obedience to Christ. The little volume, "The Spirit-Filled Life," contains a great truth and is tinctured strongly with a theology which our evangelists could not endorse.

In the Red Library series are a number of inexpensive books that every evangelist will find helpful, some of them positively inspirational. Notable among these are: "The Way to God," "Sowing and Reaping," "To the Work" and "Select Sermons," by Moody, and "The Revival of a Dead Church," as also "Up from Sin," by Brougham. Myron W. Haynes' essay on "Modern Evangelism" is well written and positively forceful. There are two books edited by Perren: "Outline Sermons and Plans," and "Revival Sermons and Outlines," by well known evangelists and pastors, which possess a certain value. The Winona publishing house has recently put out a group of a dozen splendid books on evangelism. Chief among these is the volume entitled "Fishing for Men," by J. Wilbur Chapman. "Jimmie Moore, of Bucktown," by Melvin E. Trotter, is a capital story showing the power of the gospel in winning and transforming the sinner. Of the same nature is "From Nowhere to Beulahland," a personal narrative by Elijah P. Brown, founder of the "Ram's Horn." "Greatness," by Henry Ostrom, is a choice little volume. But a truce to the new books for the nonce. None of them nor all of them together are one-half so valuable even as guides, hand books of methods and repertories of information as the "Old Book," and as inspiration to the evangelist and divine help there is but one book.

Our Marching Orders.

By B. F. Manire.

The risen Savior said to his chosen disciples: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations." These words contain the marching orders for every disciple of Christ, wherever he may be. Each one must go in person or in proxy—should go at once and continue to go. Souls are hungering for the Bread of Life, thirsting for the Water of Life; and many are perishing daily for the want thereof. It is ours as Christians to give them the living word of the living God, the life-giving word of the loving Savior. Home missions are the basis of all other missions. As they prosper, all other missions prosper. As they languish, all other missions languish. In this land of ours we can preach the gospel every day to men of every clime.

Evangelism, the Source of Our Growth

By W. E. Harlow

When the disciples of the primitive church were scattered abroad they went everywhere preaching the word, and great multitudes were added to the saved. The decadence of the church began with the decline of evangelism and finally culminated in the great apostasy. If we are to restore the ancient order of things, and unite the warring faction of God's people, we must first restore New Testament evangelism. Let the heralds of the cross go now, as then, preaching the word, and negative criticism will receive its death blow, sectarianism be put to flight and missionary and benevolent interests will have been solved.

The power is in the gospel, which is the Spirit's sword,
The human heart the soil, the world the field,
The conscience is the monitor, which, quickened by the word,
Cries out in mercy, Lord, to thee I yield.

Glorious is the plea and magnificent the history of the people known as peacemakers and called the children of God. With ability and opportunity comes responsibility. We need one hundred more good evangelists. The cause demands them, and we have them, but they will not leave their families and friends, popular pastorates and get-rich-quick schemes to save sinners. Woe is me if I preach not the gospel.

Ninety per cent of our additions are made in special efforts and the church that is not evangelistic, or that caters to the classes instead of the masses, is but a skeleton, ghastly and hideous, and resembles a church of Christ as a mummy resembles a man. What has given us a tenfold greater growth than any church since the apostasy? The divine plea we present to the world. This plea is best presented and has won its greatest victories in evangelism. It is not so much in the regular services as in the revival that we receive seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. What Christian is not strengthened and made more happy by hearing the gospel preached, exhortations made, songs sung, and seeing wanderers returning and sinners converted to God? As in nature so in grace we must have "showers of blessing." "Send them upon us, O Lord." It is the oasis in the desert of sin to many a weary pilgrim; it is the bread of heaven to many a starving soul; it is the light of life to many a beclouded sectarian. It is here we fully appreciate the first petition in the Saviour's prayer, "Thy kingdom come." It is here where parents rejoice over children's second birth and wives shout at the conversion of a husband. It is in the revival where by "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little," many a husband and wife of different faiths have found a basis of union where both may stand without sacrifice of either conscience or principle.

The office of the evangelist is one of the three divinely appointed and ordained of God; and when its force and function in the current reformation is fully appreciated by our missionary societies in convention assembled, the evangelists will be accorded a day on the program instead of an hour. The evangelist is pre-eminently the one who has breathed the spirit of the most important word in the great commission—"Go," and he teaches more nationalities and preaches to more people than any missionary on heathen soil. I would not minimize the importance of foreign missions, but magnify the work in our own land. When we cease our efforts of evangelism God will and ought to remove our candle-stick, and the glory he has given us will fade away like the trailing glory of a fallen star. If all our preachers could catch the evangelistic spirit and let God sweep the strings of their hearts, we could not only double our membership in one year but the cadences would break in sweet meditations on the golden shores of the eternal city.

The evangelist is the recruiting officer in the army of our King. He expects and demands of us that we fill up the ranks and go on to the conquest of the world. This was the desire, hope and expectation of the noble Campbell and his coadjutors. The ashes of the brightest star in the galaxy of our illustrious fathers now molder back to dust hard by the rushing waters of the Buffalo, to him fraught with so many sad and joyous memories. How is it with his brethren? Sleep on, thou great and mighty Chieftain; all, all is well. The old ship of Zion restored by thee has weathered the storm. She has neither been engulfed in the Charybdis of higher criticism nor stranded on the Scylla of ecclesiasticism. She has hung no banner at her masthead save that upon which was emblazoned in letters of living light, "The Lone Star of Bethlehem," and her flag is stained only with the blood of her glorious captain.

As when Napoleon drew his troops up before the Mamelukes under the shadow of the pyramids and said to his soldiers, "From yonder heights forty centuries look down on you," so, Disciples of Christ of this generation, from the pyramid top of opportunity upon which God has set us we look down on forty centuries. We stretch our hands into the future with power to mold the destinies of unborn millions. We of this nation and generation occupy the Gibraltar of the ages.

We are set for Christian union, for a gospel
full and free;
For the faith of Paul and Peter, James and John;
To evangelize the nation with no compromise for me
Till the Lord shall say, "It is enough, well done."

Evangelism: Its Future.*

By W. T. Brooks.

If I could foretell at this hour the future of evangelism I would give a record of the progress of the kingdom of God on earth from this time on to the end. Our chief concern is not, however, what it will be, but what it should be. Some seem to have set for themselves the task of defending evangelism, but it needs no defense. The twelve and the seventy were all evangelists led and trained by the greatest of them all, Jesus, and the record shows that the first church disbanded and the preachers, officers and members all entered the evangelistic field.

"New Evangelism" has of late been discovered in the air by the theological germ hunters, but I find always the same kind of men that Paul describes and if the old evangelism saved in Macedonia it will leap the centuries and save in America. While each age may have some peculiar problems to solve, I do not think with some that preachers must become religious acrobats in order that their audiences may sustain an interest in their messages. Methods of "going" may change ad infinitum, but the message of the "goer" must remain the same so long as the world stands.

The church of the future must complete the evangelization of the earth. This task is not to be so hard as some may imagine. Already the foundation is laid in every important city on the globe; every sea is tossing with its burden of ships laden with missionaries, Bibles and tracts; the sands of every shore are marked with footprints of the priests of the sacred evangel; the telegraph, the telephone, the printing press and all the modern miracles for the transmission of thought are to contribute mightily to the salvation of the race and these all are the fingers of God sweeping the keyboard of the centuries and making the music of human redemption.

* An address before the convention.

With splendid colleges, an unequaled press, unlimited means and perfect organization there is no reason in evidence why our people should not draw the sword of the spirit and lead the hosts of Christian warriors in a mighty forward movement of evangelism. It will come. Those living within the next decennium will read telegrams in our papers reporting round numbers in pentecostal terms. Any revival is too small that leaves one unconverted sinner within the circle of its immediate influence. We are not afraid that the Lord will have too many converts—the danger is all on the other side. The movement with which we stand identified practically began with a revival at old Cane Ridge church and swept north, south, east and west until within three-quarters of a century more than a million and a quarter of souls have been evangelized. Every zone on the map is to-day a land of promise and the Lord invites us to go in and possess in his name. To feed the hungry, clothe the naked and shelter the homeless are but means to an end, and that end is that the Savior may be received. Our missionary and church extension societies have never lost sight of this principle for one moment.

The world has been waiting and ready all these years for the gospel; God has been ready—and has patiently waited; he expects the knowledge of his word to cover the earth as the waters cover the seas. This gospel is dynamite under every throne of tyranny and a sceptre of power in the hand of every just ruler; it is the pathfinder of commerce and the final arbiter of all nations. To believe it with no shadow of doubt, to live it with no sense of shame, and to deliver it without compromise are the purposes for which God called us apart from the world.

Whoever pauses by the way to theorize must know that the waiting time is a hiatus of death to the souls of men; whoever by word or deed discourages those who go forth to reap commits grievous sin.

It seems fit while the nations of the earth have gathered in this western valley to mark their separate achievements, that we should draw aside from these scenes of material splendor, scenes that outrival the riches of Solomon's palaces, and pledge anew our fidelity to God, who holds the destiny of nations in his hand and who will in the future, as in the past, multiply and strengthen those who seek to advance the interests of his eternal kingdom.

Individual Responsibility.

We are talking now of doubling the membership of the churches of Christ by 1909. That means an ingathering of 1,233,984 souls. It seems a tremendous work, and it is, considering its glorious results. But what is it in view of our immense membership? Should it be thought a wonderful thing for four or five Christians to lead a soul to Christ each year for five years? Where are Andrew and Philip? Who is out on the way "that goeth down to Gaza"? But most of all, where are the simple, consecrated Christians with lives so permeated with the spirit of the Master and his passion for souls that they are daily attracting men to their company and adding them to the Lord? We are fully able to gather in the millions, and the millions await our call. But the danger is that the vast membership will forget their personal responsibility—that we lose the man in the mass. Multitudes are waiting now for the "church" to do the work, forgetting that they are the church. We are waiting for an evangelist and a big revival, and the multitudes are dying without Christ at our doors—nay, in the very circle of our associates and our families. Oh, for the sons of Andrew and Philip to go out after Peter and Nathanael and bring them to Jesus! Let the individual members recognize and discharge their personal duties, and the thing is done.

Richmond, Va. P. A. CAVE.

Occupy New Fields.

There are many new fields we should enter this evangelistic season—important towns and cities. There is nothing to gain by delay, but everything to lose. Lots will cost more. The young people of our families will be drawn to their young associates in the denominations. Our members moving in are liable to be tied up in the same way. Every day we gain our prospects are better. So don't lose any time. Such a battle will cost money—big money—and should be backed by the general board, the state board, or some live missionary church. Because the field is difficult and is occupied by other churches is no reason for us to shun it. With proper effort our cause can be planted anywhere. There is nothing as popular as the gospel we preach, and it is bound to win. Christ is with us and as sure as we preach his gospel many of the people will be with us and we will leave a young congregation which will soon grow into a church that will send the truth into other needy places. Forward! On, right on, and into new fields! ROBERT L. MCHATTON.

Incentives to Evangelistic Work.

A study of the life of Jesus reveals that he was filled with an enthusiasm to win men to his kingdom. He inspired his apostles with the same spirit. He gave them the commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." As far as they were able they carried out that commission. Surely we, his disciples, should be filled with the same spirit and be faithful in evangelistic work.

When we consider the crying need of a world dying without Christ we should be moved to do our best. Have we yet learned the value of a human soul? Look upon the Master in the agony of the cross as he bows his head and says, "It is finished," and then know how God values a soul. It is worth dying for. "The fields are white to the harvest." Men and women may be won by the faithful preaching of the word. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation as much to-day as when Paul wrote the letter to the Romans. It is our Master's will that we do this work. We may find in it our greatest joy. Let us do our part and do it well. F. A. BRIGHT,

Evangelist of Western Pennsylvania.

A Living Link Evangelist.

A congregation paying $300 per year into the treasury of the American society can select its own home missionary, for that amount guarantees his support for a year.

The following is from the report of the brother who is kept at work by the gift of J. W. Monroe, of Oklahoma City:

"After the convention I went home for my ponies and gospel wagon and started out. I assisted the brethren at Pleasant Valley, Garfield county, and helped to start their new building. Went next to Timberlake, Woods county, held a 20 days' meeting in which I baptized five persons. These brethren are completing their new building (28x40 feet) and will soon be splendidly located. Christmas I preached at the Griffin Memorial church and baptized two persons in a week's meeting. This makes our church organized and two church buildings erected since Sept. 26. This shows how ripe is this field for the gospel sickle. Men actuated by the spirit of him who said, "Not my will but thine be done," and who say, "Here am I, Lord, send me," can gather a great harvest here for Christ.

"R. S. SMEDLEY,

"Living Link Evangelist."

What a great work this man of God is doing! Who will make it possible to send others to do likewise?

"Feed My Sheep."

By Celesta Ball May.

Redeemed of the Lord, awake!
  The Master is calling for you.
He has need of your time in your golden prime,
  And need of the work you can do.
He has need of your money—yourself;
  And need of the young and the old;
O give God your power—use each sunny hour,
  Let the tale of his love oft be told!

Forget not that all you enjoy
  Is held as a loan from his hands;
The sweet home of love, so like that above,
  And children and houses and lands.
But "lovest thou me more than these?"
  As Christ said to Simon of old;
Then his words you will keep, "Feed my hungry sheep,"
  "And feed, too, the lambs of the fold."

The beautiful light of the dawn,
  And the music of heaven's own song,
That came to your heart, never more to depart,
  O haste! pass the gladness along.
Let this blessed fullness of joy,
  That fills your own lives to the brim,
Go out unto others, for all are your brothers,
  And help you to bring them to him.

You need not look far to find work,
  At your door it is waiting for you;
Illume the dark way for some soul every day,
  By the Christ-life reflected in you.
And not at your own door alone,
  But heed, too, the many who call,
In lands far away, who are dying, each day,
  In darkness, with no hope at all.

How dare we sit idly at ease,
  When there is so much to be done!
So many are falling—so many are calling
  For help as life's journey they run.
They are needy and helpless and sick,
  And soul-sick and tired of sin;
To the world's weary strife bear the true bread of life,
  And gather the wanderers in.

Your treasure, your love, your best self,
  A sacrifice lay at Christ's feet.
Lend a thought and a prayer, and your own culture share
  With the weary ones whom you may meet.
And when, safely housed in the fold,
  The redeemed in love's garments arrayed,
We'll be glad that we gave his message to save,
  And the call to his service obeyed.

Evangelism.

Aaron's rod, bud and blossom forth in beauty which abides. You will be the richer for what you gave; your heart will be filled with joy, and that will prove a full reward.

Finally, I remark that in our ranks to-day is heard no call so loud and clear as that for evangelists—of the proper kind. I believe that no religious body is so blessed as ours with great evangelists. At the same time I wonder if any other body is so afflicted with those whom some of our brethren perhaps justly dubbed "evangelators."

From every quarter comes the loud, persistent call for evangelists, but with the call is a demand for evangelists of clean hands and pure hearts, for Christian men, true shepherds, not wool-clad wolves; men of warm heart, but without the itching palm; educated men, not ignorant enthusiasts; cultured men, not boors—revealing especially the culture which comes of bringing every thought and imagination into captivity for Christ; men with positive convictions and with courage to proclaim them, but who, constrained by the love of Christ, will proclaim them with kindness and courtesy, and in a manner void of offense to all men; men who are built up, but not puffed up, for "Modesty seldom resides in a breast which is not enriched with nobler virtues"; men unspotted by the world, unspoiled by success, unconsumed by conceit, untouched by egotism, unmarked by cant of modern Pharisee; but men who, having beheld and bewailed their own uncleanness, have been touched and cleansed by the live coal from the altar of God; and who, beholding the defilement of their fellows, and hearing the Lord's loud call for workers, have responded, "Here am I, Lord, send me!" and who, going, are doubly conscious of their own imperfections; but who, "with unveiled face beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit." For evangelists of this kind the church calls and the world waits. "God give us men."

With all my heart I thank him for continually calling earnest and ardent souls into this everlasting evangelism, the proclamation of all things hopeful and helpful, soothing and saving:

"The mercy of Heaven descending on earth.
A glorious mission: permitted to bruise
The head of the serpent, and sweetly infuse
Through the sorrow and sin of earth's registered curse,
The blessing which mitigates all; sent to nurse
And to solace, to help and to heal
The sick world that lies round us."

Kings, statesmen and all men, if they be righteous, do their part in the world's evangelization, but he who preaches the gospel and wins souls does the major part.

> "I say the pulpit (in the sober use
> Of its legitimate, peculiar powers)
> Must stand acknowledged while the world shall stand,
> The most important and effectual guard,
> Support and ornament of virtue's cause."

All evangelism is noble and glorious. Yet, "As one star differeth from another star in glory," so do the various portions of evangelism. Soul winning must forever hold the first place. "He that is wise winneth souls"; "And they that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Whatever form of evangelism may at times engage your thought and power, never lose sight of this, the greatest of all, the great work of the church, soul winning. May your ears and soul ring daily with the last words of our greatest evangelist, Knowles Shaw: "Oh, it is a grand thing to rally people to the cross of Christ!"

The New Year.

By Frank Honeywell.

A year gone by, and now another one;
  A leaf that's filled, another clean and new·
A written book, a volume just begun;
  A seed that's sprouting where an old plant grew.

A young maid blooming into womanhood;
  A youth just passing into man's estate;
A new resolve where indecision stood;
  An inspiration for a labor great.

The last year's volume now I hold and turn
  The leaves with doubtful, hesitating hand.
Why do past deeds a mind so much concern
  When nobler ones are ever in demand?

But suddenly I pause with pallid brow,
  Behold a failure, a mistake I made.
My duty — oh, how plain! I see it now;
  Its clearness chills me, and I am afraid.

In horror and with consternation filled,
  I strive that record item to erase,
But find no agency, however skilled,
  Can one small blot upon the page efface.

In sadness that no earth-pow'r can assuage,
  Unto the New Year book I turn and find
These words inscribed upon th' initial page:
  "With vain regrets he racks his troubled mind."

Beneath this record of my brooded woes,
  Is written in this last of histories:
"The least regrets for errors come to those Who study most the future's mysteries."

And now within my heart there seems involved
  The resolution of an all-wise plan:
The future's mysteries are only solved
  By joining of the wills of God and man.

HABIT'S CHAIN

Certain Habits Unconsciously Formed and Hard to Break.

An ingenious philosopher estimates that the amount of will power necessary to break a life-long habit would, if it could be transformed, lift a weight of many tons.

It sometimes requires a higher degree of heroism to break the chains of a pernicious habit than to lead a forlorn hope in a bloody battle. A lady writes from an Indiana town:

"From my earliest childhood I was a lover of coffee. Before I was out of my teens I was a miserable dyspeptic, suffering terribly at times with my stomach.

"I was convinced that it was coffee that was causing the trouble and yet I could not deny myself a cup for breakfast. At the age of 36 I was in very poor health, indeed. My sister told me I was in danger of becoming a coffee drunkard.

"But I never could give up drinking coffee for breakfast, although it kept me constantly ill, until I tried Postum. I learned to make it properly according to directions, and now we can hardly do without Postum for breakfast, and care nothing at all for coffee.

"I am no longer troubled with dyspepsia, do not have spells of suffering with my stomach that used to trouble me so when I drank coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"My Methods of Work" AN EVANGELISTS' SYMPOSIUM

A number of questions were sent to some of our prominent evangelists and we give to our readers the replies. The following were the questions:

1. Will you state briefly your method of work?

2. Have you tried other plans, and will you state your reasons for abandoning these?

3. What value do you place upon music in your work?

4. What is the hardest thing you have to contend with?

5. Do you find that the "love of God" is, or is not, more effective for conversion than the idea of a future punishment?

6. What relative emphasis do you place upon the divine and the human side of salvation?

7. To what extent does the idea of Christian union enter into your evangelistic preaching?

8. In what ways can the pastor best help the evangelist in his work?

By J. V. Updike.

It is with pleasure that I answer some questions I have been asked to answer in the columns of your excellent paper, in regard to my work as an evangelist.

1. I do not have any stereotyped methods. I try to find out the kind of methods that would be best in the church and community I am holding a meeting in. There are no two churches or communities just alike. If I am in a community that is largely Methodistic, I suit my methods to that community. If I am holding a meeting where the members of the church of Christ are conservative and slow, I try to suit myself to them as much as I can, that no offense may be given. Hence it depends entirely on the community I am laboring in. I try to become all things to all men so that I gain some.

2. I have not abandoned any plan, but work every plan I can think of to save souls.

3. I think that music is next to the gospel. The right kind of evangelistic singing is very important, but there had better be no singing at all than to have the wrong kind of singing, and the kind of songs that do not move the people to action. There are very few good evangelistic singers. If evangelistic singers would be willing to take training that I can give them, and sing as I direct, there would be no trouble in the matter, but I have found nine out of ten, that I have tried, unwilling to sing as the evangelist directs, and hence many good meetings have been spoiled because of self-willed and contrary leaders of song in the meeting. The invitation song is the important song for results. If the evangelist speaks fast and loud, the invitation song should be fast and loud. If the evangelist is slow of speech and low in tone of voice, the invitation song should be slow and soft. When the evangelist says, "While we rise and sing," the singer should start in at once without waiting for the evangelist to stop speaking. The evangelistic singer should have a strong voice, be alive to the work and sing for the salvation of the people. An unconverted singer is of very little use as a leader. He cannot sing to move souls in a revival. The singer must sing for Christ and sing with all his might. There is nothing that tries an evangelist more than to see his work all destroyed by a mistake in his song leader. Prof. J. E. Hawes, H. A. Easton, Geo. A. Webb and wife, are the best I have ever had as song leaders.

4. A poor, slow, lazy pastor who is jealous of the evangelist, and an indifferent church, that fails to carry out my plans of work. There can be no failure where there is a live, influential pastor, and a church that will carry out my plans of work.

5. When I get into a community where Universalism is strong, I preach hell, because they have worn out the subject of the love of God, and the people settle down in indifference. If I go where "Calvinism" is in the lead, I preach as strong as I can against it all, and show the truth on that subject. It depends entirely upon the kind of people I am preaching to about what I preach. An evangelist must understand human nature, and use good common sense.

6. I spend about two weeks, usually, in urging the church to duty, and preaching upon what God has done to save mankind, and the rest of the time I spend in showing the human side and trying to impress people with their personal responsibility to God.

(1) Try to get the people to love God, and then make every possible effort to get them to obey God.

(2) Keep before the people the fearful sins of the day, and urge purity of life upon all.

7. I am a crank on Christian union. I preach it and re-preach it, everywhere I preach. It is, of all subjects to-day, the important subject. I have never preached upon that subject in thirty years, where I thought the people were indifferent to it. I love that part of our plea more than any other. It is the subject of all for our evangelists. I preach it, pray for it, talk it, and sing it all I can, and urge people to read the best literature they can get upon that subject. Sometimes, instead of praying myself, I have the people stand while I read the 17th of John, the Lord's prayer. I then earnestly emphasize that part of the prayer where Christ prays that we all might be one.

8. (1) I have the pastor look after the advertising.

(2) I have him take all of the confessions.

(3) I expect him to do all of the baptizing, and to have everything to say about receiving persons into the fellowship of the church of which he is the pastor, and do everything I can to strengthen him with his people, and the community where he labors. I stand by him with all my might, because I know that some poor preachers are abused and need the sympathy of their preaching brothers. I love my brethren in the ministry, if they are good, pure men. God bless our good, faithful pastors. Many of them to-day are not getting the credit due to them for success in bringing souls into the kingdom. We have some of the grandest men on this earth to-day working as pastors, who are hardly being noticed. I hope to meet some with whom I have labored, "over there," and tell them before my dear Master how I love them for their works' sake. It is hard to have a good meeting without a good pastor to help:

(a) The good pastor prays for the evangelist and for the meeting.

(b) He encourages the evangelist when he is discouraged.

(c) He steps forward and defends the evangelist when misrepresented.

(d) He goes out and talks to the people, with his Bible, trying to help them in a personal way. I wish I dare tell how some preachers, or pastors, have helped me, but I am not to write upon that subject. I will never forget them.

These questions have been answered hastily. I want to wish all my brethren in the ministry, and all the dear readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a happy new year, a long and useful life and a home in heaven at last.

By T. J. Legg.

1. My plan of work is to preach "Jesus Christ, the seed of David, risen from the dead." In the places to which as a missionary evangelist I am usually sent it requires time to build up an audience, and more time to teach it; after that the harvest. Of course we organize the musical forces, get the church to engage in personal work, and then continue till we win—no matter about the length of time.

2. I have tried the short meeting plan; but little permanent good comes of such a meeting. The man must be won on evidence and conviction to stand and be worth anything to the church. Emotional church joining is a farce and caricature on the dignity of genuine revival work.

3. The gospel well sung is a very effective adjunct in revival work, especially when directed by consecrated Christian leaders who know how to comport themselves in a manner consistent with their calling. It is the gospel that saves, whether sung or preached, and the demeanor of the singer must be as dignified as that of the preaching evangelist.

4. Indifference on the part of church members. The preaching and singing well done, any church will have as good a revival as it wants and deserves. If the membership really has a soul-hunger, it will have a satisfactory revival. Another great hindrance is the "floaters," the "church tramps," the non-affiliates. They are stumbling-blocks to sinners. The first thing in a meeting is to round them up, or get them to take a car, outward bound, and stay away till the meeting is over.

5. Whoever preaches Jesus Christ must preach the love of God who sent him, as "the unspeakable gift." Whoever preaches Christ must preach all that he was, all that he commanded, all that he promised, and all that he threatened. Both the "love of God" and the "wrath of God" must be preached. Both are necessary, both effective. One essential is not more necessary than another essential. The same God is responsible for 1 Cor., 13th chapter, and the 16th chapter of Luke.

6. God does all that man cannot do, for his salvation; man must do all that is possible for him to do, or else God does not save him. God specifies what man must do, so that he may make no mistake; and also that he may forever know "by a thus saith the Lord"—without any grip, sign, touch or token, that he is a saved man, and then God tells him in 2 Peter 1:5-11 how to remain saved.

7. The church, singular number. (1) The foundation, Jesus Christ. (2) Organization, Christians, elders, deacons. (3) Government, the word of God only. (4) Name, (a) of church, (b) of members. (5) Laws of induction to membership. (6) Ordinances, (a) baptism, (b) Lord's supper. (7) Christian unity, in Jesus Christ, Christianity instead of churchianity. The plea from one view point or another enters into every sermon.

8. By preparing the field; by giving the evangelist an insight to all the difficulties; by remaining cheerful under discouragements; by introducing the evangelist, and calling with him in the homes of people to be reached; by personal exhortation; and by looking after the small details that might escape the eye of any except a consecrated pastor and servant of God.

Indianapolis, Indiana.

By F. A. Bright.

Evangelist of Western Pennsylvania.

1. My method of work is: (1) To have the church prepared as well as possible for the work of the meeting before I reach the field. (2) Preach the gospel, plainly, earnestly, lovingly. (3) Seek to do and have done personal work, privately, tactfully, persistently. (4) Invite people to come forward and confess their faith in Christ. (5) Exhort them to do so, kindly and tenderly.

2. I have tried card signing, arising to the feet, holding up of hand, after meetings, etc., but I very seldom try them now, for the reason that I have never found them to aid in the work.

3. The value of music can scarcely be overestimated. My regret is that I can not have a good leader of song with me all the time. In my work as a missionary evangelist the expense of a singer seems too great to be borne by the weaker churches.

4. The hardest thing in my work is the indifference and carelessness of those out of Christ. With the prophet of old I often say, "This people doth not consider."

5. I use both the "love of God" and the "judgment of God" as motives to repentance. It is hard to tell which is the more effective. Some are moved by one, some by the other.

6. As to the divine and human side of salvation. I try to place emphasis on each in its place; the things that God has done for man and what man must do for himself.

7. I constantly recognize that the plea for Christian unity is a part of the evangelistic work of our people.

8. The pastor may help the evangelist: (1) By having the church ready as far as possible for the meeting. (2) By knowing those in the community who may be won to Christ and doing personal work among them. (3) By co-operating in every way with the evangelist in the work of the meeting.

317 Miller St., Knoxville, Pittsburg, Pa.

By W. E. Harlow.

1. My method of work is simply to get, as far as possible, the church ready and an audience at the first service. We then preach the first week to the church and along practical lines and thus get a harmony and sympathy essential to success. We gradually lead up to the doctrine and present some view of it nightly, depending entirely upon the power of the gospel to do the work when believed.

2. I used to depend on getting people to cry by relating deathbed scenes years ago, and could get them forward by that method, but have abandoned that entirely as there is no power on earth to keep such converts in that mood, hence these soon return to the world.

3. I lay some stress on music, in that I keep the best soloist and leader that is possible, but music per se never made a meeting. A soloist will help to draw, and good, stirring congregational and chorus singing will prepare the way for the Truth, which alone will do the work.

4. The hardest thing I find to contend with is: (1) To get the membership to realize the individual responsibility of personal work and united co-operation. Indifference, lack of faith and enthusiasm. (2) To get the pastor to understand the importance of a thorough preparation as I direct. I have had only four or five to do so, and they have been our greatest meetings.

5. While I try continually to hold the love of God before the people, I do not neglect the idea of future punishment, and I give it as my candid judgment that the majority of people are primarily moved to action more from fear of punishment than from the love of God. Reaping as we sow, is one of my strongest points.

6. I lay special emphasis upon the human side of salvation, showing continually that, when the truth is plainly presented, God has done all in his power to save men. My sermons are full of the thought of where God's responsibility ends and man's begins.

7. Christian union has such a prominent place—also the sin of division—in my preaching that about one-third of our additions are from the sects, and those from the world are seldom, if ever, found going after "strange gods" or leaving still waters and green pastures for the carnal and unsatisfying husks of humanisms.

8. The pastor can best help by getting ready according to the instruction of the evangelist. He should co-operate in every way possible with the evangelist. A successful meeting means work for the pastor, and it is hard, too, for the evangelist to lead a church in active work, or convert sinners over a lazy pastor.

Springfield, Mo.

By B. B. Sanders.

I will try to cover the ground, though I do not answer your questions seriatim. In conducting successful protracted meetings very few general rules can be laid down to which there are not many exceptions. Time, place and circumstances must largely suggest the methods of work. But to write first of

GENERAL RULES.

1. The meeting should be well advertised, using the best mediums at the command of the church, and keep advertising until the whole city, town or community will know when and where the meeting will commence and who will do the preaching and who will lead the singing. In advertising speak of the preacher and the singer in that manner that will inspire confidence on the part of the people in the ability of the preacher and the leader of the song service to conduct a successful revival.

2. Let the pastor of the church commence in ample time to prepare the members for active work during the meeting and have them so thoroughly drilled that there will be no criticising of the evangelist as to his methods or character of sermons, but all heartily co-operate with him in every work for the success of the meeting.

3. Keep advertising all through the meeting, even if necessary to employ some competent person to do this work.

4. Enlist as many good singers to aid the leader of song as may be necessary to make a strong chorus, that the house or tabernacle may be filled with sweet music.

MY SPECIAL METHODS.

1. In the introductory services get as many as possible to take part in short prayers, quotations of scripture and in giving God thanks for the blessings received during the meeting. Put all the spirituality possible into the introductory service of half an hour and thus prepare the audience for the sermon.

2. Preach sermons for the first week or ten days upon practical Christianity showing the necessity of a godly life, and that salvation depends upon what man does, not only in his primary obedience to the gospel but upon his faithful obedience until the end. This often convinces people that we believe in something more than confession of our faith and being baptized, and the better prepares them for plain teaching upon primary obedience.

3. In preaching upon subjects in which we differ from our religious neighbors, kindness and respect for them will do more to win them from their errors than sarcasm and abuse, for I find that the hardest thing with which we have to contend is the prejudice in the hearts of the people created by misrepresentations of our teaching. The Lord opens the hearts of the people by kindness in speech and act of his servants. In this way many can be reached and caused to see the plain simple truth of the gospel who will never be reached by abuse of their religious dogmas or doctrines. I have ever made it a rule in preaching to agree with our religious neighbors in all the truth that they preach and differ from them very plainly and very kindly upon what I believe to be their errors. The love of God constrains men to serve

THOUSANDS HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE AND NEVER SUSPECT IT.

MRS. E. AUSTIN.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 9th, 1902.

A little over a year ago I was taken with severe pains in my kidneys and bladder. They continued to give me trouble for over two months and I suffered untold misery. I became weak, emaciated and very much run down. I had great difficulty in retaining my urine, and was obliged to pass water very often night and day. After I had used a sample bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, which you so kindly sent me on my request, I experienced great relief. I immediately bought of my druggist two large bottles and continued taking it regularly. I am pleased to say that Swamp-Root cured me entirely. I can now stand on my feet all day without having any bad symptoms whatever. You are at liberty to use this testimonial letter if you wish

Gratefully yours,

Mrs. E. Austin.

19 Nassau St.

The mild and prompt effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Recommended and taken by physicians, used in hospitals and endorsed by people of prominence everywhere. To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free, by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

him, and not so much the fear of hell. In fact, our preaching should be more to get the hell out of men, than to keep men out of hell. To do this, men must be persuaded to do what God would have them do, and therefore the emphasis in preaching should be on the human side and not on the divine side of man's redemption. All things are ready on the divine side, man is to accept and be saved. In preaching man's obedience to God, and to him alone, in all things, discarding dogma and creed other than a personal creed—Jesus the Christ—emphasis is given to the necessity of Christian union and made practicable in that fact.

4. The pastor can render the most efficient service to the evangelist by being prompt at all the services and making the people feel that a warm and hearty welcome is extended them, and by doing a great deal of visiting among the people and talking to them about becoming Christians, and by getting his members to do likewise.

5. Sometimes, though not always necessary, it is best for the interest of the meeting to so enlist the members that, while the invitation song is being sung, they will go to their friends, kinsmen and acquaintances and ask them to go forward and make the confession, and if necessary go with them to the evangelist or pastor. I have known this to work well and lead many to Christ. In fact, I have never known it to fail of good results. An interested, praying, working membership—not afraid of being called like somebody else—will, with any efficient evangelist, bring fine results. Get people filled with a burning desire to go to heaven and they will listen attentively to the message telling them how to go.

By James Small.

In answer to your practical and very timely questions on progressive evangelism, I may say at the outset that you have struck me at a very weak place. I really do not know how to hold a great meeting. Though I have been in the field several years now, I confess I am willing to learn from the weakest but faithful evangelists among us. As to my methods:

I have faith in the old gospel to win. I believe that goodness is stronger than wickedness, righteousness more attractive than unrighteousness, and that God is stronger than Satan. I learned this lesson from my Lord. He had this faith; for without army or ammunition he always talked of the good day coming when he and his disciples would take this world for God and righteousness. Nothing so paralyzes our efforts, I think, as the conviction that somehow or other we will be beaten, that darkness will triumph over light and that sin and Satan will triumph over God and righteousness. I believe this gospel is more than machinery and men more than methods. In a word, I believe that this gospel is more than everything else combined and with it I go in to win.

But now to your questions:

1. Before going to the field of labor I send each member of the congregation a letter, urging them to attend the first meeting and stating some of our desires.

I ask them to sign an enclosed card which is a soul winner's pledge. This promises their active co-operation. I write the pastor to select or have selected the usual committees on finance, advertising, music, baptism, ushers, (the men who usher ought to be the best men in the church) and a committee on entertainment. This committee sees that the evangelist and pastor are lunched (not dined) every day during the meeting (very often in the home of an unconverted husband). In the meeting, where it is possible, I select committees of five with a chairman to report names of friends who attend the meetings, and visit those whom the pastor has seen at the services or whose names he may have in his note book.

One of the first requests I make of a pastor is to secure 200 names of those who are not members but who attend his weekly ministrations or who are known to be favorable to the Christian church.

In the visits the pastor and I make together during the meeting (usually from four to six hours a day) I use the following cards with the very best effect. One you will see is for the unconverted, and the others for church members who have moved into the city, and have not placed their membership with the local church.

My Decision for Christ.

Believing with my whole heart that God so loved the world as to send His Son to die for me, I this day accept Him as my Personal Savior, and will at the first opportunity confess Him before men and be baptized into His name and endeavor afterwards to live for Him.

Signed........ ....

Of course we do not ask people to sign this card until we have taught them thoroughly on what the step means; nor until a deep desire is in their hearts to be a Christian. Even then, the atmosphere must be favorable and the person be seen to be ready.

Another card I have used to good effect on those who are hesitating in placing their membership. It is signed usually at home, but sometimes before the beginning of the service. It is read by the pastor from the pulpit and often the person or persons are received the same night. The pastors are loud in their praise of it, and use it when the meetings are closed.

Many, I find, will commit themselves in the home in this way when they will not do so first of all in a public way, and when thus committed it is easier for them to come forward in public. In my humble judgment this card is one solution of how to reach those who have come to the city. It is well known that Christians moving into the city are in great danger of neglecting their religious duties.

The attractions in the city these days and the very constitution of a city make it difficult for many to live in it and be the consecrated Christians they once were.

The suggestion came to me first of all from O. H. Phillips, of Braddock, Pa., but the wording is my own. Let everyone use it who can.

Your other questions must be answered very briefly.

2. As I have always had but a few plans I have not had to abandon any. The only thing that I have absolutely abandoned is berating the denominations. It would greatly pain me to hear any of our evangelists "skin the sects" now. Love alone converts. I am emphasizing more than ever lately cottage prayer-meetings during the campaign. Easily four or five can be arranged for during the day, and the evangelist and pastor can attend all of them for a few minutes. Sometimes in these meetings the pastor takes the confession of some timid but earnest soul, and baptizes them the next afternoon.

3. Everything might be too strong a word to use, but I would not want to use a weaker one. It is a day fraught with folly when a church decides to economize on finances in regard to a leader of song; and most places need a leader, not a soloist.

I long for the day to come when some "princess" of song shall train our singers on their knees so that they may baptize their songs with a prayer and travail in soul while they sing to win dying men and women to Jesus Christ. There is room for invention here and a school for "singing evangelists," I think, is one of the needs of the day.

4. The indifference, but especially the criticisms of unconverted church members.

5. The love of God, by long odds. Love moves my own heart, and if I know myself, I am likely to know others. It is better, of course, to serve God from fear than not to serve him at all, but those who are converted to him through love, make the best Christians. Hawthorne has said that Jonathan Edwards made him fear and tremble, but that Jesus made him hope and love. This is the experience of most men. Love converts, I repeat, not law.

6. I am placing more emphasis on the divine side than I have heretofore done, as a motive to repentance.

7. I devote two sermons in each meeting to it, and talk it every hour in the day.

8. Sincere sympathy, visiting the unconverted with the evangelist and emphasizing the next evening's theme. Nothing will or ever can take the place of hard work upon the part of the evangelist and the pastor. No one can do their work.

You have my best wishes for your continued prosperity, and my joy and applause while you push the evangelistic work.

STRANGER THAN FICTION.

A Remedy Which Has Revolutionized the Treatment of Stomach Troubles.

The remedy is not heralded as a wonderful discovery nor yet a secret patent medicine, neither is it claimed to cure anything except dyspepsia, indigestion and stomach troubles with which nine out of ten suffer.

The remedy is in the form of pleasant tasting tablets or lozenges, containing vegetable and fruit essences, pure aseptic pepsin (government test), golden seal and diastase. The tablets are sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Many interesting experiments to test the digestive power of Stuart's Tablets show that one grain of the active principle contained in them is sufficient to thoroughly digest 3,000 grains of raw meat, eggs and other wholesome food.

Stuart's Tablets do not act upon the bowels like after dinner pills and cheap cathartics, which simply irritate and inflame the intestines without having any effect whatever in digesting food or curing indigestion.

If the stomach can be rested and assisted in the work of digestion it will very soon recover its normal vigor, as no organ is so much abused and overworked as the stomach.

This is the secret, if there is any secret, of the remarkable success of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, a remedy practically unknown a few years ago and now the most widely known of any treatment for stomach weakness.

This success has been secured entirely upon its merits as a digestive pure and simple, because there can be no stomach trouble if the food is promptly digested.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets act entirely on the food eaten, digesting it completely, so that it can be assimilated into blood, nerve and tissue. They cure dyspepsia, water brash, sour stomach, gas and bloating after meals, because they furnish the digestive power which weak stomachs lack and unless that lack is supplied, it is useless to attempt to cure by the use of "tonics," "pills" and cathartics, which have absolutely no digestive power.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found at all drug stores, and the regular use of one or two of them after meals will demonstrate their merit better than any other argument.

A Pastors' Symposium

We publish herewith replies received from some of our pastors who have had wide experience with special meetings, to the following questions:

1. Has there been any modification of our evangelism, and if so, what?

2. Have you any criticisms or suggestions to make about methods?

3. Is there a "type" of evangelists?

4. Can you reach any conclusion as to the number of converts that stand fast?

5. Do you find any noteworthy difference in the converts made during the evangelistic meetings and those that come through the regular service?

6. To what extent is a special meeting helpful, or otherwise, to the church members themselves?

By I. J. Spencer.

1. In the preaching there has been a change for the better. There is now a clearer conception of fundamentals, and a keener discrimination between essentials and incidentals. There is less tendency to expose the errors of others, and a strong disposition prevails to preach the simple gospel earnestly, clearly and in love, bringing the pure light of truth to bear upon the sinner's danger, privilege and duty so that he may see his own mistakes and sins and forsake them. This kind of preaching is more illuminating and more winning as well as more lasting in its results.

2. Speaking generally, all methods calculated to bring men to hear the simple, powerful gospel, preached intelligently and in humility, and to receive it in a reverential and obedient attitude, are to be commended. But those which smack of the glorious power, the awful popularity and stupendous successes of the most honorable evangelist, are to be condemned and rejected. Vanity, reputation and revenue for the evangelist are too often proclaimed instead of Christ, and too often breathe through the newspaper reports of "great" meetings. The commercial and selfish spirit in an evangelist will do more harm in a meeting than a great ingathering will do good. Methods that make much of numbers added, and little of sound teaching and a proper spirit on the part of evangelists, are unworthy of the kingdom of God.

3. Yes, there are at least two types. One type exploits the congregation for reputation and coin. Another, content to receive a reasonable remuneration, cares not for reputation gained by large numbers added, but loves God and men; and believes in the gospel as God's power to win and save the people and preaches humbly, lovingly and loyally, gathering in those who accept it, and leaving the church in spiritual vigor to reap yet more and more after the meeting is over.

4. I have observed that those meetings in which the truest and most faithful teaching prevailed, succeeded by the best shepherding, have produced the best results in the steadfastness of converts. Again I may say that if persons join the church under the magnetism or hypnotism of some practiced professional evangelist rather than under the conviction of sin and the winning power of the gospel, they will tend to backslide after the evangelist is gone.

5. Not if the evangelistic meetings be of a scriptural, Christlike type, and if the regular services be of the same character.

6. It is helpful if it increase their knowledge of Christ and his word, and quicken their desire for more. It is helpful if it make them to realize more fully the power of the gospel to save sinners. It is helpful if it make them to see more clearly their duty to save others and make them more willing to sacrifice and serve in order to win others to Christ.

Lexington, Ky.

By W. F. Turner.

1. Yes, in three ways. There has been a weakening in some quarters from the former bold and enthusiastic way of presenting our plea for unity on the Bible alone, arising from a mistaken notion of getting the good will of our religious neighbors; second, there has arisen a gentler spirit in speaking the truth which has made that truth all the more effective; and third, there is now accompanying evangelistic effort the work of teaching new converts how to grow in grace, in harmony with the commission.

2. Any method that smacks of the merely sensational, should not be tolerated. It is the business of the church to have the community ready for the evangelist, so that there will be interest and audiences from the first service. This done, the evangelist will need only to preach the simple gospel in a plain, enthusiastic and dignified way to have results. The preacher and congregation must have the respect of the people first of all. Then announcement and organization such as any good evangelist can give, carried forward for a year before the evangelist is on the ground, will mean success.

3. There are some whose strength is in their power to present what we call "doctrine." There are others whose power is largely in exhortation. Still others are strong in organizing the forces and getting the local forces to work. Some are "didactic" evangelists, teaching and laying the foundation for future harvests. In these senses there are "types." We have also heard of "yellow evangelism."

4. So far as my observation goes, I would say from 60 to 90 per cent hold fast. This is a mere guess. Out of the several hundreds received here in the last year, not more than a dozen have turned their backs on the church.

5. It is my experience that very few people in middle or advanced life make confession at regular services. They do come in good numbers in protracted meetings. Those who come in meetings seem to have more enthusiasm as a rule, I believe.

6. A special meeting puts new life into a church. This comes from continuous preaching and continuous effort to reach the lost. It gets the attention of a community as nothing else will. A new personality in the pulpit is attractive, and reaches many new ones who will be permanently enlisted. I am a firm advocate of the special meeting at the proper time, with the proper preparation and conducted in the proper way.

1. Thus far none.

2. Have you ever found ideal children? If so, they are old maid's children. Dream children are perfect, creatures of flesh and blood are imperfect. So as to methods. But in the main I find them unobjectionable.

3. Perhaps so.

4. It all depends on the evangelist, the church and the pastor. Percentages will therefore widely vary.

5. In my own experience I find a much larger number of declensions among the former. This, though, may be exceptional.

6. Just the difference between life and death. A church that makes no "special" effort to save men will die. I do not know an exception. I cannot believe that there are any exceptions. "Evangelistic work" as ordinarily understood is "home missionary" work and the non-missionary church is ready for the undertaker.

Kansas City, Mo.

By M. M. Davis.

1. "Our evangelism" is less belligerent than it once was.

2. As to "methods," I would suggest that we aim more for quality than for quantity; that we weigh our converts rather than count them. This would demand the elimination of the sensational and the personal as far as possible. I would also suggest that we use a better class of music, and less of the light, jingling kind.

3. Our evangelists, as a rule, are a distinct "type" as compared with evangelists in general.

4. I cannot tell definitely as to the number of "converts that stand fast," but would say that where the pastor and church do their duty well, perhaps it is two-thirds.

5. The per cent is distinctly larger where they come in "through the regular service."

6. It is "helpful" to the church to the extent that it puts to work its membership, and hurtful to the extent that it makes them depend on the evangelist for a successful meeting.

The Waning Year.

Good-night, O year, most sorrowful
Seen from the earth side, ache and loss
And clouded dawns, and dear ones gone,
Have deeply stamped thee with the cross.
Good-night, O sorrowful, sweet year,
Sweet with the promise of the day,
Where heaven's own morning shall appear
And all the shadows flee away.

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

Our readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved a certain cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific, just as quinine is in malaria.

Among the many testimonials received is one from the Rev. W. B. Moore, D. D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Rheumatism and Kidney and Bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood.

So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free sample of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes, Pain in Back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis entirely free. Address Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 404 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Our Budget

—We begin the New Year with an evangelistic number.

—This number of the paper is in itself a splendid evangelistic document, and should be extensively circulated among all the churches.

—We are printing a large edition, but those who wish extra copies should apply early. Why not see that each member in your church has a copy?

—We ask our preachers everywhere to call attention from their pulpits to this number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and to announce the subscription rates of the paper.

—Will not our friends everywhere bestir themselves to secure at least one additional subscriber for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST? The principle of "doubling up" should be applied to our religious newspapers as well as to our membership. There is quite as much need of doubling the zeal and intelligence of our members as of doubling their numbers.

—A Methodist bishop congratulated a Presbyterian evangelist recently on the fact that the Presbyterian church is now leading the forces of American Christianity in evangelistic work. Let the end of the year tell the story of what religious body is leading in this work of evangelization. If we adopt the watchword suggested by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, "Each One Win One," and live up to it, we shall easily lead all others in this work.

—We have been compelled to add four extra pages to our usual size this week in order to accommodate the demands upon our space, and still find it necessary to omit several articles intended for this issue.

—Prof. C. L. Loos, of Lexington, Ky., passed his 81st birthday on December 22, and writes that his birthday and Christmas brought him many loving remembrances from the members of his own household, and from many friends. Such a man never grows old.

—L. A. Winn may locate at Centerville, Ia.

—Poplar Bluff, Mo., has not found a pastor yet.

—W. F. Kohl has closed his work at Rutland, Ill.

—E. S. Lewis goes to Eau Claire, Mich., for full time.

—John Mullen has just baptized a man in his 94th year.

—E. W. Thornton has taken up work at Waynesburg, Pa.

—H. L. Denton has been ordained to the ministry by R. F. Whiston.

—J. Windbigler was kindly remembered by his friends at Girard, Ill., the other day.

—W. H. Newlin will leave Arcadia, Ind., but has not yet settled on his future pastorate.

—Roy L. Brown, who has been for several years at Liberty, Ia., has closed his work there.

—P. F. King has closed his pastorate at Carlisle, Ky., where he has been abundantly successful.

—F. M. McHale has left Herington, Kan., for Hoisington. A successor has already been arranged for.

—T. C. Jackson, of Atlanta, Ind., is succeeded by M. L. Pierce, of Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

—C. E. Smootz will divide his time between Cushing and Stroud, Okla., his address being at the former place.

—Geo. W. Watkins has closed a pleasant three years' work with the church at Hillsboro, Ind., and will take up the pastorate at North Salem. He will be succeeded at Hillsboro by W. H. Alford, of Ladoga.

—J. J. Taylor has resigned at Lyons Station, Ind., to take up the work of an evangelist under the Chicago churches.

—The church at Colfax, Iowa, began a meeting with Evangelists Shearer and Harold, of Indiana. A good meeting is expected.

O. M. PENNOCK.

—David H. Shields sends us word that the members of his congregation at Salina, Kan., have "encouraged his laziness" by giving him a Morris chair and a typewriter.

—J. T. Hieronymus has just invested in a second annuity bond of the Benevolent Association. Brother Hieronymus is cashier of an Illinois bank, and probably knows a good investment as well as most men..

—This week evangelistic campaigns are beginning in many parts of the country. One of the most important is the revival effort in Chicago, where twelve churches will simultaneously engage in an effort to win souls.

—"And some one says, 'Missions! Missions! always Missions!' Yes, always missions, because they are the life-blood, the heart-beat, the lungs' breath of the body of Jesus Christ." Bishop Doane at the Boston Convention.

—O. H. Truman, of LaCrosse, Kan., challenges the advocates of socialism to discuss with him the following proposition, which he proposes to affirm: "Christian government is the need and destiny of our time instead of socialism."

—The church at Arrowsmith, Ill., has been dedicated by L. L. Carpenter. Five thousand, one hundred dollars was raised to free the house from all debt. C. A. Lockhart is the pastor, and gives good promise for a useful career in the ministry.

—J. E. Denton has entered upon the third year of his second pastorate at Vacaville, Cal. "In the settlement of an old estate there is a 45-acre tract of fine fruit land that could be bought and would make good homes for some of our people there."

—E. L. Ely has left Atchison, Kansas, for Boone, Iowa. Bro. H. P. Armstrong informs us that as a little token of his late congregation's esteem, Brother Ely's family was presented with a handsome glass berry service. Another pastor has not been selected.

—We regret to record the death of Mrs. C. C. Martin, the widow of the man who was for many years superintendent of the Brooklyn bridge. Brother and Sister Martin were valued members of the Sterling Place church, Brooklyn, and were ready for every good work.

—Mr. Stephen J. Corey, secretary for the state of New York, will assist the Foreign Society in the rallies during January. Brother Corey is a Missouri boy, having been born at Rolla. He is a graduate of the University of Nebraska and of the theological seminary at Rochester, N. Y.

—If the foreign missionary rally starts well, it is almost certain to end well. Hence it will be a real help if preachers can make it a point to be present at ten o'clock in the morning and remain until the service is closed. The aim everywhere is to make the rally one of the greatest events in the year.

—Am just closing institute work for 1904. Have lectured 33 weeks in Iowa, Indiana and Ohio this year with greater success than ever. Have just been elected C. W. B. M. state evangelist for Nebraska to begin about Feb. 1, 1905.

W. H. WAGGONER.

Oxford, Ind.

—A. C. Corbin, of Beaver City, Neb., who organized the church at that place, and who has been its only pastor, leaves there after a residence of twenty-three years, for Ashland, Ore., which will be his future address. His successor at Beaver City has not yet been secured.

—A. T. June, who was introduced to the convention as one of the Congregational pastors seeking work among us, has accepted a call to Everett, and begins his work with the new year. Robt. Pegrun, another of the Congregational brethren, at present located at Yarmouth, N. S., will, we hope, soon find a location as pastor of a Christian church.

—The church at Adrian, Ill., is now without a preacher, for Thomas J. Thompson has entered upon the pastorate at Slater, Mo. He was called upon the strength of the kind of work he had accomplished at Lathrop and California, Mo., and Lincoln, Neb. The church at Adrian is composed of good people, and they will want a preacher for half time.

—Bro. Marcellus R. Ely, of Joplin, Mo., in response to a unanimous call from the Soniat avenue church, New Orleans, has accepted, and will begin his first pastorate Lord's day, Jan. 1. This is the worthy son of our well known brother Simpson Ely. We congratulate him on this call to an important field. He will have a loyal and happy support from this new congregation.

—The undersigned has held a pastorate during the year, but has taken time to hold six meetings, and declined 22 calls for meetings in September, October, November and December, and seven calls to preach for churches as pastor during 1905. Who says the harvest is not great and the laborers few? Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the vineyard.

BEN F. HILL.

California, Mo., Dec. 24.

—In a recent letter from T. Henry Blenus, of Jacksonville, Fla., he expresses his thanks for the editorial remarks in "Notes and Comments" department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in our issue of Dec. 8, commenting on an article in the Morning Star. He says: "Your remarks so succinctly made cover the ground most thoroughly I shall clip them for my pocket 'hand book,' and trust you will not consider my action piratical if you catch me using them." They were made for public use, and we have no patent on them. We quote our brother's endorsement, thinking others will be tempted to turn back to that issue and see if the comments be worthy of their endorsement and use.

—We regret to have word from Crayton S. Brooks that he had to abandon his meeting, which opened so auspiciously at Colorado Springs, owing to the death of his father-in-law, Wm. H. Cassidy, who died suddenly at Brother Brooks' home on Christmas morning. There had been 38 additions to the church. The meeting will be resumed when Brother Brooks returns from the funeral at Paris, Ky., where the interment took place.

—Charles H. DeVoe, after four years' work at Rochester, Ind., has entered the evangelistic field. He has associated with him a singer, Harry K. Shields, and they may be addressed at Rochester, by those desiring their services. Bro. T. J. Legg, field secretary of Indiana, very cordially commends Brothers DeVoe and Shields for their ability and their character. They will, he thinks, make a strong evangelistic team that will be helpful to all churches where they work.

—Bro. G. L. Snively has undertaken to edit and manage The Christian Philanthropist, in addition to his regular duties as secretary of the Benevolent Association. The paper has now become the property of the association by the gift of Sister Rowena Mason, who was its owner. Brother Snively will find the editorial chair not always an easy one, but he has shown some of the qualities that ought to make his particular seat reasonably comfortable. We wish him great success.

—F. F. Grim, who has for a number of years been associated in the editorial work of the Christian Century, and the evangelistic work in Chicago, has been compelled to find a more friendly climate than can be found in the "windy city." He is now at Dallas, Tex., and would like to find congenial pastoral work in the southwest or in some mountainous district. We can cordially commend Brother Grim as a young man of thorough devotion and fine spirit. He may be addressed care of the Christian Courier.

—We deeply regret to announce the death of Mrs. Levi Marshall, wife of our good pastor at Hannibal, Mo. It was only a few weeks ago that Sister Marshall lost her mother. We can give but this brief announcement as we make ready for the press. The editor was asked to preach the funeral sermon, but he could not do this for Brother Marshall, owing to the fact that he has just been somewhat battered and bruised from a fall that might have been attended by more serious consequences. May the Father comfort Brother Marshall.

—At the annual meeting of the Union avenue Christian church on Wednesday evening of last week, the church extended a call to Dr. J. M. Philputt to become its permanent pastor by a unanimous vote. Brother Philputt has been serving the church for several months as pastor pro tem, and so well is the church satisfied with him, and he with the church, that the relation has been made permanent, and we trust will last many years.. Reports were made at the same meeting from all departments of the church showing a growing interest, liberaltiy and aggressiveness.

—A C. M. S. missionary at Kokura, Japan, describes a service with the wounded in the hospital there. When permission was given the condition was laid down that there must be neither a long sermon nor loud singing. The Japanese ladies of the Methodist, Baptist, and Episcopal churches sang to the soldiers, and a Southern Baptist convention missionary did the preaching The officer who gave the qualified permission listened throughout, and then declared it so good that such a service might be held every day. One does not know whether to be most pleased at the softening of the Japanese through need in a great crisis, or at the union of the Christian denominations in a purpose to use for their Master the opportunities of the crisis.

—Members of the East End Christian church at Pittsburg, Pa., had a Christmas gift that was not expected, and was most unwelcome. It was the announcement by W. J. Russell, the pastor, that for reasons purely personal, he had decided to tender his resignation, and to accept a call from the First Christian church of Frankfort, Ind. Brother Russell went to Pittsburg from Rushville, Ind., in which state he formerly ministered to congregations at Indianapolis. He was educated at Butler college, so that his return to the Frankfort church will bring him into association with many old friends. This church is one of the strongest in Indiana. Brother Russell has done good work in Pittsburg, and his place will not be easily filled. He has taken an active part in the services of education and charity outside his regular pastoral sphere. He hopes to take up his new work by the middle of March.

—In a letter from Mrs. John H. Duncan, of Marion, Ill., she says: "We have just closed a great meeting, with 107 additions. Bro. W. F. Shearer did the preaching and Orville Harold the singing. Brother Shearer asked us to organize a band of personal workers, and this we want to do. We want a workers' training school." We quote that extract from a personal letter as a sign of the times. This training school for personal work is the outgrowth of the feeling that is manifesting itself in so many ways just now, but each individual Christian is to be a personal worker for Christ, and must seek to win others from darkness to light. Such an organization as that suggested above will help to train the young converts in Christian work and in Christian character, and make them a blessing to the world. It is a good thing for an evangelist to look beyond the close of his meeting, and give advice, when needed, as to the best method of conserving the results of the meeting.

—We have already made mention of the recent accident which befell our Brother O. A. Bartholomew, who had a fall while on his way to church on a stormy night. He has been confined to his bed in a critical condition ever since, but at this writing, seems to be slowly improving. He was already in very feeble health, and it was feared by his physician that he would not be able to recover from the shock and injury of the fall. He has been very patient and resigned during his confinement, and has received many calls and every attention possible from his brethren and sisters in the city. Under the leadership of Brother R. H. Stockton of the Hamilton avenue church, a purse for his benefit was made up and presented to him a few days since, as a testimonial of the high esteem in which he is held by the brethren of this city. Sister Bartholomew, who is equally beloved, has been unceasing in her care and attention to her husband since his affliction, and seems to receive added strength for her added burdens.

—Our brother, Senator C. W. Clarke, of Kansas City, has prepared a bill to be introduced at the next session of the legislature. It has for its purpose the maintenance of a penal institution for the treatment of habitual criminals, who are made such by drink, and whose offenses are committed while they are under the influence of liquor. The senator's idea is that drunkenness is a disease that induces crime, and it will be the aim of the bill to compel the criminal to submit to treatment for the cure of the disease. Another good law which Senator Clarke intends to propose is one providing for what is known as the "Indeterminate Sentence Bill" for the treatment of habitual criminals; that is, instead of sentencing a criminal to the penitentiary for life, or for a fixed number of years, he will be sentenced until he is reformed, the reformation to be determined by a board composed of the prison physician, the prison chaplain, and the board of prison inspectors. This is in harmony with the recommendations of those who have made a special study of penology.

—A correspondent asks: "Are the Free Baptists and their papers working as hard for union as the Disciples?" There is but one paper in general circulation among the Free Baptists, and that is the Morning Star of Boston. The editor, we think, is favorable to union, but is not devoting as much space to it as the Christian-Evangelist. In its last issue, however, it copies an editorial from the Christian-Evangelist on the subject of the union of the two bodies, without comment. So far as we have learned their ministers are favorable to the proposed union, if it can be brought about on a just and scriptural basis. We have no reason to doubt that the leaders among the Free Baptist brethren favor the union, and are pursuing the course they deem wisest to bring it about. If it should be developed that the union sentiment is stronger among us than among the Free Baptist brethren that ought not to be considered strange, in view of the fact that union has been our specialty from the beginning of our history. It is reasonable, therefore, that we should be the more ardent wooers in the religious courtship that is now in progress.

—An article in the Boston Evening Transcript, and in several other leading dailies of the country, on the "Year's Religious Trend" says that "five bodies held general meetings during the year, that, respectively, indicated turning points in their respective histories. These were the Methodist, the Congregational, the Episcopal, the Lutheran, and the Disciples of Christ." Referring further to the work of the Disciples, the article says:

"Disciples of Christ, just mentioned, held their denominational rally at St. Louis. They had on the Purchase Exposition grounds a building that would have done honor to any business concern. Indeed, they led other American bodies in seizing upon methods which drive business to expositions and adapting them to the advantage and benefit of a wide-awake Christian body that would make one world bettter and save souls in another."

True, it took a good deal of prodding to get them to do it, but they did it, and will reap results from it for a generation to come.

Referring to the Religious Education Society, concerning which many religious papers seemed to be alarmed, at its beginning, the same article quoted from above, says:

"The Religious Education Society held another annual meeting that was marked by even greater enthusiasm than the one at which the movement was inaugurated. The society demonstrated what may be called its sanity, to borrow a democratic word of the year, by showing that it is not radical either in method or belief."

Soul Winners' League.

Motto: "Each One Win One."

Pledge: Trusting in Jesus Christ for strength, I promise to make some special effort to win at least one soul to Christ during the present year, and to render to the pastor whatever service I can in making his ministry fruitful in the same direction.

Date............ ..... Name............

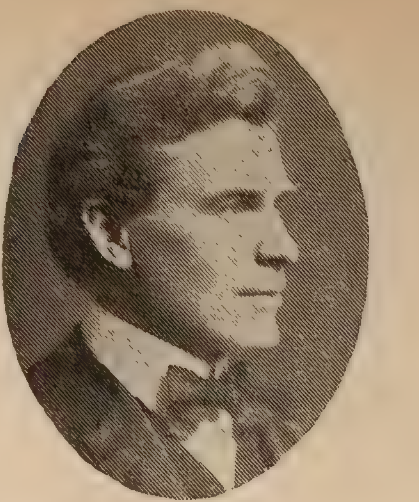
Why could not bands of personal workers be formed among the young people especially of each congregation, with some simple organization, as president and secretary, and a pledge like the above, to meet monthly or oftener, to study methods of work and report what they have done? Some would write personal letters to friends who are not Christians, citing certain scripture passages and calling their attention to the same. Others would make personal visits to the unconverted, and still others would send a tract, or book, and others extend a personal invitation to a friend to attend church. What are some of the best passages to use in soul winning? That would be a good question to study and report on at some meeting. It is easy to see how such a league of personal workers might be most useful in developing its members as well as in winning other souls to Christ.

Rebuilding the School of the Evangelists.

To the Friends of God and Humanity:—On Dec. 1, the main building of the School of the Evangelists was totally destroyed by fire, and in consequence over 100 promising young preachers are homeless. We have been working on the building, a little at a time, chiefly as we sold books, for 12 years. The struggle has been long and hard, but early in September last we finished by furnishing our beautiful new recitation halls. But now it is all in ashes! God's will be done! Amen. But we are not discouraged. Our faith in God is stronger than ever. The gospel must be preached to the whole creation. The "open door" before the poor young man who desires above every other desire to preach, so rudely closed, must and shall be opened again.

It will probably take $20,000 to inaugurate the new and greater School of the Evangelists. I have promised my "boys" that by the grace of God, supper will be ready at 5 o'clock—the hour the fire was discovered—Dec. 1, 1905. They believe me because I believe in God.



W. J. WRIGHT,
National Superintendent of Evangelism.

Brethren, we earned the principal part of the money that went into the first building, and could do it again, but the process required 12years. We appeal to individuals and churches for help. From everywhere comes this sentiment: Brother and Sister Johnson have wrought well, their work is our work, the Lord's work; the School of the Evangelists must be rebuilt.

Our neighbors and business friends, creed or no creed, are opening their hearts and from everywhere comes this expression of faith in us and our God. The best days on Kimberlin Heights are yet to come. Grant it quickly, Almighty God. Ashley S. Johnson.

Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

P. S. I have on hand 3,750 copies of my new book "The Holy Spirit and the Human Mind," ready for the binders. This contains 364 pages and is substantially bound in cloth. The price is $2 prepaid. I have devoted this edition to the inauguration of the greater School of the Evangelists. I want you, dear reader, to have this much stock in the resurrection of this great work.

If you cannot pay $2 now just enclose 20 cents to pay postage and packing, and I will send you the book and you may set your own time to pay the price ($2) with June 1 as the outside limit. Clark Braden pronounces this book the strongest book ever written on the subject. Your copy will be inscribed in my own hand showing you have $2 stock in the greater School of the Evangelists.

Shall the School of the Evangelist rise from its dust and ashes? Your vote will help to determine the question.

Some New Year's Greetings.

Congratulations upon the 41st birthday of the excellent Christian-Evangelist. Happy New Year to you, and may God spare you to us many years yet, as the guiding spirit in the advancement of Christ's kingdom through that journal. J. G. Fisher.

Roseville, Ill.

Since July the Christian-Evangelist has been visiting me and I have not only enjoyed it, but have been greatly helped in my Christian life and ministerial labors by its strong, clear and sound articles. May you have health and wisdom to conduct it in your loving, helpful way during the year 1905.

Cromwell, Ia. Roy H. Polly.

I have been a regular reader of the Christian-Evangelist about twelve years. Ofttimes have I risen from reading it, refreshed, comforted and strengthened, thinking I would drop you a line, telling you what a blessed message it brought me, but I have seldom done so. Your vision is broad, your judgment sound, and spirit Christlike. The Christian-Evangelist is well filled with the things needful by way of helping to build up a well-rounded Christian character. May you be permitted to edit it many more years, is the sincere wish and prayer of S. H. Givler.

Cerro Gordo, Ill.

Heartiest greetings to the Christian-Evangelist for the new year! No paper comes to my desk more welcome or more eagerly and profitably read than the Christian-Evangelist. Its "Easy Chair," its "As Seen From the Dome," its "English Letter," and many, many other features, make one of the best religious journals on earth. I wish every member of the Central church would take and read it; and I'm constantly urging this upon the people. Walter Scott Priest.

Columbus, Ohio.

All the Way From "Little Rhody."

I am under grateful obligations to you and Dr. Ball. Such gratuity on your part will surely have the desired effect of promoting the union so much desired and prayed for. I have much enjoyed my reading of the Christian-Evangelist. I have been in this pastorate more than fifteen years, and now I am contemplating a change which I trust shall be for God's glory. May the heavenly Father bless you, your work and your people.

W. E. Dennett.

Pascoag, R. I., Dec. 29.

"A Straw."

Please accept my sincere congratulations on your completion of another year of great work, and my "God speed" for the year to come. One "straw" will show "the way the wind is blowing" at our house. For years I have made a practice of clipping the best from papers for preservation. When I am through with other papers, they are still good for the jail, hospital, penitentiary, etc. But when I get done clipping the Christian-Evangelist there is nothing left of it!

J. N. Jessup.

Little Rock, Ark., Dec. 29.

1904 is almost gone. 1905 is before us with its privileges, duties, anxieties and trials. Surely if there are any who need a word of encouragement and cheer in God's earthly kingdom at this time, the editors of our religious weeklies, upon whom rest great responsibilities, do. I congratulate you on your splendid work for the Master, during the past year, in your appointed sphere. May God prosper and bless your efforts a thousandfold during 1905. I have taken the Christian-Evangelist just about twelve months. I shall continue to take it. It is one of our best papers and I could not well do without it. T. J. O'Connor.

New Sharon, Iowa.

I send a cheery "Happy New Year." You "promise to grow better." Do you really hope to find much space for improvement? Please accept my sincere thanks for the pattern of perfection already so nearly attained. We, your readers—what will we do? May we endeavor to grow better, purer, nobler, worthier the grand destiny you so ably set before us even as our heavenly Father designed it. And you? Yes, for you as for us, the last sun of the dying year is sinking behind the hills into the shoreless ocean of the past, but you will find, high above all—like the morning star in the roseate light of the east—the cross of Christ heralding the new day of the new year, and you will journey onward finding your way forever brightened by the glistening glory of Bethlehem that shineth afar. Yes, for you may there be very many more happy new years; and may they leave behind, as they pass, only the precious memories of abiding faith, deathless hope and omniscient love, until, "on golden hinges turning," the morning gates of the resurrection ope to admit a redeemed host, won by your ever faithful effort, to shine as celestial asphodels resplendent in the glory light of the beautiful beyond.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Our Plea Wins in a Sectarian Stronghold in the East.

I recently closed a protracted meeting at Waynesboro, Pa. This meeting was held under the auspices of the national committee on evangelism of which Bro. W. J. Wright is secretary. Our work at Waynesboro was started by accident about eighteen months ago. Bros. Herbert Yeuell, W. S. Hoye and J. A. Hopkins left Bethany Beach to complete their vacation with a short evangelistic campaign at Ringgold, Md. As the church was in use by the Dunkards, they decided to invade Waynesboro, about three miles to the north.

Waynesboro is a growing industrial center with a population of about 7,000. It is situated in the heart of the fertile Cumberland valley. Perhaps there are fewer foreigners here than in any other industrial center in the United States. It is a monument to the industry and thrift of the so-called Pennsylvania Dutch, the plain sects being at the center of its industrial development. Practically all the capitalists and laborers are descendants of farmers who have lived in the vicinity for a number of generations. The Dunkards, Mennonites, Lutherans and Reformed are the leading religious bodies. Although the people are Pennsylvania Dutch you may be surprised when I tell you that none of them can speak anything but English, except a few of the older people who remember a little of the German.

Our work at Waynesboro was organized with 14 members, and eight others were added to this number prior to our meeting. Bro. J. A. Hopkins has had charge of the work from the first, and it was his self sacrificing faithfulness and dauntless determination that made the work a success. Some of our leaders felt dubious about undertaking a work in this conservative, sectarian stronghold, and the meeting was finally undertaken as an experiment with some misgivings as to the outcome. The meeting lasted almost seven weeks and resulted in 32 additions, or an increase in the membership of 150 per cent. Twenty-one of these were by baptism and the balance were reclaimed or came by statement. Five came from the Dunkards, five from the Lutherans, three from the U. B's, one from the Reformed and several others from Dunkard families. Others from Dunkard families wanted to come but were hindered by parental authority. A number were captivated with our plea who have not yet identified themselves with us, although some of them will work with us, and doubtless will join in time. One of the leading citizens predicts that ours will be one of the strongest churches in the city in a few years, and one of the leading preachers says there is room in the city for our work. The Dunkards, who are very numerous in the community (five sects of them), are having great trouble to hold their young and progressive people; and, as there is no other church that practices immersion, we will get most of these in time, if we push our work.

We had a fine hearing from start to finish; and every one that heard our plea seemed to be pleased with it. The largest building in the city could not hold the people for our special Lord's day evening service and we packed the old St. Paul Reformed church repeatedly. One of the daily papers published a half column synopsis of each sermon for the first five weeks, or as long as we supplied the material; and this carried our message to most of the inhabitants of the city. Three other meetings started while ours was in progress, but the attendance and interest did not wane. The people gave us a more patient and respectful hearing than I have received from outside people in any previous meeting. The people are conservative but have great respect and reverence for the word of God; and if you can show them what it teaches they will obey it. Our plea was such a new thing to them that they were taken by surprise and hardly knew what to make of it; but I am convinced that after they have had sufficient time to reflect and investigate, and see that we have come to stay, many more will take a stand for Christian uuion on the primitive gospel.

Our special Lord's day afternoon services were all well attended. A large audience of men listened to a sermon on "Hard Times; the Cause and Cure," the Lord's day before election.

Bro. J. A. Hopkins, the pastor, rendered invaluable assistance in the meeting by leading the singing, conducting the devotional services, and by doing things in general. He is to assist us in a similar evangelistic campaign after new year, at Harrisburg, the state capital.

This meeting proves that the three million Pennsylvania Dutch in southeastern Pennsylvania, who have never heard our plea for Christian union, are ripe unto the harvest; and our brotherhood must immediately enter this field or forfeit a great opportunity and prove themselves derelict to a great and God-given duty.

In the last few years, churches have been started at Reading, Harrisburg, Lemoyne, Adamstown, Waynesboro, Fairfield and York. May a large and rich brotherhood thrust laborers into this ripe field, so that this army of industrious and thrifty laborers may be enlisted in the cause of Christian union, and thus help to carry the primitive gospel to the ends of the earth.

HENRY F. LUTZ.

The Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, Meeting.

Some of our own brethren feared it would not be wise to advertise too largely in so conservative a place. However, we persuaded them to allow us to advertise. We put cards in the windows and in the street cars; had leaflets with the sermon subjects by the thousand; stretched a large banner across the street and kept daily notices in the papers. We got a good hearing, the largest audience, on a Sunday night at the Academy of Music, being estimated at 800. The evangelist, H. F. Lutz, preached the word. He believed the message and was true to the book, spoke the truth with sincerity, boldness and courtesy. He was persevering and strenuous in personal work, did not waste visits in gossip, but came promptly to the point of the case in hand. In preaching he spread the net wide on general topics, but in a connected way, before drawing it in. Having been brought up in a sprinkling community, and struggled out of rationalism, he gave the people due consideration for their environment and prejudices and sincerity in what they believe, which is to the advantage of the evangelist, but when one acknowledged that he believed the great essentials for which Disciples stand, he drove the truth home in a relentless way that brought in many instances a surrender or a retreat.

The question box was used to advantage to find what the people were thinking about. He is a student and allows no one to interfere with his forenoon study and writing, keeps up his knowledge of the book and human nature, being a phrenologist enables him to understand people and attract their attention. He is sociable and often accepted invitations to dinner, but never to a big supper before preaching. The result, when considered in comparison with other meetings with hundreds gathered in, does not seem so great, but under the conditions it was a great meeting in the number received and influences for future reaping. The meeting did not exhaust itself. The last night was one of the best.

We plan to build a house and have another meeting within the next year.

A Visit to the Scene of "My First Meeting."

Upon coming to Missouri in 1873, now almost 32 years ago, I promised my father that I would, at some future time, visit Haynesville, Clinton county, where his early days had been spent and where he held "My First Meeting." He took the pains to draw me a diagram, indicating the state road leading from Haynesville to his "home," and also where I would find the once famous "baptismal hole"; also where his father, mother and sister were buried, about a half mile south of Haynesville. I am sorry to say time and opportunity have never, at one time, presented themselves until a few weeks ago, when I paid the visit, spending a day in Kansas City, very pleasantly, seeing my sister, Mrs. G. B. Longan. Next morning found me on my way to Holt. I passed through Liberty, where we were living when father wrote and published his book on "Campbellism Examined"—a reply to Dr. Jeter. The only landmark I recognized, after an absence of 48 years, was the William Jewell college. Arrived at Holt I went to a livery stable, made myself known, engaged a saddle horse and inquired the way to Haynesville. I was informed that a ride, due east, of two and one-half miles, would bring me up to the famous old town. I found Haynesville to be now mostly cornfields. A few old houses were all that was left to tell the tale of those bygone days, the town having been moved to Holt. I enjoyed the morning ride, in the cool, crisp atmosphere, very much, and in a short time I came to what I rightly supposed was the old town, got my bearings and rode south. At this point I was joined by a gentleman who directed me where to find the old grave-yard. The forest trees having been cut down a few years ago there remained only a few brush heaps to tell of their former grandeur. I hitched my horse and walked up the hill through a pasture well set with blue grass. Upon arriving at the place I found only one or two tombstones still standing; time and weather had worn them until they were as thin as my hand. Every vestige of the names had disappeared. They had evidently been of a cheap stone kind; there were here and there a few old well-preserved stumps and leaning against one was the tombstone of "Collett Haynes." "Died Aug. 31, 1866, aged 86 years." This was the person of whom my father had made honorable mention in his article, "My First Meeting." Strange were my feelings as I gazed on that name. I felt as if old friends of my father's were near me. And there came over me a desire to have some memento from that hallowed spot, something from the place where my father's father and mother lie buried, and I secured and brought home with me a part of Collett Haynes' tomb.

I made my way north from there to a Mr. Huron's, whose wife was a niece of Austin King, my father's school teacher. I met him coming from the house, a smooth faced, ruddy, portly gentleman. I introduced myself, and the moment I said Lard, he inquired: "Any relation to the preacher?" "Yes," said I, "a son." 'Get down and come in. See that grave-yard over there? The church your father preached in stood there for many, many years, and only lately was removed to Holt." He introduced me to his wife, and in conversation I learned much of all the characters mentioned by father in "My First Meeting." Her mother died only recently, and was well acquainted with father's family; in fact attended the last rites of his mother when buried.

MOSES E. LARD.

Mr. Huron took me over to the "baptismal hole," now almost extinct from the heavy spring rains. From there he took me up the hill to the place where the log hut had stood, in which my grandfather and grandmother Lard had lived and died. Of course there remained only a heap of stones and mortar. We found some few pieces of blue china dishes. He stated that preachers had carried off nearly every thing portable, hundreds having been shown the place by him alone. There was a deep, worn road by the side of the house which father had designated in his diagram as a path. My father's brother-in-law, Harry Emery, and the widow of Uncle Will Lard, had recently visited the old stamping ground. The memories of that dear old place seem still to have charms for all. I returned after a very, very pleasant visit.

The Greatest Book of the Century

GOING AT HALF PRICE.

We need the space and you need the book. We need the money and are anxious for you to have the book, hence will sell at HALF PRICE. It PAYS US to sell these books and YOU are entertained by reading them.

"CHURCHES OF CHRIST" is the greatest book of the century, in fact nothing like it has ever been published before.

"It is a perfect encyclopædia of our work and workers. Nowhere else can so much valuable and indispensable information be had concerning the Church, its history and present activities. This is by far the most expensive book ever published by the Church of Christ, and deserves a place in every library."—GEO. GOWEN.

A FEW OF THE HUNDREDS OF TESTIMONIALS RECEIVED.

"Churches of Christ" is an invaluable work. J. B. Briney's history of the Restoration Movement is by far the best written and most comprehensive history of our people that I have ever seen. It is a colossal work and will live in history. I am surprised that you don't sell "Churches of Christ" as fast as you can wrap them to ship, for every Disciple ought to read it.—WALLACE THARP, Allegheny, Penn.

My Dear Bro.:—Admirable taste is displayed in the splendid book you have recently given the brotherhood. It is at once a History, Biography and Portrait Gallery, within a binding as rich in design and symmetrical in make-up as I ever lifted from a book shelf or study table. Truly a monumental work. Sincerely yours.—B. S. FERRALL, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dear Bro.:—Reading "Churches of Christ" is much like viewing Niagara Falls. It grows on one as he proceeds. Fraternally yours.—SAMUEL B. LETSON, Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Bro. Brown:—"Churches of Christ" is a credit to you and to our brotherhood. I know no other work that gives so good an idea of the motive, scope and achievement of our people. Yours faithfully.—B. A. ABBOTT, Baltimore, Md.

My Dear Bro. Brown:—I like your book very much. It contains a world of information, and I wonder how you succeeded in getting it all together. I am delighted with the book and I wish you much success in a financial way. You deserve it. Yours fraternally.—M. D. CLUBB, Watsonville, Cal.

My Dear Bro. Brown:—I would not take twice the regular price and be deprived of this valuable historical work.—E. C. SANDERSON, Eugene, Ore.

Dear Bro. Brown:—I consider "Churches of Christ" the most valuable publication that has ever been published by the Christian Brotherhood. . . . . No library of our brotherhood will now be complete without this superb volume.—T. L. YOUNG, Chandlerville, Ill.

OUR PROPOSITION.

The regular price of the book was $10.00. Send us $5.00 and we will send you a copy bound in half morocco, postpaid; or send $3.00 and we will send you a copy handsomely bound in cloth.

Don't let this opportunity pass, if you want to keep posted on the Restoration Movement. Address,

The Hot Springs Cause.

We lack now only nine pledges of the required fifty to reach Bro. E. C Browning's proposition that he would be one of 50 to give $10 each to our lot fund if 49 others be secured. Only nine more pledges needed. If these are not secured we can not collect the $410 already pledged. I appeal to our Christian workers to stop and think about it. Here we have a great health resort, where more than 100,000 visitors gather each year, and one little church house far out at end of car line, with one man giving all his time. How can he touch the life of this vast multitude? To offset his work we have two great racetracks costing $150,000 and $500,000, 40 saloons, club houses, pool rooms, etc. And now, trusting the Lord and our brethren, we have purchased the long needed central location and have $1,500 in it, and can not turn back. Nine churches, or brethren, by pledging $10 each, will put $500 more into this work. Brethren, come to our help. Send us a pledge to-day.

Hot Springs, Ark. T. N. Kincaid.

Dedication at Grover Hill, Ohio.

The church at Grover Hill has certainly done an exceedingly good work in the building, paying for and dedicating a house of worship that is a credit both to the church and town. It was surely a "merry Christmas" day for them when it was formally opened and dedicated to God. It was a great pleasure to preach to so grateful a people, and to raise more money than the amount needed to provide for all of their indebtedness, and, in the name of the church, to give the house to the giver of every good and perfect gift.

There is a ripe field at Grover Hill, and we see no reason why there may not be a large ingathering into the fold of the world's Redeemer. L. L. Carpenter.

Dedication of the Knoxville Church, Pittsburg, Pa.

All western Pennsylvania is rejoicing in a signal victory won by the Knoxville church, of Pittsburg, under the leadership of Fred M. Gordon, pastor, and Wallace Tharp, pastor of our First Allegheny church, as dedicator. It is a thoroughly modern, complete and beautiful house, admirably adapted to its locality. About half of its $25,000 cost remained to be provided for on the day of dedication. People and pastor were so generous and had so thoroughly won the hearts of their neighbors, and the master of the occasion handled the situation with such consummate and consecrated skill that $11,000 was pledged and the church left in fine condition to go on in its phenomenal course. Brother Gordon found them four years ago with 84 members and $1,200 debt. They number 325 now—and that is not the best that can be said of them.

For two years the Pittsburg district has been beating its own record of "A new church dedicated every two months."

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

We continue the Bloomfield meeting through the holidays. Le Grand Pace decides to remain in Iowa, and Poplar Bluff is again looking for a pastor.

The Bible-school board proposes to locate a man in a central place in southeast Missouri, and have him visit as many places as possible once each month. He will strengthen and group these weak congregations until perhaps four of them are able to employ a pastor. Then (and not till then) will he take up new fields. This will insure the permanency which has been wanting in this section of the state, and we are confident is a plan which will appeal to our thoughtful people.

Such a man can be of very material assistance to our college at Dexter, in the heart of this great growing part of the state.

The next quarterly call to the schools will be sent while we are in the midst of a protracted meeting. It will be worthy of your attention. W. A. Moore, Sec.

The material is carefully selected and W. W. Dowling is at his best in this year's production. As the first six months are to be spent in the Gospel of John the lessons will be helpful in introducing us to the real heart power of our Saviour. Dowling is a good guide.—Colorado Christian Herald.

This Commentary is for the use of teachers and advanced students. The treatment of the lessons is Bible Lights, which contain appropriate scripture references, the preliminary surveys of the lesson, expository treatment, practical reflections, applications, and illustrative material. Another section is given with the heading "Suggestive," which contains questions upon the comments, and also some excellent blackboard material. Teachers will find this book of value in their lesson preparation. —The Heidelberg Teacher, Philadelphia, Pa.

Foreign Mission Rally at Hopkinsville, Kentucky.

We of Hopkinsville have long coveted one of the annual rallies conducted by President A. McLean. This year we have had our wish; and I ask leave to tell a little about the meeting here.

The rally was held on December 5. Brother McLean arrived in time to make an address on Sunday night. All the churches of the town excepting two which were engaged in special evangelistic meetings adjourned to our church to hear him. It had been partially arranged to hold a great union meeting Sunday night in a much larger room than ours; but this was found to be impracticable owing to the time of Brother McLean's coming, which was more than a month earlier than his dates in this section in former years. We lacked, however, nothing but the larger numbers and the pleasure of having all the churches represented in the service of the evening. As it was, the spirit of union was with us. It breathed through the prayers of the local pastors, through the songs of fellowship, through the address of the evening and through many silent subtle influences. Brother McLean's address was heard with profound attention. At the close of the service thoughtful persons were heard saying it was the strongest address of any kind they ever heard and members of other churches asked for copies of it, supposing it was in print. The address was, in its conception, expression and spiritual effect, a truly great one.

Three sessions were held on the day of the rally proper. There were four excellent addresses in the morning. They were by Brother McLean, Miss Oldham, who instructed and pleased her hearers greatly, Howard J. Brazleton and R. H. Robertson. Brother McLean's map and chart exercise was one of value. The afternoon session was given to four addresses, an exhibit of objects of heathen worship by Brother McLean, and a conference on missionary literature read by those present during the current year. The addresses were by Miss Lavinia Oldham, Robt. Lord Cave, W. H. Pinkerton, and H. O. Macdonald. Better addresses are rarely heard than these were.

Brother McLean spoke at night in his own witty, serious and strong way on "Giving." He was heard, as he had been the night before, with rapt and serious attention by representatives of nearly all of the local churches as well as by visitors from our own churches in several neighboring towns.

A delightful feature of the day's meetings was the dining together of all the preachers present as the guests of the Christian church. Among the preachers of other religious bodies in this company were the pastors of the Baptist, Methodist and Cumberland Presbyterian churches of our town.

The rally did us good, incalculable good. We are grateful for it. We believe we shall do better work throughout our whole future as a congregation because of the gracious and vitalizing influence it has left with us. We pray that the later rallies may do other churches like good.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

CALIFORNIA.

Vacaville, Dec. 25.—Last Lord's day we had two additions—one by confession and one from the Presbyterian church.—J. E. DENTON.

Orange, Dec. 22.—On Nov. 27, Evangelist R. L. McHatton, of Santa Rosa, began a meeting for the church here. We expected possibly 25 additions but the meeting closed with 29 baptisms—three from United Brethren, and 29 by letter and statement—51 in all, and much good otherwise accomplished. This is a "big" meeting for this coast country and means more than 100 additions in many places east of the Mississippi. We prepared, worked, and prayed, the evangelist did excellent service and God gave the increase. Religiously the ground in and around Orange is closely gleaned, but this makes 57 added since my pastorate begun June 1 and the meeting just closed all the more encouraging. Our cause is rapidly advancing in southern California.—A. N. GLOVER, pastor.

COLORADO.

Trinidad, Dec. 28.—Four baptisms at Trinidad, not previously reported.—DAVID C. PETERS.

ILLINOIS.

Rutland, Dec. 28.—We closed our work with the church at Rutland, Dec. 25, after a ministry of a year and a half. In 1904, there was raised for missions, benevolence, and education, $309.40, over six and a half times as much as last year. There have been 16 additions, of which eight were baptisms, two from denominations and six by letter. There were three deaths. My pastoral duties were full. I organized a men's class in the Sunday-school, a Junior Christian Endeavor, and an auxiliary of C. W. B. M; held afternoon services at Minonk, constituting a church and ordaining elders and deacons, Dec. 18. I attended two districts, two state and the national conventions. Surely God has been with us and blessed us.—W. F. KOHL.

Bellflower, Dec. 29.—Three received for membership last Sunday, one by letter, two by confession and baptism, making a total of 63 this year. I close my work here Jan. 1. I have accepted a call from Lake Fork and Copeland churches, each for half time. I begin there Jan. 8.—J. D. WILLIAMS, Lake Fork.

Moweaqua, Dec. 26.—Lord's day, Dec. 18, was a great day with us. There were 24 additions at regular service; 13 baptisms, four more on Wednesday night, and two more last night. The church is taking on new life.—O. K. SPICER.

Arrowsmith, Dec. 28.—Have just closed an 18 days' meeting at Winterset, Iowa, with 39 added. John Swift is pastor. I go to Stanford, Jan. 1.—EVANGELIST J. BENNETT.

Streator, Dec. 23.—I have just returned from Colfax, where I was privileged to preach for three weeks in a series of special meetings. Thirty-seven came forward during the meeting, 20 made the good confession, nine were formerly M. E.'s, and one a Baptist. About one-half the total number were men. I found in Pastor Chas. W. Dean an excellent coworker. We will begin a meeting here New Year's day. The writer will preach, and Edward McKinney, of Dorsey, will sing.—CHAS. D. HOUGHAM.

Thomson, Dec. 26.—Just closed a three weeks' meeting; two by letter, one by confession. Edward McKinney, of Dorsey, led the singing. He gave entire satisfaction.——CECIL C. CARPENTER, pastor.

Gibson City, Dec. 29.—We have just closed a splendid meeting with Omer and Sprague. Three-fourths of those coming to Christ were heads of families.—J. R. GOLDEN.

INDIANA.

Veedersburg, Dec. 23.—Our meeting covering in all 32 days, has closed with 43 additions—26 by confession and 17 by statement or letter. Bro. P. M. Kendall and wife helped us during the last ten days and rendered assistance of the very finest character. Our working forces were nearly doubled in this meeting and the community was very much benefited. A building fund was started and in the course of a few years a new church house will replace the old one now in use. My heart was made glad by the presentation of a fine new overcoat by the members of the congregation and friends.—A. W. GEHRES, pastor.

Marion.—The Tabernacle church of Christ has just closed one of the grandest meetings in the history of this congregation. Early in the fall an invitation was extended to the pastor, W. S. Buchanan, to hold the meeting. He accepted and began at once to lay plans for its success. The membership was stirred to a realization of their individual responsibility, and everything was in readiness when the time arrived. Brother Buchanan believes in advertising. He urged papers sent to every home. Then by means of banners carried by a large automobile the people were told that there would be a revival meeting at the Tabernacle. Each Saturday when the streets were thronged this same automobile would parade a banner with the subject for Sunday night. This beginning created much enthusiasm and a crowded house greeted a speaker each night. There were no side issues engaged in, but the word of God was preached with all its power and beauty. Bro. H. H. Saunders, the English singing evangelist, assisted in the meeting, and certainly proved himself a power. The direct result of the five weeks' meeting was 88 additions, 64 of whom were immersed. A peculiar feature of the meeting was that the large majority of converts were of mature years, only five being children from the Sunday-school. At an afternoon meeting, on the last Sunday, for the members and new converts, quite a surprise was sprung on Brother Buchanan when a free will offering was taken for him, as a Christmas present, which netted $125. The congregation has had 125 additions since April 1, 1904, and has raised over $500 for missions. Each member takes pride in the showing of the congregation and is lending individual support to its continuance.—C. E. STEWART, C. L. CARTER, CAL. MARVIN, members of church board.

IOWA.

Mt. Auburn, Dec. 30.—Just closed a three weeks' meeting at Colfax. There were 22 accessions to the church, 17 by primary obedience, five reclaimed and from other churches. —C. L. WALKER.

Maxwell, Dec. 13.—We closed a 23 days' meeting here with 27 added, 23 by baptism. Chas. R. Neil, of St. Paul, was the evangelist. It was indeed a happy season for the church. This makes 40 added during this year. Brother Neil is a man of God and sets forth the word in a simple and forceful way. Sister Brokaw's beautiful life and sweet song added much to the results. We launch into the new year with brighter hopes and greater faith than our past has ever known.—G. E. ROBERTS, pastor.

Cedar Rapids, Dec. 20.—Four adult additions since our last report.—J. E. DINGER.

Iowa Falls, Dec. 24.—Our three weeks' meeting at Robertson closed on Dec. 22 with nine added, six by baptism, two by letter from U. B.'s and one reclaimed. A. B. Cornell assisted me, preaching at every meeting except the last two, he having been called to Newton by his father's death. We expect to begin a campaign here on January 8. Hope to have one or more near by pastors to help me.—C. C. DAVIS.

Guthrie Center, Dec. 24.—Our meeting here is starting out nicely—eight to date and a fine interest. The appearance of smallpox in and about the city has created no small excitement. Our first meeting in 1905 will be in Illinois.—LAWRENCE AND EDWARD WRIGHT, general evangelists.

Lorimor, Dec. 25.—Sister Hazelrigg closed a meeting of 18 days which is considered by the entire brotherhood in this community to be the best held in the history of our city. There were 47 additions. The meeting had to close on account of press of work at other places. All departments of church service have been materially strengthened, as was evidenced by the attendance at the Bible-school and communion service on this Christmas morning. Peace and harmony prevail.—FRANK N. WILLIAMSON, GRACE TALBERT.

Ottumwa, Dec. 27.—We closed a two and a half weeks' meeting at Allerton, Ia., with 42 additions. J. P. Garmong was with me as singer. H. G. Waggoner is the efficient pastor of this splendid church. Our people are in the lead of every good work and dominate the life of the community.—WM. J. LOCKHART.

Delta, Dec. 29.—We recently closed an excellent meeting of four weeks in which we were assisted by Evangelist A. P. Cobb, of Decatur, Ill. Altogether there were 41 additions, two by letter, 14 by statement, 24 by confession and baptism, and one who confessed but was not baptized owing to the fact that he had just undergone a serious surgical operation. We have been in several meetings where more were brought into the fold in the same length of time, but in none where a deeper spiritual feeling was manifested. Brother Cobb spoke day and night and all the time we were on the mountain top. He is a splendid visitor, the pastor's friend, and has left the church at Delta richly blessed, the latter having the respect and esteem of the entire community, even of those who do not see the truth as we see it.—H. A. PALLISTER.

KANSAS.

North Topeka, Dec. 26.—One accession yesterday from the Methodist church. Our meeting is to begin next Lord's day. H. E. Ballou will do the preaching.—F. H. BENTLEY.

Topeka, Dec. 23.—We closed our meeting at Mishawaka, Ind., with 80 additions. My work will be with pastors mostly in the coming year. Address, Topeka.—V. E. RIDENOUR, singer.

Herington.—One addition by letter to the Herington church Christmas morning.—F. M. MCHALE.

Atchison.—Brother Ely, our pastor, Sister Ely, his wife, and their daughter Cora, were given an affectionate and tearful farewell.—H. P. ARMSTRONG.

Atchison, Dec. 24.—The First church held its annual meeting here, Dec. 28. The church has had a prosperous year. It has had 58 additions, has developed many new workers in the field, and has raised from all sources a total of $2,386, as against $1,800 for 1903.

McPherson, Dec. 22.—The meeting held by the pastor, assisted by Prof. C. E. McVay, singer, closed Dec. 18. It was a great meeting, although not many were added. Results: four baptisms, three by relation, one from Baptists. On Sunday evening, Dec. 17, Brother

McVay gave his song recital to a house crowded to the utmost. I will hold a meeting at Groveland, a mission point, in January, and assist the pastor, R. A. Adamson, at Canton in February.—W. A. Morrison.

Douglas, Dec. 22.—Two young ladies made confession on Dec. 11, at our regular morning service, and were baptized in the afternoon. At the same house we also baptized a brother who will not at present take membership with this congregation, but retains his membership in the Methodist church. The ladies' aid has recently made some substantial improvements in church furniture, and contemplate more soon. —C. E. F. Smith.

Herington, Dec. 20.—Bro. D. W. Campbell, of Olin, Ia., just closed a four weeks' meeting at this place. He labored under adverse circumstances; the result has been a great victory. Eighteen accessions: 14 by confession and baptism, among them four young men, two Dunkards, one Baptist, one reclaimed. The church has been built up spiritually and is in good condition to begin the new year's work. The Christian Endeavor has been reorganized with 29 members. We have a Junior Endeavor of about 40 members. Brother Campbell will remain with us at least two more Lord's days, until we can secure a pastor to succeed Brother Mc Hale, who resigned 10 days ago to take up the work at Hoisington.—E. R. Kennel, church clerk.

MISSOURI.

Higbee, Dec. 19.—Arthur N. Lindsey has just closed a very successful meeting at this place, with 50 additions, 45 being confessions, making a total of 120 additions for the year.—J. C. Wyatt.

Nevada.—I closed a meeting of 18 days at Urich, Dec. 2, resulting in 17 additions. I also held a meeting at Gravetta, Ark., of 19 days, closing Dec. 23, with 31 additions: 19 baptized, two from the Cumberland Presbyterians, and one from the Baptists, who had been baptized, and nine by statement.—J. J. Lockhart.

Clinton, Dec. 26.—Meeting of three and one half weeks closed with 71 added. Lyons, Kan., next.—O. E. Hamilton, evangelist; F. A. Wilkinson, singing evangelist.

Carrollton, Dec. 30.—In our regular work for the year 1904, we have organized one congregation with 31 members, and added to the congregation for which we labored, 63 persons, almost all heads of families.—J. J. Limerick.

Warrensburg, Dec. 28.—There have been six additions at Rich Hill, since last report, four by confession, one reclaimed, one by statement.—King Stark.

Webb City.—A. B. Griffith, of Cleveland, Ohio, has closed a successful five weeks' meeting here. The unabated interest, the regular attendance, and the methodical study of the Book of Acts by the membership during the entire series of meetings laid the basis for thorough Christian work. Thirty-three made the good confession, and many were roused to serious consideration. Mr. and Mrs. Cappa, of Nashville, Tenn., and Miss Dew, of Neosho, singing evangelists, assisted and did effective work.—E. F. H.

Mound City, Dec. 27.—The Lord is blessing our labors. Five confessions at Elmo, and five by statement, two of which were from the Baptists; all at the regular services. Two added at Blanchard by statement, and two confessions at Dawson last Friday evening. Total 13. I begin my third year at Elmo. The church is in excellent condition. They presented me with a beautiful gold watch for Christmas, and the church at Dawson gave me a fine Bible and some cash.—J. N. Cole.

Post Oak, Dec. 26.—R. B. Havener, of Windsor, closed a very successful meeting at this place with 25 members. He held the meeting in the school house with about five members in the beginning. We are very much encouraged, and hope to have a house of worship at the close of another year. We have employed a preacher for next year, and the work starts off nicely.—Mrs. Minnie D. Lykins.

Mound City, Dec. 26.—We closed a meeting of two weeks and a half duration at Bigelow, with 14 additions: nine by confession, two by letter, and three reclaimed. Organized a Senior and Junior Christian Endeavor, and Mrs. McFarland organized a C. W. B. M. We have been at Summit church, north of this place, 10 days and there have been 15 additions: 14 confessions and one reclaimed. Many more are almost persuaded. The meeting is widening in its influence at each service. Five men last night. Let the churches in the district feel free to call upon us at any time. We are in this work to serve you to the best of our ability.—C. O. McFarland and wife, Nodaway valley district evangelists, King City, Mo.

Cook, of Salida, Col., conducted the music, which is to say it was well done. I am now in my second meeting here, a suburb of Portland, where J. A. Melton is the faithful superintendent of the Sunday-school and has charge of that mission and leads the music. H. B. Do You Suffer with Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for Asthma. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all other remedies fail. It is really a most wonderful discovery.

Mr. R. Johnson, Sr., a prominent citizen of Grand Forks, N. Dak., writes, I tried twenty physicians and changes of climate without relief, but was completely cured by the Kola Compound after fifty years suffering. Dr. W. H. Vail, an eminent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes that he tried Himalya on several different cases of Asthma with satisfactory results in every case. Mrs. Millie Borchers, Amanda, Ohio, writes, I suffered with Asthma twelve years until the Kola Compound cured me. Mrs. W. E. Murgittroyd, North Chatham, N. Y., writes, I suffered for several years with Asthma and could get no relief until I used the Kola Compound which cured me. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the importers, copies of which they will be pleased to send you.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the Christian-Evangelist who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

JESUS WINS HIS FIRST DISCIPLES.—John 1:35-51.

Memory verses 40, 41.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel.—John 1:49.

Before proceeding far with this six months' study of the life of Christ as narrated in John's gospel, it is well to make a general survey of the life of Jesus in its chief outlines. Putting together all that is told by the four evangelists, we arrive at the following as an Outline of the Life of Christ.

I. Thirty Years of Preparation, from the birth of Jesus until the beginning of John's ministry.

II. Prelude to the Public Ministry, from the beginning of John's ministry until the first public appearance of Jesus in Jerusalem after the call of the first disciples and a preliminary sojourn in Galilee.

III. Early Judean Ministry, from the public appearance of Jesus in Jerusalem until the departure into Galilee after the imprisonment of John the Baptist.

IV. First Period of Galilean Ministry, from the arrival in Galilee until the calling of the Twelve.

V. Second Period of Galilean Ministry, from the calling of the Twelve until the crisis at Capernaum and the retirement to the north.

VI. Third Period of Galilean Ministry, from the retirement north until the final departure from Galilee.

VII. Perean Ministry, from the final departure from Galilee until the final arrival at Jerusalem and the triumphal entry.

VIII. Passion Week, from the triumphal entry to the crucifixion.

IX. The Forty Days, from the resurrection to the ascension.

The above divisions are very unevenly represented in the several gospels. Thus John gives no material at all under the first, while John alone gives the incidents which make up the second and third divisions. (The present lesson and the next one belong to the second division.) John has relatively little to say about the ministry in Galilee—to which the other three gospels devote most of their space—but narrates the events of the beginning and close of the ministry with considerable fullness. Especially does he take pains to record the discourses and teachings of Jesus which were uttered in connection with the several episodes.

In the paragraphs chosen for this lesson, which might be called "The Beginnings of Faith," the evangelist connects the ministry of Jesus with that of John. It was upon the testimony of John the Baptist that two of his followers transferred their allegiance to Jesus and became the first of his disciples. Why did not John the Baptist himself become one of the intimate followers of Jesus? It would seem fitting if the wilderness prophet who had been the first to hail him as the Anointed One had also been the first to follow him. But perhaps it was not in John's rugged nature to be a follower, even of the one whose coming he foretold. Perhaps his wilderness training, which fitted him for his own peculiar work, unfitted him for the life of free and cordial social intercourse which Jesus and his followers were to lead. Perhaps—as is often the case with pioneers—he was radically unable to adjust himself to the new order which his own efforts helped to usher in. At any rate, what actually happened was that John commended Jesus to his own followers, but himself followed not.

A striking feature of this incident is the magnetic power of Jesus to draw and hold those who come near him, and more than that, his power to magnetize others so that they, too, shall draw others to him. Jesus drew Andrew; Andrew drew Peter. Jesus found Philip; Philip found Nathanael. Here is the whole principle of missions and the secret of the expanding power of the gospel.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting.

January 11, 1905.

PRAYER FOR THE CHURCH.

"We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers; remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father."—1 Thess. 1:2, 3.

It will be noticed that this first chapter of Thessalonians, which constitutes the lesson of the evening, is a thanksgiving to God because of the church, rather than a prayer for it. We find here what is noticeable in all Paul's writings, that he sustains a very close and intimate relation with the churches which he founded. He remembers them in his prayers, making mention of their names, and he admonishes them as their spiritual Father.

Faith, Hope, Love. Paul thanks God for their "work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ." These are the great abiding elements of Christianity, as mentioned by Paul in his Corinthian letter (1 Cor. 13:13). Faith is the inspiration for our work, and love is the passion which makes labor light, and hope of what we are to be hereafter inspires patience in the endurance of hardships. Blessed is the church which possesses in a high degree these fundamental elements of the Christian life.

Imitators and Examples. Another thing for which the apostle is thankful is that when they heard the gospel preached to them in the power of the Holy Spirit and in much assurance they "became imitators of us and of the Lord." They at once sought to follow the high example set before them by Paul, and by the Lord whom he presented. In doing this they "became ensamples [or examples] to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia." It is only as we follow the highest ideals in conduct that we become proper examples for others to follow. The teachableness of this church was a commendable feature.

Its Missionary Character. Notice that this church of the Thessalonians was a missionary church, and Paul thanked God because "from you hath sounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place your faith to Godward is spread abroad." That is what every church ought to be—a center from which shall radiate out to all the world the light of the world. They were enabled to be this, because when they heard the gospel they "turned unto God from idols to serve a living and true God," and to wait for the second coming of Christ. It is only as the church turns away from all modern forms of idolatry—the idols of wealth, of ambition, of self, and of pleasure—to serve the living God, that it becomes a power for the conversion of others.

Prayer: We thank Thee, our Father, for the church which Thou hast established in the world and for all the local congregations of faithful believers which make up that church, and which, to any degree, are manifesting those graces and virtues taught and exemplified in Thy Son, our Saviour. May we seek more and more to be filled with His Spirit, that our churches may become radiating centers of divine light and love for the healing of the nations! In Christ's name. Amen.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?—Genesis 4:8-15.

For the Leader.

We have this evening the study of an old topic. And it may be well to give a few words of introduction calculated to show that, though old, yet this subject is new. It will be new in the sense of a present subject as long as the presence of the saloon by the permission of the citizens continues. Some people have about reached the conclusion that this is a dead subject. They think that it has been exhausted. But how can this be while the evil is still in the land. We are surely not going to take the position that the people cannot control the situation. The people can do just what they want to do.

There may be some one who will question whether this subject can be legitimately gotten out of this incident of Cain and Abel. For that reason it may be timely to show that the lesson is lawfully drawn from this text. The application is in the plea that Cain made that he was not his brother's keeper. It is the same question that was up between God and Cain—whether he was responsible for the well-being of his brother. The claim is made to-day that we are not responsible for the total abolition of the liquor traffic; that if each man will let it alone for himself he has exhausted his responsibility. It will always be sold and drunk, therefore I am relieved of any extreme measures to overthrow it. This will not stand in the gospel light.

For the Members.

1. Every one is responsible for the well being of all the sons of men so far as he is able to bring it about. If one asks how one may know the measure of his responsibility, let it be replied that it is his ability. If one has done nothing, he may be sure he is not guiltless in this matter. My responsibility is my ability.

2. In a land where I am a citizen—that is, one of the government—I have discharged my duty when I have cast my vote and my full influence in favor of the right. Only then can I meet the demands of a conscience that has been taught by the gospel of Christ. Everything that exists in the nation with the permission of the government exists with my permission until I have filed my protest. The saloon is an institution existing by permission of the government.

3. Then we are interested in the keeping of our brother to the extent of being responsible for an effort to save him as an individual. This brings us to the importance of temperance agitation. We must teach our brother. This is not assuming a superiority over him in natural endowments, but rather a superiority in opportunities. He may be a child of false training. We might be as far from the truth as he if we had been brought up in the same surroundings. Let us talk, preach, teach the doctrine of the saved life until our brother will come and go with us.

4. What if we try to put this duty aside and forget it? What if we succeed in taking the attention of the public from the fact of our negligence in this respect? Can we keep it concealed from our Father? No. The ground would not keep the secret of Cain. His brother's blood cried to God out of the ground. The very ground has ears to hear and a tongue to tell and feet to carry the tidings of our secret sins, not only to God, but to all the ends of the earth. Nothing shall be kept secret forever. Then if we will take the pains to look we will see that the public already knows much of what we have thought was a secret.

5. Then we should not forget this one thing: the curse of God rests upon the land of the saloon. If a curse rested upon Cain for killing one man, how much more upon many men for wholesale killing! Why shou'd we think a nation can be guiltless after committing the same offense that would bring an individual under condemnation? Can the fact of the many having a part in the evil make it less an offense? No. While some may say, "Well, it looks like a pretty prosperous sinner, our country," I would say that worldly prosperity, a prosperity of houses and lands, does not mean the absence of the curse, nor does it mean the prosperity that lasts. Poor and blind and needy are all who know not the Lord.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Has the ground opened to receive the blood of my brother whom I have slain in my capacity as a citizen?

KNOWLTON.

At her home, Anita, Ia., Dec. 18, 1904, Mrs. Ellen Knowlton, age 49 years. Sister Knowlton leaves a husband and five children to mourn her death. The writer conducted the service at the Christian church, Anita. She died as she had lived, in full faith of the gospel. W. B. CREWDSON.

ALBERT ANTHONY MOORE.

"He lived as all true men ought to live;
He died as all true men pray to die."

At his country home near Fayetteville, Ark., at high noon, Saturday, December 17, this good man passed from the toils of earth to the rest of heaven. He died gently and at peace after a long and painful sickness. It was a fitting close to a beautiful and useful life. He died in the homestead where he was born on the good St. Patrick's day, 1838. When he was a lad his father died and he became the main support of the widowed mother and his sisters. Young as he was, he performed his task faithfully and well. It was an observation of England's greatest bard, that "Childhood shows the man as morning shows the day." The lessons of service and self-sacrifice learned in youth remained with him till the end. During all his eventful years he was the same sincere, honest, industrious and courageous man.

Fifty years ago he was a student in the Arkansas college, and had the good fortune to live for awhile in the home of Pres. Robert Graham. When a boy sixteen years old he sat one day in the home of his mother and heard President Graham preach the evangel of Christ. As the good man spoke the lad was fascinated, edified and his young heart was strangely stirred. At the close of the sermon, like Timothy, he confessed the faith that first dwelt in his mother, and gave his heart to Christ in changeless love. The best tribute to his religious life is the fact that all his children, one daughter and five sons, are exemplary Christians. One son, David Walker Moore, is the gifted and consecrated pastor of the South street Christian church, Springfield, Mo. Forty-nine years ago he was married to Miss Martha Martin. These young people made a beautiful home into which nine children came, three of whom preceded the father to the better land. Mr. Moore was the most useful and public-spirited man in the community in which he lived. He was both an example and an inspiration to his neighbors. He was a successful farmer because he managed his affairs and cultivated the soil intelligently. Many sought his counsel on various subjects and were the better and wiser for it. He was known everywhere as a peacemaker. In his estimation truth was the pearl of greatest price. His practice of charity was as beautiful as his love of truth. He was deeply interested in all the enterprises of the Disciples of Christ, and was a contributor to the work both at home and in the lands beyond the seas. Once during a drought corn was selling for $1.50 a bushel. Mr. Moore had a surplus which he sold for 75 cents a bushel. He said he did not think it right to accept more than that. It was a touching sight to see the five sons acting as pall bearers to the father whom they can no longer serve, but will ever love. N. M. RAGLAND.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

So Goes the World.

Our varied days pass on and on,
Our hopes fade unfulfilled away,
And things which seem the life of life
Are taken from us day by day;
And yet through all the busy streets,
The crowd of pleasure-seekers throng;
The puppets play, the showman calls,
And gossips chat the whole day long—
And so the world goes on.

Our little dramas come to naught;
Our lives may fail; the schemes we've planned
May crumble into nothingness;
Our firmest castles fall to sand;
And yet the children sing and dance,
The money-makers laugh and shout,
The stars, unmindful, still shine bright,
Unconscious that our light is out—
And so the world goes on.

The house grows sad that once was gay,
The dear ones seek their blessed home,
And we may watch and wait in vain
To hear their well-known footsteps come;
And yet the sunlight flecks the door,
And makes the sunny shadows long;
The rosebuds at the casement bloom,
The bird pours forth his cheerful song—
And so the world goes on.

And God goes on, and with our woe
Weaves golden threads of joy and peace;
Guarding within his heart of hearts
Our days of pain, our days of ease.
He marks them all—the seed, the sheaves,
The dancer's smile, the mourner's tears—
And keeps them safe, his children all,
Through all the great eternal years—
Thank God, the world goes on.

LLOYD BAXENDALE.

By G. P. RUTLEDGE.

Author of "Pledge in Sermon."

A VISIT TO NEW YORK.

In the latter part of October, Mr. Baxendale visited a "liberal church" in New York, which was looking for a "broad-minded pastor" and had concluded that he might fill their expectations. The invitation specified that the officers of the church desired him to preach on: "Salvation: What? How?" Evidently, the suggestion was intended to test his "liberalism."

The church was not large, neither was the congregation. But the lack of massiveness and numbers was supplied by luxury and refinement. The audience, that morning, numbered about two hundred worshipers. The preacher felt somewhat embarrassed—not because he stood before a New York audience—but because the audience was much smaller than any he had faced in years and also because he had not been in a pulpit since the last Sunday in June and was out of practice.

Announcing the text, however, Acts 16:30, "What must I do to be saved?" he was soon completely absorbed by the great theme and forgot that he was preaching a "trial sermon."

Space forbids a reproduction of the sermon. Nevertheless, the reader may be interested in the following brief outline.

"With the divine side of salvation, we have nothing to do. By what method God washes the sin-dyed soul in the blood of the Lamb and makes it white like the driven snow is no concern of ours.

"The other side of our great theme is the one to which I would therefore call your attention. The doctrine that man can do nothing to bring about his salvation from sin is both unreasonable and unscriptural. 'Only believe' is a popular note in the sermonic music of our day, but it is discordant to the well-trained, gospel-loving ear. The apostle James reminds his readers that 'Faith, if it hath not works, is dead,' and that 'by works a man is justified, and not by faith only.' The New Testament student will observe that 'Faith and Works' are joined in holy wedlock, from the beginning of redemption in the human heart and life to the triumphant passing from earth to heaven. When confronted by the trembling jailer, Paul recognized the human side of salvation, and likewise did Peter on the day of Pentecost. The Saviour, himself, recognized and emphasized it, when he made both faith and baptism conditions of pardon. The Acts of Apostles is a book of conversions, and in it pardon is conditioned upon three acts of human volition: 'Faith, repentance, baptism.'

"Over against the general argument that baptism is not a condition of pardon, I would put the fact that it, alone, is mentioned in connection with every conversion recorded in Acts. Faith is omitted in some and repentance in others; but baptism is conspicuous in all—not that it is the supreme thing, but because it is the last condition of the formula and naturally demands the teacher's attention even after the seeker has complied with the other two. The apostolic preacher was governed, as every religious instructor should be to-day, by the necessities of the case. Paul preached faith to the unbelieving jailer, who was subsequently further instructed and baptized. Peter said nothing about faith, when the people on the day of Pentecost asked what they should do, because they already believed. He answered their question by telling them to 'repent and be baptized'—thereby setting forth the two conditions with which they had not yet complied. Likewise did Ananias omit both faith and repentance, when instructing Saul concerning the way of life. The fact that Saul's sins had not been forgiven proves conclusively that he was not converted—as some suppose—on the way to Damascus. When stricken down near the city, he was arrested by the Master, and it is reasonable to conclude that he then and there both believed and repented, but his conversion was not yet complete. He had further to hear words whereby he should be saved. Consequently, at the house of Judas in the street called Straight, Ananias found a penitent believer, to whom the preaching of faith and repentance would have been a foolish waste of time. But Saul had not complied with the last condition of pardon—hence the command, 'Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.'

"The evidence of pardon, usually proclaimed, is unscriptural and confusing. I, like every other minister, have met many who refuse to unite with the church on the ground that they have not been able to enjoy an assuring experience. The Protestant church, almost universally, predicates its knowledge of salvation upon the 'mysterious feeling,' concerning which the New Testament is as silent as the grave. Nothing is more unreliable than feeling, and I am glad that it is not divinely specified as the way by which we may know that we have passed from death into life.

"The testimony of Christ and his apostles is, alone, reliable and sufficient. They emphatically declare that if we believe in the Son of God, repent of our sins, and are baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, we shall be saved.

"Following conversion, which comprises salvation from past sins and the passing out of the world into Christ and the church, the godly life, outlined in the twenty-one epistles—all of which were written to Christians—must be consistently led."

The sermon was listened to with profound attention, but at the close of the service, no words of commendation greeted the preacher. The audience passed out quietly, and Mr. Baxendale retired to the pastor's study. At the expiration of probably twenty minutes, one of the officers appeared and, after thanking him for visiting the church, presented him with a generous check. In a brief, informal meeting, the officers had decided that, while Mr. Baxendale was a man of extraordinary ability, his preaching—if judged by the sermon just delivered—was extremely old-fashioned and narrow and utterly devoid of ethics. They were looking for a "liberal man," one who stood head and shoulders above all the dogmas of the age and would base salvation upon a culture, born of conviction that might result from the study of any philosophy or religion.

Mr. Baxendale went to his hotel wondering what the final outcome of the venture would be. It may as well be stated here that the church did not think it worth while to cultivate him, and that the Rev. John Edwin—an ex-Unitarian minister—was called to the pastorate.

Passing from his room, by one of the small parlors of the hotel, on Monday morning, Mr. Baxendale stopped suddenly—a thrill of joy had arrested him and to have gone on would have been impossible. He saw Alma! Turning from the picture she had been admiring, she exclaimed: "Mr. Baxendale!"

Then feeling that she had spoken with undue haste and emotion, she retreated a step or two, as he advanced. Regaining his composure, he extended his hand and said: "The happiest surprise I have had in a long time!"

"The pleasure is mutual, I can assure you," was the hearty response.

Continuing, she said: "I am waiting for father and mother. They will be here in a few minutes, and I am sure you will be welcome at our table."

Just then, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph entered, and after a happy exchange of greetings, the four walked down the corridor to the elevator, Mrs. Randolph and Alma taking the lead.

The hour at the table was exceedingly pleasant for all concerned. The conversation dwelt almost entirely on the "trip abroad"—no reference being made to Providence or the Poplar Square church. After breakfast the two men sought a corner in the lobby and enjoyed an old-time chat. Not having kept in touch with either Mr. Baxendale or the Poplar Square church since his departure, Mr. Randolph plied numerous questions and listened intently while the minister rehearsed the most striking events of the past three months.

When informed of Major Burns' remarkable offer, he stated that he was not surprised, and also referred to the discussion in the Business Men's cafe the day after Mr. Baxendale's resignation.

At a subsequent meeting in the parlor, Mr. Randolph proposed that they all remain in New York until the morrow, as he had a little business to look after and wished also to talk further with Mr. Baxendale. Mrs. Randolph offered no objection, Alma said she would be delighted, and as for Mr. Baxendale—he had planned to take the noon train for Troy, but the thought of spending a day near Alma, and possibly a part of it with her, alone, even upon the pretext of remaining to talk with her father, immediately changed the schedule in his mind and he most readily and gladly assented.

Upon the completion of this arrangement Mr. Randolph departed—saying he would return for lunch.

Mrs. Randolph excused herself to instruct him concerning a small purchase she wished him to make. In another part of the hotel she met an old friend and did not return immediately. These were precious moments for both Alma and the minister. They experienced exquisite pleasure at being thus left to entertain each other, although neither suspected that the other felt the joy and pangs of restricted love. Had Mr. Baxendale yielded to the impulse of his heart, he would have then and there poured forth his love in tender, appealing language, just as he had done in Burlington, when the letter was written and mailed in the waste-basket. But his conscience condemned him, and he sought to hide his feelings.

"Why should I have such thoughts of one who loves and belongs to another?" he remonstrated with himself.

Alma, too, asked herself why she should be so silly as to feel as she did toward a man whose love she could never hope to have.

"Mr. Baxendale, this is the first opportunity I have had to tell you how very sorry I am that you are no longer to be our pastor," she remarked, after a few references to Europe and other general topics.

Mr. Baxendale had received many similar expressions of sympathy from members of the Poplar Square church, but none of them had touched him like this. Her words were golden, fraught with a priceless meaning, which, for the moment, renewed the desire to tell her all that was in his heart.

"Yes, I am sorry that the pleasant relations of so many years were necessarily severed," was the heartfelt reply.

"Do you think it was necessary?" asked Alma.

"Yes," was the answer, "I had to stand by my convictions and the officers had to stand by theirs. I do not reproach myself for getting out of harmony with the denomination, nor do I blame the church for protecting its pulpit."

"It was not the church," interrupted Alma. "It was the official board—or rather, I should say, some members of it. If the church could have voted on that resignation, you would have been retained by a handsome majority!"

"Perhaps," said the minister, "quite a number would have been willing to endure heresy in the pulpit on account of sacred associations and others might have submitted to it for the sake of harmony in the church."

"Indeed, Mr. Baxendale, you are mistaken!" was the quick response. "A large number, possibly the majority, believe as you do. I do, for one, and so does mother. Father does, too, but he doesn't admit it. And I know of many others who expressed themselves as being in sympathy with your views—even before we left Providence."

Just here the conversation was terminated by Mrs. Randolph's entrance. Mr. Randolph returned at noon, and after lunch they visited some art galleries and other places of interest. The evening was spent pleasantly at the hotel, and the next morning the Randolphs started for Providence, and Mr. Baxendale for Troy.

The Good Fairy and the Young Bears.

Once upon a time in a great forest where tall trees grew and many kinds of bushes grew, and in fact the growth was so thick that there were just a few paths through the woods where the animals could walk, there lived six bears. (Of course you know what bears are because you have seen bears at the circus; big black bears that stand up like people.) Well, those bears that lived in this forest were just about like the circus bears, and one of them was a mamma bear; one of them a papa bear; and the other four were children bears. The smallest child bear was a teeny, weeny bear; the next one was a little larger bear; and the other two were quite large bears—nearly as big as their papa and mamma, only they were not so old and therefore did not know so much as their parents. Now these six bears lived in a house which was under a big tree and the door of the house was a great big black hole. In the rooms there were jars of honey on shelves; berries in baskets; and apples in piles all around the floor. The mamma and papa bears were always good bears and always kept lots of honey and fruit for the young bears to eat. Then, too, they wanted the two small bears and the two larger ones to be good children; so every day their mamma sent them to school with their books, which told, first, all about how bears could get honey out of bee trees (bee trees, you know, are trees in the woods that bees put honey in so they can have something to eat all winter) and then the books told all about where the best grapes grew, and the best berries, and the best apples, and the best of everything that bears like in the woods. This school, that the mamma bear sent the young bears to, was about a mile from the house, and the children bears knew the way to get to the school because there was one wide path through the trees and bushes that led straight to the schoolhouse. But it so happened that about half way to the schoolhouse lived Mr. and Mrs. Wolf, who liked young bears to eat, and Mr. Wolf had seen the two large bears and the two smaller bears going to school with their books every day. So Mr. Wolf said to Mrs. Wolf, "I will go to the path and lie down in the bushes and wait for the little bears to come," and he did.

Now mamma bear had just brushed the little bears' hair (and it took a long time because you know bears have so much hair) and when she had finished she started them skipping along the path and mamma bear stood in the door of their home and cried out: "Be good children and come home at half past twelve for dinner!" and off the little bears went to school, laughing and having just as fine a time as if they were real, real, schoolchildren. They were making such a noise that the wolf could hear them coming and he was beginning to lick his jaws because he knew that he was going to have a feast. Well, just before they got to the wolf, what do you think they saw? No, it wasn't another wolf, but a little teeny, weeny fairy about as high as your thumb, that was standing in the middle of the path. She had beautiful silver wings and she carried a golden wand. One of the bears started to slap the fairy with his paw (just in play, you know) and it would have killed the fairy, because bears slap hard even in fun, but it just happened that the fairy cried out in time: "Oh, little bears, listen! Yonder up the schoolhouse path is a great wolf that lives near me and I heard him say that he was going to wait for the bear children, to kill them and take them home for supper!"

The little bears were so frightened that they almost started to run home as soon as the fairy had spoken, but they stopped long enough to thank the fairy; then off they went as fast as they could go, crying all the way home. Their mother heard them as they came near the house, and she ran out and started to scold them for running away from school; but just as soon as the little ones could get enough breath to speak, they told about the fairy, and so mamma bear called papa bear, and all six went out to kill the wolf.

Now papa bear was a good fighter, and he could squeeze so hard with his paws that he could easily kill a wolf when once he got hold of him. So he told the two large children bears to go ahead and the two smaller children bears to follow, and he also told all of them to laugh just as they had done before. They were afraid to do this, but when their papa told them that he would stay close behind and would not let the wolf hurt them, they went ahead, singing. Well, when they came to a place that had been all cleared by some animal, papa bear saw the wolf crouching down all ready to jump after the little bears, but papa bear was walking right along the bushes near where the wolf was lying and soon he got so close to the wolf that he could almost slap him with his paw; then he saw the wolf make a move toward the last little bear. Just as the wolf started, the papa bear hit the wolf so hard that Mr. Wolf fell over with a howl and he could not move, so he lay there almost dead. Then the mamma bear came up and the papa bear and the mamma bear killed the wolf, and the bear children were so happy because their lives had been saved that they began laughing (they even cried a little, because you know people sometimes cry when they are very happy) and they all helped drag Mr. Wolf home, for they were going to eat the wolf for supper. But just as they had nearly reached the house, the same little fairy ran across the path and one of the little bears cried out:

"Oh, little fairy! We want to give you something for saving our lives. If you will come home with us you can have some honey, and some fruit and—"

But just then the little fairy replied: "No, I do not want anything. I am the good fairy of the forest, and if you will do something kind for some other little bears or for some other animals that you know, then I will feel well repaid." And waving her little golden wand she flew gracefully through the air like a beautiful butterfly. The bears wanted to talk to the fairy but she had gone before they could say another word; so they took pains to remember what the good fairy had told them, and always thereafter they tried to be real, real, good bears. The very next day they took a basket of fruit and honey over to some other little neighbor bears. And that was the very thing that pleased the good fairy.—A. A. G., in the Advance.

August Johnson, Secretary of Brush Creek union Sunday-school, St. Clair, Mo.: "We send herein $2.45 as missionary contributions to be sent Drusie Malott, the missionary to China." (I cannot tell you how proud I was to receive that little note. Children, don't you think it sweet of that Sunday-school to help us with our missionary? The other day I went down to town to see about a social our Endeavor was about to give—I had to attend to ordering more pickles; I wasn't thinking about a thing but pickles. Then along came my friend John Grayson and poked something at me. It was a five-dollar gold piece from himself and Mrs. Grayson for our missionary. When they married, you see, they didn't give up everything and sit down on chairs and fold their hands. So let Josie Lineberry keep up the Av. S.) M. J. O'Dell, Lebanon, Mo.: "I had not seen any of our papers since the middle of October, so you see I had a feast for many days and a help to overcome the disappointment of not keeping the Av. S. rules (since recommenced). When I read of our advance in mission work, I was repaid for turning first to this department. I send a dollar for Drusie Malott and one for Charlie. If not needed in Charlie's case, use your judgment in spending it." (As I said not long ago, we are trying to lay up an education-fund for Charlie, so every penny received for him is greatly needed and appreciated.) "I have a penny thank-offering box to be opened on my birthday, not far off, and it may be used for Miss Malott. I send the season's greeting to the Av. S. members." (We must never forget that it was M. J. O'Dell who first suggested the idea of our supporting an orphan. By the way, Mrs. M. J. Willmott and George Gordon, both of Kansas City, have sent another dollar and another quarter for Charlie, and my friend, Geo. W. Dawson, of Maple Grove, Kan., sends a dollar for Charlie and another for Drusie Malott. From Lawson, Mo., comes a quarter to the orphan or the missionary as I may decide, from "A friend to orphans and missionaries." By the way, those words struck me as a very precious title. For after all, at the end of everything, I would rather wear that distinction—a friend of orphans and missionaries—than the title of President of the United States.)

Here is a note from our orphan Charlie, St. Louis: "I worked down at the Christian Pub. Co. last week, also yesterday at the St. Louis Star, fixing boxes of candy for the poor of this city. Miss Tena (the matron) and I received a jar of canned pears. I thank the Advance Society that they remember me. I have some new crutches. They came in a donation. I thank the Av. S. for the money they sent to be used for me. I learn I am going to get a Christmas gift." (He received the book from the society after writing this note.) S. A. Seat, Hematite, Mo., feels sure we can support our missionary, and to back his judgment sends a dollar. Ethelyn Hord, Grayson, Mo.: "I think it is fine for us to support a missionary. Drusie Malott is just a year older than I. It makes me think how very much braver and better she must be, to consecrate her life to be a missionary. Grace and I were trying just a little for the Adnah prize, but Grace forgot one of her rules when she was at the World's Fair. I did not go. I would almost as soon miss it as an Av. S. rule. During my last four quarters, I have read the Bible through, and some parts of it twice. Cannot sum up the history and poetry so well." (The announcement of the prize winners for the four best-kept consecutive reports of the Av. S. will be made soon. The prize of Adnah is again offered for the four best-kept reports, received after Feb. 11, 1905, and before Feb. 11, 1906. I name Feb. 11 because that's my birthday; so I'll not forget it.)

Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "I am teaching school again this winter—only five miles from home. My work is pressing me too much to do as much as I would like to do." (Still, she reaes always at least one chapter in the Bible a day.) Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind.: "I wish to join the Av. S. I will begin Jan. 1. When you miss a rule (hope I won't), can you commence a quarter the very next day?" (Yes, and that's the best time of all, unless you begin the same day.) "I have a Maltese kitten named Jupiter. I am 12. We had to give up our Christmas entertainment at school on account of scarlet fever." Harry Cash, Hood River, Oregon: "I passed the 7th grade examination; average, 98 and 2-11." Mabel G. Damerel, Walnut,

Kan.: "I send fifty cents, half for Charlie, half for our missionary. I wonder who got the prize for best reports? I wish all a happy new year." Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia.: "I just don't like to read history at all! It makes me so out of patience that civilized people can't find any other way of settling their disputes except by murdering each other. Longfellow is my favorite poet. How much are the Av. S. pins?" (75 cents apiece.) Ruth Day, Sparta, Mo.: "I inclose 10 cents for the orphan. I am almost an orphan myself, as my papa is dead; he died Nov. 21, 1903. I have learned to like history and poetry very well. My little brother and I got 'Great Americans and their Noble Deeds.' Would it do to read for our Av. S. history?" (Yes.) Mabel Conrad, Star, Idaho: "I have concluded to join the Av. S. I am 15. My sister Alta is 12; we began to keep the rules the first of January." Week after next, our new continued story will begin on this page; "A Week with the Woodneys"; it will run all year. I have sent $11.60 in Chinese money to Drusie Malott. As soon as I hear from her I will let you know. Of course you do not have to belong to the Av. S. to contribute to Charlie or Drusie.

Business Notes.

The Topical Leaflet contains the Midweek Prayer Meeting Topics for 1905 and sells for 25 cents per 100.

Do not forget us in your song book selections, as we carry more of the good song books of the brotherhood than any other house.

Adnah, a tale of the time of Christ, is having a good run, for it is one of J. Breckenridge Ellis' best, and was never before offered for the price, $1.

For devotional and helpful books we can always refer you to Alone with God, Half Hour Studies at the Cross, and Heavenward Way, 75 cents each.

The best proposition we have at seven cents is the Revised New Testament, but it is not the American Standard, their cheapest being 20 cents the copy.

We are very grateful to our friends for the fine holiday trade, and trust that all the books and parcels were received in good order, but hold ourselves in readiness for the proper corrections.

Have you seen the new catalogue with the miscellaneous books? Well, order anything you want from this house, and if it is on the market you shall have it sure, and at just the price offered by others.

Robert Gordon, a story of the Mexican war, is one of our attractive books of good fiction, and has never been offered until put in our hands this winter for less than $1.50, but we are postpaying it for $1.00.

The first edition of the Lesson Commentary is in the hands of the brethren, and more than half of the second edition will go out to-day, so that all those ordering should have them by the middle of the week coming.

The Communion Wafers are now in such packages as will carry safely and securely, and have three pounds in a tin, selling at 75 cents per tin, not prepaid. All having used them commend them very highly.

To all those ordering Topic cards for either the Endeavor or Bible school we must beg a little time, so of the Lesson Commentary orders, as the first edition is entirely exhausted, but the second is on the press, and will be off the coming week and mailed you in good time for the first Sunday in the new year.

We have the best New Testament for use in your schools that can be had for seven cents per copy, it being revised, too, and we have the same book in better binding at 15 cents and in large primer type at 35 cents, all postpaid, but when these are gone, the supply cannot be renewed at such prices.

One enthusiastic friend writes us, "I had two other Lesson Commentaries given me Christmas, but yours is the best of all." Over 400 pages, selling for only $1.00, handsomely bound in cloth, no "limp" business done here when it comes to a book that is good for life, and should be retained in one's library for years to come.

The Midweeks, better known as the Midweek Prayer Meeting Topics, are also a little late this year, but if our customers will wait on us a few days now, we promise to have all the orders filled in good time, and if all will be careful in ordering to specify just what they want, no mistake will be made. The price of the Midweek is 25 cents per dozen, $1.50 per 100.

The Y. P. S. C. E. societies are taking up the Bethany Reading Course as never before, and that means growth and development in the Lord and his work, and we are making special inducements to all such societies, believing it to pay all departments of the church to have our young people taught and developed in the work of the Christ and his church.

We are sending out the Normal Instructor, Part II, "The Christ," to many who are using them in connection with our lessons in the Bible school for the next six months, on the life of Jesus. The International Lessons are confined to the Gospel of John, but the Instructor takes up the life of the Christ systematically, and thus supplies for you what is lacking in John's testimony, but you will also need the part on The Land, Part IV, and the one discussing the People, Part VII. These are offered at the nominal price of 15 cents each, or $1.50 by the dozen, prepaid, or the set of seven for $1.00.

Remember, the Communion Wafers as now shipped have just three times the quantity in a good tin, and are packed to carry safely, and are sold in proportion at the same price, the three-pound tins selling at 75 cents, whereas the one-pound pasteboard boxes sold at 25 cents. Not one of those using these wafers will ever trouble the ladies again about "baking the loaf," and they should not, either.

The Topical Hand Book is a pocket manual, containing the Title, Golden Text, Outline, Background, and Principal point of each Sunday-school lesson for the year 1905; the Topical Outlines for the Midweek Prayer Meeting for the year as noted above; the Christian Endeavor Topics for the year, with carefully prepared Daily Readings on each, together with an analysis of each topic, and also the Junior Endeavor topics, with a series of Daily Readings, different from those of the Senior, containing more than 100 pages, all for 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen, prepaid. When wanting these, order the Topical Hand Book, and they are $3.00 per 100.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events.

Port Arthur.

It was on new year's day that General Stoessel, commander of the Russian forces in Port Arthur, sent a note to General Nogi, commander of the attacking Japanese force, stating that further resistance was useless, and asking for a conference regarding conditions of capitulation. Within two days the Japanese troops entered the besieged city. Here ends the first stage of the war. The siege has been a notable one. When war was declared between Japan and Russia, the first move was a naval attack on Port Arthur under Admiral Togo's command. The first engagement before that port was on Feb. 8, 1904. The Japanese fleet was ready; the Russian apparently was not. There was a rapid succession of Japanese victories, and within fifteen days after the first shot was fired the blockade of Port Arthur on the water side was complete. Then followed a series of movements by land which culminated in the extension of the Japanese line across the neck of the peninsula and the cutting off of the approach by land. This was on May 27, and from this point dates the real beginning of the siege. Gradually, and at immense cost of labor and lives, the line has been drawn more closely about the city. One by one the lines of outer defenses, which were supposed to make the stronghold almost impregnable, have been taken. Meanwhile, however, until recently public attention has been directed chiefly toward the more rapid and spectacular movement by which the Russian army was driven northward along the railway until at last it took refuge in Mukden. By the time Kuropatkin had conducted his masterly retreat to this position of present safety, the public eye was ready to turn again to the Port Arthur situation. Nogi was losing immense numbers of men, but he was carrying one commanding position after another. The advance was slow but irresistible. The defense was valiant but ineffectual. The city might have held out a little longer, but it would have been a useless waste of life. The reports have not yet indicated how serious was the condition of Port Arthur as regards ammunition and food supply, but it is hinted that the store of ammunition was completely exhausted.

The Value of the Victory.

The capture of Port Arthur does not by any means end the war. It puts the Japanese in possession of Russia's strongest port on the Pacific and shatters her hope of controlling an ice-free port in the far east. It gives Japan a position from which she can dominate Korea and exercise a more potent influence in Chinese affairs. It satisfies a grudge which Japan has cherished against Russia ever since, in 1894, she took Port Arthur from China and was compelled to relinquish it, chiefly through Russia's insistence. It gives Japan all she needs on the mainland if the war were to end here, and gives her a valuable base of operations if it is to be pushed further. An enthusiastic Japanese was heard to declare, some months ago, that the army of his people would advance victoriously to the shores of Lake Baikal and there lay down terms of peace to her retreating foe, declaring to Russian power "thus far shalt thou come and no farther." But that was not official. It is to be hoped that the Japanese have no ambition to conquer Siberia. They do not need it. They will be fortunate if they can bring the war to an end—and the sooner the better—on terms which will allow them to keep what they have now won. It is impossible to say what attitude Russia will take toward peace at the present time. The internal reformers—represented by the recent meeting of the zemstvo presidents—will do what they can to urge immediate peace, that the country may be spared the burden of a longer war and that the humiliated government may be the more readily moved to grant the desired reforms. But all the jingoism of the nation and all its pride and imperialism rise up to demand that the disgrace of this great defeat be wiped out by victories yet to be won. That is always one great obstacle to making peace, for war is like gambling. The winners want to go on because they are winning and can afford to go on. The losers want to go on in the hope of retrieving their losses. According to the Russian code, an officer who surrenders a fort must be court-martialed and General Stoessel is to be treated accordingly. The prevalent opinion is that he has acquitted himself with great credit in his difficult position, but the trial can do no harm if fairly conducted, and it will serve to determine whether proper preparations were made for withstanding the siege.

Tom Watson's Magazine.

Tom Watson, late Populist candidate for president, is out with an advertisement announcing his purpose to start a magazine for the propagation of his ideas of government and to prepare for the campaign of 1908. It will doubtless be interesting reading, for Mr. Watson has considerable command of the English language, a body of well settled convictions about the Republican and Democratic parties, and no hesitancy whatever about expressing his views. His remarks about the Democracy during the recent campaign were much quoted by Republican speakers and writers, and his comments on the Republicans might have been used with equal satisfaction by the Democrats, had not the latter been rather anxious for the public to forget Mr. Watson's existence. Most of that public apparently did so on election day, for he received only about 2,000 votes outside of his own state of Georgia. This makes his journalistic venture a matter of somewhat more doubtful success than was Mr. Bryan's paper, started after a campaign in which, although defeated, he received several million votes.

Carnegie and Corelli.

Miss Marie Corelli, exponent of a highly modern type of literature and at present a resident of Stratford-on-Avon, has failed in her attempt to persuade the local authorities of that historic town to refuse a library offered by Mr. Carnegie—thus proving that the pen is not always mightier than the cheque-book. Miss Corelli bitterly complains that the memory of Shakespeare will be dishonored and the shrine at which the poet's lovers have long worshiped will be polluted by the erection of a Carnegie library in Henley street. Now of course the real joke of it is that, by any circumstance, those three names should be brought within the scope of one sentence or those three heterogeneous personalities summoned before the mind in one group—Shakespeare, Carnegie and Corelli. But Miss Corelli's criticism does not seem to us well grounded, and that for two reasons. In the first place, Stratford has already been swept clear of any Shakespearean or Elizabethan atmosphere, except such as clings of necessity to one or two buildings, by the stream of tourists and the swarm of greedy exploiters of the Shakespearean tradition. Even the trail of the millionaire can scarcely be more vulgar (and vulgarity is the ground of her criticism) than the avarice which seeks to coin into excessive profit the pilgrim's reverence for the great poet. Anyone who thinks that the people of Stratford are simple villagers wrapped up in a great affection for Shakespeare and guarding his memory as the peasants of Oberammergau guard the traditions of their Passion Play, is much mistaken. Most of them are keeping "Shakespeare hotels" or "Shakespeare boarding houses," or "Shakespeare livery stables," or selling "Anne Hathaway cigars" or "Shakespeare souvenirs." There is no likelihood that anything will be done which will add to the vulgarity of Stratford if the eager pursuit of money is vulgarity. In the second place, it does not seem quite right to view the matter as if the town ought to be solely a museum of Shakespearean antiquities. Stratford is a town of eight or ten thousand people. It is asking a good deal that they should all their lives eschew the comforts and conveniences of modern life so that we who go there for a day some time may find the ancient atmosphere as we expected it. If they need a library, as they certainly do, let them have it—and, by the way, it would be an interesting thing if the donor would provide a special endowment for the establishment of a great collection of Shakespeareana. Then there might appropriately be installed several sets of the works of that other distinguished resident of Stratford, Miss Corelli herself. In these ways the criticism might be silenced.

Enforcing the Law. The statute books have not upon their pages many bad laws; the trouble with this world is that there are too many bad or indifferent officials in charge of the (non-)enforcement of the good laws. So numerous are these winkers at non-observance of statute conditions that every little while, when someone insists that the letter of the law be fulfilled, there arises a note of surprise. Judge Heydt, for instance, has caused quite a commotion among the liquor sellers of Carbon Co., Pa., and of course a sympathizing or an indifferent lot of people by his refusal to renew the licenses of twenty-three applicants. The Judge had evidence that there had been violations of the liquor laws, and in pursuance of his fair warning a year ago that he would not continue a license to any one against whom was presented evidence of violation of the law, he has, without any arbitrary or hasty action, made it clear that the commonwealth's citizens as a whole have rights that the individuals must not play with. Sunday selling in violation of the law has been an open scandal all over our country. The evidence in the Carbon county case was procured through private organization and not through officials whose business it is to know about infractions of the law and report the same. Graft and boodle and supineness still play their part. But we are thankful that there are judges like Mr. Heydt who have the courage and the will to do their simple duty.

Muzzling the Press. We are one with Governor Pennypacker in wishing that certain newspapers might be suppressed. But we do not agree with the governor's "press act" by which he would give the coup de grace to certain Pennsylvania papers. His measure is contrary to the fundamental principles of the constitution. The Czar of Russia may close the doors of a printing office and the Sultan put his black-mark over the whole of a newspaper. But this is a free country so far as the newspaper is concerned, any abuse of its privileges to be punished by the law of libel or non carriage in Uncle Sam's mails. Governor Pennypacker's proposal would be exceedingly dangerous if it had any chance of becoming law. It would be going back to the days of the Star Chamber, and, evil as many of the practices of some of our newspapers are, we are not ready for that.

The Evangelistic Campaign. "We have within our churches at the present time, imperfect as they are, a force sufficient for the Christian conquest of the world." So says the Rev. W. J. Dawson, who was a visitor from London to this country last summer and fall. And the announcement is made that Mr. Dawson has just accepted the invitation of the Committee on Evangelism of the Congregational churches appointed by the National Council. He has cabled Dr. Hillis that he has resigned his pastorate in London and will sail for America Jan. 25. The fact is an interesting one. Mr. Dawson is a cultured man, and was long a Methodist preacher, several years of his work being at the great Wesleyan church not a stone's throw from the house of Timothy Coop and our Southport church. Feeling the fetters of the Methodist itineracy Mr. Dawson withdrew from the fellowship and joined the Congregationalists, being called to one of the finest churches in north London. He is quite a litterateur and a thinker on broad lines. But in his latest pronouncement he says: "I find myself at home in a Salvation Army meeting because I find there the vital knowledge of God's dealings with the soul, and the expression of a religious experience that is as old as the cross. My mind concentrates itself more and more on positive truth, and my effort as a minister of Christ, on the efficiency of the accomplished purpose. I am much more concerned to save one harlot from shame, one drunkard from his folly, one prodigal son from his defilement of the far country, than to discuss those speculations about truth which after all interest but a few, and are not helpful even to them." That is a noble statement, and surely the Congregational churches in this country will reap good results from an evangelistic campaign with such a leader. We believe in the educated evangelist, as in the educated pastor. There is no valid reason why culture and evangelism should be counted as opposites. Given great faith and true fervor, the evangelist should be the more successful if he has good intellectual equipment. As Mr. Dawson says: "Can we refuse the deduction that evangelism has everything to gain and nothing to lose by the closest possible alliance with culture? And in the conditions of our own time with its constantly rising standard of education, is not the union of culture with evangelism absolutely necessary if evangelism is once more to become a national force?" There must be preachers and evangelists adapted to all classes of the great people outside the churches.

The Colorado Muddle. The political situation in Colorado is one that perhaps those outside the state and not closely following all the moves can not justly grasp. But behind the muddle of the Colorado legislature there stands out one glowing fact—fraud. There is no denial of this in general though each party will deny a special charge against itself. As we go to press Mr. Adams has been declared governor by the legislature, though there may be a contest. Mr. Peabody makes some recommendations that would, had they been in force, have prevented altogether, probably, the shameful conditions now obtaining. He asks for the passage of a bill providing a modern primary and registration law and the consideration of the advisability of using voting machines. From actual observation at the polls in Colorado the writer of this article knows that fraud is not uncommon.

Governor Folk has begun his regime with the signs that the Missouri Idea will count for something in this state. The eyes of the whole country will watch the young governor's work. If he have the backbone to fight on for a righteous and clean official and civic life he will have won all the honor that a man need aspire to. There is still plenty of work to do for a politician with the fear of God in his heart.

Just think! Mrs. Astor, one of the elite, has sent 1,000 invitations to a ball. 'Tis a swelled "400."

The railroad rate question is to be dealt with by Congress on broad lines.

Education Day.

In this number of the paper we lay special emphasis upon Education Day. This is the latest candidate for a permanent place in our religious calendar. Our first organized interest, naturally, was that of home missions, and after this came foreign missions. Both of these have well established days to which the churches are responding with increasing liberality year by year. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has its recognized day, as have also our Benevolent Association and Ministerial Relief. But, strange to say, that which was first in our work, and without which our cause never could have made the progress it did, namely, Christian education, has not even yet been accorded a day in our calendar by all the churches. The third Lord's day in January is the day fixed upon by the American Christian Education Society, formed under the direction of our National Convention, as Education Day. Last year quite a number of the churches recognized the day by sermons preached from their pulpits, and offerings for the cause, but it is hoped that a much larger number of churches will observe the day this year than ever before.

It need not be said to the intelligent reader that nothing is more vital to the permanent success of our cause than the endowment and equipment of our colleges to which we look for the education and training of our ministers, missionaries and other Christian workers. The times in which we live demand men of the very best educational equipment as well as of character and consecration. Not to furnish such men is to yield leadership in every department of thought to others. If the cause which we plead is what we claim it to be—a message for the church and for the world, to-day—we owe it to such cause to give it the advantage of the very ablest and most intelligent advocacy. This means that we must have not only a larger number of thoroughly educated men and women for positions of leadership, but a larger number in the ranks of our membership, who have been blessed with the benefits of liberal education.

Our colleges have been doing, and are still doing a most excellent work with the means at their command, but they need larger endowment, and libraries, laboratories, museums, and other equipments of the modern college. Time was when we were not able to furnish these, but we cannot plead that excuse longer. We are abundantly able, if we would but devote part of our wealth to that purpose.

It is the purpose of the American Christian Education Society to stimulate gifts toward all our colleges. It does not designate to what institution the churches shall send their offerings, but it insists only that an offering be made for the benefit of Christian education and sent to such college as the church may choose, and that the claims of our colleges both for money and patronage, be presented by the preachers. As a rule, it would be wise, perhaps, for the churches to send their offerings to the college or colleges in their own state. Where there is more than one, they must make their choice, considering the needs of the institution and the work it is doing. Our chief need in the way of education is a trained ministry and the schools that are devoting themselves specially to that work should receive due consideration from the churches.

It would be a most encouraging sign of progress if we could be able to record in a few weeks that a large number of the churches throughout the brotherhood had observed this day in behalf of Christian education, in which prayer was offered for our colleges, their claims presented and an offering made for their benefit. Our best churches will be most likely to respond to this appeal.

The New Evangelism.

In our article on this subject last week we gave it as our conviction that there is a new evangelism as contrasted with the old evangelism which has prevailed for many centuries. In that article we contended that the New Testament evangelism, plus the necessary adjustment to present conditions, is the new evangelism. To point out in what respects the old evangelism is giving place to the new, is the object of this and other succeeding articles.

There are certain conceptions which necessarily underlie all evangelistic efforts and these conceptions determine, in a large measure, the character of the evangelistic efforts which grow out of them. These ideas need not be formulated or stated, but they exist, nevertheless, either implicitly or explicitly, in every system of evangelism. Given the conception which any religious body holds of God, of man, of sin, and of salvation, and it would not be difficult to determine the character of its evangelism. Anyone acquainted with the history of religious thought knows that there has been a pronounced change upon all these subjects, even within the last half century. It would be a strange thing if the change which has taken place in these fundamental conceptions had produced no change in the methods by which the church presents the gospel to men with a view to their conversion.

1. Concerning God. The idea of the Supreme Being which prevailed for centuries was that of a king or monarch, who, in the exercise of His supreme sovereignty, had issued certain decrees deciding the unconditional salvation of a certain elect number of the human race and passing by the remainder, leaving them to their awful doom, and this without any reference to the moral character of the parties thus elected and reprobated. It is easy to see how this idea of God must necessarily control the character of the evangelism practiced by those holding it. Some of us are old enough to have seen the practical working of this theory. Such a view of God is utterly impossible at the present time, except in a few minds which are still held captive by the creed of Calvin. It has given place to the fatherhood of God. The God whom enlightened Christians worship to-day is the Father-God revealed by Jesus Christ, who "so loved the world"—the whole world of mankind—that He gave His Son to redeem it. Is it possible for men holding this view of God, as no respecter of persons, and who willeth not the death of any, but that all should turn and live, to preach the gospel in the same way that it was preached under the old idea of God?

2. Concerning Christ and His Mission. The old theology presented Christ as so supernatural and so unnatural a being as to put Him beyond the reach of men and out of touch with human sympathies. It sought to honor Him by practically robbing Him of His humanity. Mariolatry, or the worship of Mary, had its origin in this false conception of Christ, who, being removed from human touch, gave place to His mother, who was made practically the mediator between God and man. He was believed, however, to be more merciful than His Father, and that He came to earth to suffer death on the cross that He might appease the wrath of God and reconcile Him to man. How different all this is from the modern conception! Jesus was as truly human as He was divine. He is the Son of Man as well as the Son of God. His was the divine life lived under human conditions. He is a brother to every struggling, sorrowing and aspiring human being. The vilest sinner may touch the hem of His garment and be healed. He came into the world not to appease the wrath of an angry God, but to show us the Father, and to unveil His heart of infinite love and compassion.

3. Concerning the Holy Spirit. Of course under the view of God presented above, the Holy Spirit would be conceived of as acting in the same arbitrary fashion, in the conversion of men without their consent or co-operation. In the better conception of the Father and of the Son, the Holy Spirit, otherwise called the Spirit of truth—the last manifestation of God in history—is understood as moving upon the mind and heart of man in harmony with the laws of his rational and spiritual nature, and especially as acting through the great facts and revelations of the gospel to accomplish his purposes.

4. Concerning Man. According to the old theology, man was so wholly depraved that his agency was not considered in the matter of his salvation.

He was passive, not active. He was incapable of thinking a good thought, of doing a good deed, or of believing on Christ, without being first regenerated by the direct impact of the Holy Spirit. Hence men were often said to be converted while fleeing from God or while asleep. The present view of man is that, though sinful and needing salvation, he has in him the capacity, when it is awakened, of hungering and thirsting after God, and the ability to believe on and obey Him. God has equipped man with the mental and moral faculties which enable him to respond to divine truth and love, when they are presented to him, and he is held accountable for not doing so.

5. Concerning Salvation. Salvation is no longer the saving of an elect few from future punishment, but the bringing of man into right relations with God here, so that he may share the life of God, even on earth. In its widest significance, salvation includes not only forgiveness of sins, but the bringing in of the new life, which destroys the love of sin and its dominion over us. In other words, salvation is character—Christian character, of which Christ is the perfect pattern—and this involves man's voluntary co-operation with God, and his free choice of the good, rather than the evil.

Not to proceed farther with the enumeration of these fundamental truths, it is easy enough to see that our conception of such truths is bound to influence our view and our practice of evangelism. We do not mean that the old ideas referred to above are entirely obsolete, but they are certainly growing old, and are "ready to vanish away," because of the incoming of newer and truer and more efficient ideas on these subjects. To the extent that the old views remain evangelism is hampered to-day. It is the failure of the old methods growing out of these ideas that is causing thoughtful men in all the denominations to inquire for something better. What that something is, we hope to indicate still further before these articles are finished.

Union of Free Baptists and Disciples.

VII. Some Reasons for Such Union.

We have thus far been dealing with the obstacles to the proposed union, and with the method of overcoming them. The ground has probably been sufficiently covered for the present. If, however, any member of either body who has been following these articles has some additional subject to suggest which needs consideration as a preparation for union, we will be glad to give it attention. Or, if any reader would like further information on any subject discussed, we will be glad to give it if we can do so. But we will close the present series of articles with a brief consideration of some of the reasons which make the union of Free Baptists and Disciples both desirable and practicable.

1. There is much in the origin and history of the two movements which indicates their kinship in spirit and aim. Both had their origin in a protest against existing abuses and departures from the Christianity of the New Testament. In Dr. Ball's able articles recently printed in the Christian-Evangelist on the "Origin of the Free Baptists," he says: "This body of Christians originated in New England as a protest against serious departures from the gospel of Christ." The same thing is true of the Disciples of Christ. In both cases there was rejection of the authority of human creeds and an appeal to the New Testament as the only authority for the guidance of Christian churches in their faith and practice. In each case there was the throwing off of the shackles of ecclesiastical tyranny and of the bondage of tradition, and the assertion and exercise of the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free.

There have been many similar experiences in the history of the two bodies. "For a long time," writes Dr. Ball, "they were averse to forming a separate denomination, and were only forced to it by repulsion from the regular Baptists." That only differs from the experience of the Disciples in the fact that the fellowship of the originators of the movement, in our case, was with the Presbyterians, but later it was with the Baptists, with whom they would have remained had they found room and hospitality for the principles of reform which they advocated. Again, Dr. Ball says: "They took no denominational name, but spoke of their churches as Christian churches, Baptist churches, New Light churches, any name which identified them." From the beginning our churches have been known as Christian churches, churches of Christ, and the members as Disciples of Christ, Christians and Reformers. Of course during the time the movement was merged with the Baptists, the churches were designated as Baptist. Both bodies have made mistakes in finding their way back to New Testament faith and practice, but they have steadily kept that goal in view. They have gradually corrected the extremes into which some of their advocates have run, and "have risen," to quote from Dr. Ball once more, "to higher, more scriptural, wiser and better thoughts and views." It does seem that two bodies, having so much in common in their origin and history, ought not to find it difficult to coalesce.

2. In their understanding and use of the two ordinances—baptism and the Lord's supper—there is a bond of unity. Baptism, a symbol of Christ's burial and resurrection; its proper subjects, penitent believers; its purpose not to impart new life, but to manifest it, symbolize it, and become the divine pledge of acceptance and forgiveness. The Lord's supper, another symbol, showing Christ's death, to be observed in memory of Him by all who believe on Him, each examining himself and none debarred by ecclesiastical edict. The Disciples make it the central fact of the Lord's day worship, but do not make the frequency of its observance a test of fellowship or a condition of union.

3. The geographical distribution of the two bodies makes their union at once more practicable and more desirable. The union would give our Free Baptist brethren a large and rapidly increasing representation in the West, and the Disciples a good and substantial representation in the East, where they are least known. There would be little or no complications arising out of consolidation of congregations. In the few cases where this would be necessary, the spirit of unity would be equal to the emergency, as is already being shown in the tentative union of congregations of the two bodies. Each college of the two bodies is needed where it stands, and all of them would profit by the union.

4. Finally, it is clearly the Lord's will that His disciples should unite and work together when it is practicable for them to do so, without the sacrifice of any truth, or of a good conscience. This, after all, is the crowning reason. Every division healed among His followers, gives added joy to His heart, and added efficiency to His church. As He prayed for the union of His disciples, let us pray for it and do what we can to hasten it. It is in this spirit of obedience to our Lord's wish and prayer, that we have written this series of articles. If they shall in any small degree further the fulfillment of His will, to His name be the praise.

Editor's Easy Chair.

"Reserve a seat for me in the Editor's Easy Chair circle!" This request is coming in on us like snow-flakes in a January snow-storm. All right! We are glad to say there is plenty of room, for there is nothing small about our Easy Chair circle, and best of all, it has that expansive quality which enables it to always widen out and welcome a newcomer. We imagine we can see behind every one of these requests a pair of bright eyes, a cheery face and a hearty hand-clasp. Here is one hailing from the "Sunny South," who wants to express her appreciation of the Easy Chair, and tell how she has been helped by it. "Though both sick and homesick, and left alone many a day, as most preachers' wives are, often, through the Easy Chair I have lived again the days of girlhood and saw again the scenes of youth. In those memories and scenes there was strength, and I feel that you should know of it as a new year's message of encouragement." We hope our readers will form the habit of talking back at us, whether for print or otherwise.

We are often helped, encouraged and guided by confidential letters which we do not publish, and which were not intended for publication. Religious newspapers might be made more interesting and profitable if there were a little more reciprocity between the editor and his readers. In this respect a preacher has the advantage of an editor. He both sees and feels the effect of his discourse upon his hearers, while the editor often remains in blissful ignorance of the results of his writings on the minds of his readers. He would be wiser, though he might not always be happier, if he knew what his readers were thinking and saying about his articles. The worst thing, however, that can befall the production of one's pen is that it be ignored, and remain unread. Of course, no reader of the Christian-Evangelist would be guilty of such discourtesy as that!

If the motives which guide the readers of religious papers in subscribing for any particular paper, and in discontinuing the same, were all known and written out, it would make a curious but no doubt interesting study. But they will never be written out in full. The true reason is not always given by the subscriber, and perhaps he is not always fully conscious of his underlying motive in choosing this or that paper, or in discontinuing the same. Many readers discontinue their paper for a season, imagining that they can find better spiritual food in another journal, but after a little experience they become dissatisfied and return to their "first love." But the saddest fact of all is that there are so many who feel no need for a religious paper and have no relish for it. One rule we have sought to adhere to, strictly, and that is to appeal always to the highest and best there is in men, and never to their prejudices nor passions. Reason, conscience, honor, the love of truth, the desire for righteousness, the heroic and the magnanimous—these are qualities to be found in varying degrees of development in every one, and to touch these higher qualities and to minister to their development is the highest office that any religious journal can perform for its readers. But in the exercise of this high office, the editor is bound to give offence to some who do not find in the paper that which harmonizes with their leading passions and ideas. It may strike a higher note than their nature has been keyed up to. What then? Well, if the editor should have his wagon hitched to a star, as Emerson advised, he will pursue his starward course in spite of every wind of doctrine or prejudice that may seek to blow him in the contrary direction. Vessels which sail for a distant port must be guided, not by the direction of the wind, but by the compass and the star.

On a recent trip down the west bank of the Mississippi, by rail, from Hannibal to St. Louis, we were struck, as we had often been before, with the beauty of the rounded hills and an occasional precipitous bluff, which hedge in the course of the Father of Waters, along that part of its long journey to the gulf. It was a clear evening, and as the sun went down behind the western hills, leaving the sky aglow with his reflected beams, with every tree, and rock, and crag, or other object along the crest of the hills, silhouetted against the opalescent sky, the scene was one to awaken the imagination. As we sat at the car window gazing out at these entrancing views, we felt the spell of the mighty past come upon us. On this stream once floated the canoe of the red man, when he was master of this region, and these hills have often echoed back the war-whoop of the dusky chieftains. A little later and the flatboats and rafts floated down the furs and lumber of the upper Mississippi to the straggling settlements of whites along its shores. Later still, the slow-moving steamboats, puffing with their cargo, carried up this river, and the turbid Missouri, the earliest settlers seeking homes in the wild, uninhabited wilderness which we now call "Imperial Missouri"! In those early days what mystery lay beyond these hills! Only a few hardy pioneers had threaded their way into the interior, and they brought back tales of wild game, of fertile lands, of mighty forests, and a land well watered with beautiful streams. Then came the era of the great Mississippi steamers, floating palaces, carrying traders and travelers and loaded with productions of farm and forest, until the iron horse drove them out of trade. Such was the panoramic view of history which passed before us under the spell of these old hills that sentinel the winding way of the Mississippi.

Last night while we all slept Nature played one of her tricks, which she delights to inflict on mortals. Silently as the stars move in their courses, she marshaled her clouds, filling them with the treasures of snow; and sifted it down through the darkness on forest, field, city and country, as noiselessly as the tread of the tame squirrels across our lawn. This morning a white blanket covers the earth hiding all its defects, and forming many a fantastic figure on fence and shrub and tree. It is as if Nature, from some motherly instinct, were saying to all the young and growing things in her vast realm: "It is bleak and cold, my children, and you are in danger of freezing. I will therefore cover you up with a warm blanket of snow, and you will be protected from the stormy blast, and may carry on the silent processes of growth." And so the tender wheat, and the roots of grasses and shrubs lie warm and snug under the white coverlet, like children snuggled into bed on a cold winter night to sleep and dream of springtime and flowers. Thus Nature, even in her sterner aspects, has a beneficent office to perform, just as many of the hardships of life work for the good of men. If our charity were sufficient to cover up the faults of our fellowmen, even as the snow hides all the ugly places in the landscape and glorifies each humble twig, or stone, or shrub, how much sweeter human life would be, and how much more like heaven the earth would become!

Notes and Comments.

The greatest thing in this world is man. The greatest work in this world is to educate and develop him—all of him. God has been educating the race through all history. That is the meaning of all his providential guidance of the nations. Christianity is but an advance stage of education. It introduces the world's greatest Teacher. Christ is more than teacher, of course, but he is pre-eminently that. The church is more than a school for Christian nurture and education, but it is that, or it falls far short of its mission. The church, acting collectively, or through its individual members, has founded colleges to carry on the work of Christian education more efficiently and to a higher degree than it is possible to do it in a local church. The church is doing this work through its colleges. Is not this fact often forgotten by the local churches? It is to remind the churches of their relation to Christian education and their obligation to the colleges that are doing this work for them, that we devote this number to education day. When all our churches recognize their obligation to our colleges, and discharge that obligation, Christian education among us will rest on its proper foundation; and not until then.

St. Louis has organized a Million Club, composed of the leading business corporations of the city, the object of which is to increase the population of the city to a million. One would think that St. Louis had reached a size when mere bigness would not be considered a matter of first concern. We would rather see a Law and Order, or Civic Righteousness Club, organized to en force the law against saloons, brothels and gambling houses, and to eradicate official dishonesty and civic indifference and neglect from our city. The time will come, and perhaps is now here, when we ought to be more concerned in getting many of the people now in the city into the country, rather than in getting more people from the country into our city. A city's growth in population will take care of itself, when it is rightly governed, but it requires everlasting vigilance to make it a decent place in which to live, and bring up one's family in safety.

The Needs of the Churches

By Hill M. Bell

In less than one hundred years the Disciples of Christ have perfected an organization that at present numbers 1,230,000 members. This means a net gain in each year of nearly 15,000 communicants. When we consider the obstacles that have been overcome to achieve this extraordinary result, we can but be deeply impressed. We are confronted with what may be not inappropriately termed a present day miracle. What might have been accomplished if a few of the more serious hindrances had not been suffered to continue, we can only imagine.

The chief of these obstacles has been the lack of enough trained preachers for the ministry. In order to overcome this obstacle, many good men have been pressed into service who were unprepared for the holy office of minister of the gospel. We do not disparage what they have done. Let us give to them all the honor due for the service which they have rendered, but let us not overlook the fact that these brethren were not able to attack the large problems that would have been open to solution by men of better equipment. The Disciples of Christ have churches in scarcely one-half of the good towns of the middle west. It would seem very desirable that we have a good church in each of the towns, yet if these churches were established to-morrow, we could not find competent preachers to fill these additional pulpits. No doubt men could be found who would undertake to draw the salary that should always go with a good pulpit, but they would surely do more harm than good. Five hundred incompetent preachers in as many centers of population, would do incalculable injury to the cause. We now have far more churches than competent preachers. It is, perhaps, true that a large percentage of the churches that are now supporting a man for part time would, under competent ministers, be able very soon to pay a preacher for his whole time. Our evangelists are adding members to the church so fast that we are not able to supply needful pastors to teach these new recruits. This serves as a positive bar to the establishment of churches in centers of population where we now have no church. This condition ought not to suggest that we have fewer evangelists, but rather that we should have more able pastors.

But where are these needed ministers of the gospel to come from? What provision has the church for training men in such a way as to insure its own perpetuity? Reasons have been given by some for believing that there is danger of our becoming a "disappearing brotherhood." It seems to me, however, that no cause yet assigned as tending to this deplorable result is so menacing as that of our inability to supply our pulpits with trained pastors. Let us for a moment look at the demands made upon the few Bible colleges of the brotherhood that are endeavoring to furnish the supply of preachers, teachers, evangelists, missionaries, pastoral helpers, etc., that are needed to carry on the work of the church.

HILL M. BELL.

The need of a more competent ministry is becoming more apparent every day. It is utterly impossible to supply the increasing demand made upon the colleges of the Bible at the present time. Churches are growing in strength, and are now demanding stronger men than they were willing to accept a few years ago. We are losing some churches because of our inability to furnish them with energetic, intelligent pastors. The head of one of the leading Bible colleges of our brotherhood said to me recently that he could not begin to supply ministers for established churches as fast as they were called for. He had a great many young men in his department who were willing to do what they could, but their training was such as to make it impossible for him to recommend them to a good church. One of the most serious troubles of this particular, is that of taking our young men out of the Bible college before they have had time to get sufficient training. The demand is so great that the young preacher becomes imbued with the idea that he is fitted for the work because he may be able to draw the salary of a competent pastor. To circumvent this evil, it has been suggested that the Bible college faculty refuse to allow young men of inadequate training to go out to preach. At a recent state convention in Iowa, a committee was appointed to co-operate with the Bible college of Drake university with a view to placing such restrictions around the Bible college students as to make it impossible for them to secure a church before they were ready to do the work. It is doubtful if the restrictions adopted can be made wholly effective for the reason that if a young man cannot remain in school and take charge of a church, he will oftentimes stay out of school in order to do so, because our churches, rather than have no preaching, will hire any one that offers. We are not disposed to criticise the churches for this, but rather to call attention to one of our great weaknesses.

We need evangelists. Recently our national convention organized a board of evangelization. One of the first difficulties that will confront this board is the lack of competent and trained evangelists. Where will they get their supply? Where will the training necessary to fit a man to evangelize be secured? There is but one place to go, and that is to the Bible colleges of the church. If this national board of evangelization is to do effective work, the first step taken will be to provide for adequate training for evangelists. They will not find at the present time, in any of our colleges, the needed equipment for this work. It should be then their first aim to equip the Bible colleges in such a way that they may do this work reasonably well.

We need missionaries—missionaries better trained than those we have been sending out in the past. I do not mean by this that none of our missionaries have been fitted for the work they have been sent out to do, but rather that there should be a higher standard demanded of those who shall go in the future than has been required of those who have gone in the past. Many mistakes have been made on our mission fields. The danger of a repetition of these should be reduced to a minimum. Where are these missionaries to be trained? The answer comes from our mission boards in their constant appeals to the Bible colleges for young men and young women trained for this work. No doubt more money for missions could be spent wisely upon our present missionary force but the better the missionary the wiser the expenditure. It is therefore questionable if money spent to keep incompetent missionaries in the field is wisely spent. If present conditions continue the mission boards will be under the necessity of sending out poorly prepared men and women.

We need pastoral helpers, and we need teachers in our colleges and universities, Christian men and women who shall assist in doing the work of the church better than it has been done in the past. We realize that in all the great callings of the land there is a dearth of competent workers, but it seems that in the work which the church of Christ has undertaken to do there is an unusual lack of well fitted men and women. We must therefore begin earnestly to correct this serious defect in our plan of work. We must have better Bible colleges that these needed workers may be prepared for efficient, conscientious service.

It may be well here to speak of the character of the Bible colleges upon which the church is dependent for its trained workers. Can any one of the church of Christ point to a well equipped Bible college in the whole brotherhood? Can anyone point to one of any sort that is being supported by the brotherhood? Can anyone point to one that is properly equipped with the necessary buildings and apparatus for effective work? Can we find anywhere a Bible college that is properly endowed? Is there one in the whole brotherhood that has more than three or four competent instructors, where from eight to ten are needed? The answer to all of these questions must be an unqualified "No"; there is not a single Bible college that has the necessary buildings or equipment, the endowment or faculty, that can command the respect even of ourselves.

We are actually going into debt in the Bible college of Drake university at the rate of more than $4,000 a year. The university cannot be expected to continue this policy longer. The brotherhood must come forward with enough money to make up this deficiency, either in endowment funds or contributions directly from the churches, or we must cripple the department by dispensing with necessary teachers. The college ought not to be compelled to charge tuition. It is a well known fact that nine out of ten young men who are preparing for the ministry could not stay in school if they had to pay regular tuition rates. Of course, they might contract heavy debts for their schooling, and thus place a heavy burden upon themselves that would hinder them in their best work in the immediate years following their school life. But this course is not to be advised in view of the small remuneration that the young preacher must expect during the first years of his ministry. While we still have tuition practically free in the Bible college of Drake university, we have changed the schedule rates so that the Bible college student pays three-fourths of the regular tuition rates of the College of Liberal Arts. It was found upon investigation that very many of those who came to train for the ministry needed academic and collegiate work before they could take up the work of the Bible college intelligently; but the fact that tuition was free in the Bible college and was practically fifty dollars per year in the other colleges, induced many of these young men to take Bible studies only when they should have been taking academic and collegiate studies. In order to take away this temptation for the young men to do the poorest thing for themselves, the Bible college faculty advised that three-fourths of the college tuition be charged and that Bible college men be permitted to select their studies from any of the work offered in the College of Liberal Arts (and Academy. We ought to have enough income to make it possible for us to give free tuition to the Bible college men and women in any department of the university. Is it not the duty of the churches to make this provision?

It is our hope that education day may come to mean to the people of the churches an opportunity to make an offering to the highest form of missions, to that which stands at the foundation of all missionary effort. We believe that, when the membership of the church of Christ come to understand the true relation of the Bible colleges of the brotherhood to the churches, the funds so long withheld will be freely turned over to the stewardship of these schools, and that they will meet fully the needs of the institutions that have been so long neglected. We trust that a better day for all of our institutions of learning is dawning.

A Dozen Great Reasons.

By HARRY G. HILL.

A dozen great reasons for what? Why every Christian church in America should take an annual offering for the American Christian Education Society, and why the roll of individual contributors should be greatly increased both in numbers and in the amounts given:

1. BECAUSE of that for which this society stands and which it represents. It is the friend of Christian education and the champion of the religious element in all education. Its work means an educated ministry, an educated laity and a grand army of educated missionaries both for the home and the foreign field.

2. BECAUSE of the magnitude of the work. Almost two score educational institutions are now being supported, in part, by this society.

3. BECAUSE of the importance of this work. No form of Christian service, or of Christian beneficence, is more fundamental or more necessary. It is essential to the upbuilding of our cause and Christ's kingdom.

4. BECAUSE the work of the society is increasing all the while. Never were the demands upon the society greater than to-day. Never were the opportunities opening before it so urgent or so inspiring as at the present time. The future is big with possibilities, if only the needed funds for aggressive work can be procured.

5. BECAUSE in order to reach the masses it is necessary to found and maintain institutions in the midst of our young people, or within easy reach. Ninety per cent of those who attend college go to an institution within 100 miles of home.

6. BECAUSE these schools, wisely distributed as they are, extending their beneficent influence over wide areas of country, and reaching as they do large numbers of young people, are sadly hampered for want of sufficient funds. If only the needed money could be procured for enlargement—for buildings, endowments, apparatus and teachers' salaries—we could ere long boast of a vastly increased army of young ministers and Christian workers.

7. BECAUSE scarcely one of our colleges has sufficient endowment. Almost all are dependent on scattered and spare gifts to lift them out of annual deficits incurred in running expenses. Ought not these institutions to be helped?

8. BECAUSE the great givers of the country are not giving to these small institutions. They must be supported by the small gifts of the masses, until they have grown large enough to attract the attention and good will of the wealthy.

9. BECAUSE of the economy of all this work. Our colleges cost far less per capita than the state universities.

10. BECAUSE of the missionary character of this work. Multitudes of the students in our institutions come from non-religious or denominational homes. Yet it is a rare thing for any young person of either sex to enter any one of these schools without coming out not only finely educated in intellect, but, better still, soundly converted to God and consecrated to an active, earnest Christian life. This is a great evangelistic work, a great soul saving agency.

11. BECAUSE so many of the best and most useful men and women of the country come up from lowly conditions, through such missionary institutions, to positions of eminence and power. Dr. Henry Hopkins, of Williams college, recently said, "It is a striking fact that sixty per cent of the brainiest Americans who have risen to prominence and success are graduates of colleges whose names are scarcely known outside their own states." Our own colleges have a rich legacy in a grand army of these "brainiest Americans" and such will be needed even more in the future, if possible, than in the past or present.

12. Because the Education society, through its institutions and the men it helps to educate for the ministry and foreign fields, is a base of supply for all our great organized work throughout the world. Without it where would the American and Foreign Boards get their missionaries, or the churches their ministers, or the future colleges their instructors? To cut off benevolence in this direction is to dry up the stream at the fountain.

Consider these reasons for helping the Education society. Study them. Meditate upon them, and place this great cause upon the list of your benevolences. Will you not do it?

The Educational System of the Disciples of Christ

By C. C. Rowlison

This is not a comic paper: we have an educational system. It is not one devised by a company of educators, nor by representative denominational partisans. Its value lies in the fact that it is a system which has grown out of the necessities and of the essential spirit of the Disciples of Christ. It is a system in which, like everything else among the Disciples, the constituent parts are quite independent of each other—too independent, minds of ecclesiastical mold have often thought—but which is found quite well suited to the needs of our own people.

There are two distinct tendencies in this system. From the point of view of a religious body, they may be characterized as, first, the tendency to isolation, and, second, the tendency to contact.

1. The tendency to isolation is illustrated by all our own colleges. These colleges have been established for the definite purpose of providing an educational environment which is permeated with the distinctive spirit of the Disciples. The most of them are located where our people have absolute control, or at least a strong preponderance of influence. All of them, however inadequately endowed and indifferently manned, seek to cover the whole field of education, at least so far as is necessary for the training of religious teachers, and ordain their graduates as equipped for the ministry. Until recently they have generally discouraged students who considered graduate work in other institutions.

Their instructors, through their love for our cause and devotion to their alma mater, have given themselves to their work with most heroic sacrifice. So far as there has been sectarianism among us, it has naturally come largely from these colleges, while it is also true that the most enthusiastic builders of our Zion have received their inspiration within these walls.

2. The tendency to contact has developed its more striking features quite recently, but in its essential elements it is no new thing among us. We have always had those who advocated the use of state institutions in the education of our children, and not a few of our strongest preachers have received their training in such scholastic atmosphere. At the present time this spirit is receiving large recognition among us. This recognition manifests itself in three ways. First, by the establishment of Bible chairs contiguous to great state universities by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. This is distinctly a missionary enterprise, frankly undertaken to hold Christian students to their faith and to convert other students.

Second, by the establishment of theological schools beside state universities. These schools are expected to do all that is undertaken by the Bible chairs, mentioned above, and in addition to provide ample opportunities for the student for the ministry. Here is a most distinct departure from the method of isolation. It invites students to attend the state institutions for the major part of their discipline. It recognizes as the way of highest culture open contact with other thought and other influences than are to be found in communities controlled by the Disciples. It is in itself an avowal that the mission of the Disciples is to be realized by contact with and adjustment to the greater life of our day, rather than by sectarian isolation from it.

The third manifestation of this tendency to contact is one which, naturally enough, students themselves have pretty generally developed. It is the method of submission to the freest and fullest discipline in the great universities of the world. Fifteen years ago, when this tendency was gathering its first great strength, students were quite generally warned against it by our educators and ministers. Now many of our own colleges advise their graduates to pursue this course. To encourage ministerial students to give themselves to such discipline, the Divinity House of the Disciples of Christ has been established as a feature of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, and a host of our younger ministers have enjoyed the advantages there offered. During the last scholastic year there were enough of our students—not all of whom are candidates for the ministry—in Harvard, Yale and Columbia to maintain in each an effective Disciples' club.

Here then are the marked characteristics of our educational method. It is our duty to have a clear understanding of the significance of each of these tendencies, and, as a religious people, to enthusiastically support any or all of them that promise to enable us to fulfill the obligations we owe to our generation. In future articles I shall set forth reasons why the Disciples of Christ ought very heartily to support the tendency to contact, while at the same time most loyally and liberally strengthening our older colleges.

Some College Values.

By Joel Brown.

On one occasion General Drake said: "Of all the returns that have come to me from capital invested, the income from what I have invested in Drake university is the largest, not in dollars and cents, as you all know I have never received in return a penny; but my return has been in men and women with nobler Christian characters because of having been in the school, who meet me occasionally and tell me so. The knowledge of this is the greatest joy of my life."

What greater returns could a man have? What greater joy? One thousand dollars put into the endowment fund of the Bible college of Drake university will bring an income to the school of $50 per year continuously, which will make it possible for one young man to graduate each year. He will preach, on an average, 20 years, during which time he ought to be instrumental in adding one thousand people to the church; to turn into the church treasury $100 per year for the several church interests; to build at least two church buildings in that time, each worth $5,000. So in the twenty years he will have added 1,000 souls to the army of the Lord, and $12,000 to the treasury of the Lord. And this good work repeated each year for an indefinite period, by each annual graduate.

Are there not others who would like such returns as made General Drake so happy? Can you not make yourself happy by helping the endowment fund of our colleges? No cause of the Lord is at present so needy; none will bring larger returns to the church in men and money. Will you not give this serious consideration?

OUR COLLEGES AND OTHERS

As Seen from the Dome

BY F. D. POWER

One of the finest collections of exhibits in the World's Fair at St. Louis was that in the Palace of Education and Social Economy. Chicago had no Education building—St. Louis had the best things of the world in all this realm gathered under a roof covering a rectangle 525 by 750 feet. Here was a world of instruction and interest. One could have studied it for weeks. Here was a splendid showing of colleges and universities, such as Yale, Harvard, Hopkins, Cornell, Stanford, Columbia, Chicago, and University of Michigan! Here were represented the women's colleges, like Vassar and Bryn Mawr. Here were the technical schools, agricultural and mechanical colleges, and manual training institutions. Here were exhibits of work for the blind, for the feeble-minded, for the deaf and dumb. Here were the correspondence schools which show 1,700,000 students, a single one with an enrollment of 37,000, with 3,200 instructors, and offering 150 courses of study. Here were exhibits of charities, hospitals, asylumns, prisons. Here above all was the showing of the public schools of our country—maps, charts, apparatus, models, helps of every kind—a map, for example, showing every school house in the state of New York, a state which spends $40,000,000 a year on its schools. Here were not only things, but the processes of doing things exhibited daily. I found myself first in a kindergarten in full swing, with real teachers and real children, giving an object lesson to thousands, and next I was in a school for stammerers, where a dozen young men and women afflicted with this impediment in their speech were going through with "The curfew tolls the knell of parting day" under the guidance of an instructor and with clubs.

The foreign exhibits in this palace were of special interest. Those of Germany, Great Britain, Japan, France, and Mexico were specially noteworthy. Belgium had a most instructive and unusual showing. Of 103,000 pupils in her public schools, 41,000 are members of some temperance society, and 88,000 who have recently gone out, have signed the total abstinence pledge. In Germany, 94 per cent are in the public schools.

One can see in this splendid exhibition how education is solving the world's problems; how technical, scientific, and industrial education are to the front, and classical education is going to the background; how the great work of education is being carried into the homes of the people; how much the aid of philanthropy and government is needed in those sections where illiteracy abounds.

In my study, all too brief, of this part of the Exposition, I looked in vain for the showing of one of our church colleges. That of Christian college, Columbia, Mo., was the only one I found, though others may have had an exhibit. I specially searched the West Virginia department to see if Bethany had any representation, but nothing was there; and the State university at Morgantown was not even mentioned. The polite attendant informed me it was for "lack of money." This, no doubt, was Bethany's reason also. In the "Disciples' Pavilion" all our schools had a prominent place, but in the great Palace of Education they were unknown. However, this was largely given up to national and state institutions.

That we do not advertise our colleges is one of our weaknesses. Our own people do not know them. Hardly an announcement once a year appears of things being done at Hiram or Butler or Eureka or Bethany. The average reader of our leading journals would suppose there is "nothing doing" at these honored seats of learning. Our missionary interests are well to the front. Our leading churches tell of their progress. Our chief cities have their weekly letter. Our lecturers and our speakers to lodges and union services are duly and truly announced. Our faults and our weaknesses have their hebdomadal drubbing. Our great books and our great meetings have their display "ads." Our baking powder, and sarsaparilla, Swamp-root and lung balsam, Piso's cure and Pears soap, calcium wafers and magic foot plasters, specifics for rheumatism and cancer and fits are all spread before us with grewsome illustrations and pious endorsement ad libitum, ad nauseam, ad quod damnum. Our schools and our faithful educators to whom we owe unspeakable and immeasurable obligations, and whose work is the essential basis of all our enterprises and all our successes, receive scant attention.

This is a time when institutions of learning are receiving encouragement as never before. Sixty-two millions in gifts is the record of 1904, $192,000 a day, $120 a minute; and a third of this enormous sum to educational institutions. Our American colleges and schools have received $18,188,783. Carnegie institute, Pittsburg, gets $5,000,000; Reed institute, Oregon, $2,000,000; Catholic institute, Washington, $926,000; Tulane university, $750,000; Boston university, $600,000; Harvard, $725,000; Cornell, $599,000; Conservatory of Music, New York, $500,000; Clark institute, Worcester, $425,000; Tuskegee, $362,000; Syracuse university, $350,000; Yale, $328,000; Wittenborg college, Illinois, $300,000; and others, smaller sums. Then galleries, museums, churches, hospitals, libraries and historical societies receive large benefactions. Nine persons have given from one to nearly twenty-one millions each. Andrew Carnegie gave nearly $21,000,000; Miss Tracy, of New York, to general charities, $5,000,000; Marshall Field, to the Field Museum, $5,000,000; Dr. Evans, of Philadelphia, to a museum of dentistry, $3,250,000; Miss Reed, of Pasadena, to the Reed institute, $2,000,000; James J. Hill, to religion and education, $1,500,000; J. A. Woolson, of Boston, to education, $1,200,000; Henry W. Oliver, of Pittsburg, to charities, $1,000,000; Henry H. Rogers, of New York, to a church, $1,000,000; Mrs. Sarah Potter, of Providence, to charities, $915,000; John D. Rockefeller, to Johns Hopkins, $817,000; A. C. Hutchinson, of Georgia, to education, $750,000; a total of $46,479,500. January was the best month for giving, its total of $14,524,000 leading April's $12,761,500. February showed the least, with only $1,097,783 to its credit.

What a splendid record! All lovers of their kind must be glad of this noble philanthropy. We are proud of our great institutions and of our great givers. Such examples must have a potent influence for good. We are glad because of them as well as because of their benefactions. In all the land they should have imitators. Not many can give their millions, but all can give their mites. Among us are thousands that need the quickening of this spirit. Our schools are our sources of pulpit supply. From Bethany and Hiram and Kentucky university and Eureka and Drake and Butler, and the rest, have gone the men who have made our cause in this land and in foreign fields. These institutions have served the brotherhood with great faithfulness and much meager support. Their faculties have worked on starvation wages and yet have accomplished great results which could never be measured in dollars and cents. It is time we were awaking to our duty to these centers of our best and truest life. It is time we were turning our attention to the great need of placing these schools of the prophets upon a reasonable basis and giving them the means necessary to the educational demands of this advanced age with which we are compelled to deal. It is time our hosts of givers were taking into consideration the unsurpassed opportunities here offered for the exercise of their benevolence. Our National Education Society was organized to promote this cause. The third Sunday in January it calls for the presentation of these claims in all our churches. A great wave of enthusiastic interest in the work of Christian education sweeping over our brotherhood, would bring its blessing to all departments of our work, and return to the churches a hundredfold. Let it come.

The Necessity of the Native Missionary Force

By Judson Smith, D. D.

In the popular discussion of missionary problems there is one important element that is too often overlooked or undervalued. The foreign force is not often valued too highly; but the native laborers are given quite too secondary a place, and the significance of the enterprise is liable to be measured more by the number and quality of the missionaries engaged in it than by the native force, or any other single feature. A study of the facts will help to correct this tendency and give due recognition to the part which the Christian natives in each field, especially the pastors and preachers, bear in the work and in its progress from year to year.

The situation now is by no means what it was in the early stages of missionary labors, and it is varying from year to year. In the opening of a mission, from the nature of the case, the missionary is the chief actor. He studies the field, masters the language, preaches the Word, gathers the church and the school, and thus initiates the work. Almost immediately, however, there is a call for native assistance, in preaching, in touring, in teaching, in pastoral work, and the most capable and promising are brought closely under the eye and influence and special instruction of the missionary and led to assume a more and more considerable share in the work of the mission. This development of native leaders accompanies and stimulates the Christian activities of the whole body of the communicants, and is the fixed policy of all wisely directed missionary effort. It is the native preacher that becomes the pastor of the missionary church, not the foreign laborer; and as quickly as possible the support of the pastor is called out from the church and the management of church affairs devolved upon the church itself under its own pastor. The missionary is the teacher, the counsellor, the friend and helper of the pastor, and his aid is needful, nay indispensable, through all the earlier stages of the church's life and growth. But his relation is never limited to one church and community; he may have supervision of several churches and be the counsellor of many pastors. The missionary is the general; the native community furnishes the captains and the lieutenants, as well as the rank and file. And the captain is making ready for the command of a brigade or a division, and the lieutenant may hope to rise to a superior service.

In the Foochow mission of the American board there are eighty-one churches and only eight ordained missionaries; the field of each of these brethren includes on an average at least ten churches, each of which has its own pastor or preacher. The tendency in all these churches is toward entire self-support, self-direction and self-propagation; at least eleven of them are self-supporting and are under the main direction of their own pastors. There is no progress in a mission so significant of permanency and power as this advance in the number of pastors and self-supporting churches. The more they develop the less is the need of missionary service and direction, the sooner will Christian communities appear in which the native forces cover the whole field of activity and set the missionary force to seek other regions and take up new work.

It may at first seem a positive loss to a church to have the missionary's directing hand withdrawn, and leadership placed upon the native pastor. The missionary presumably is a wiser, more experienced and influential man than the native preacher. This view, however, overlooks the educative value to the members of the church of the part they take in the support and management of their own affairs. A church with its own pastor, to which is entrusted the care of the church and the direction of its Christian activities, will grow more rapidly in intelligence, in zeal, in power than would be possible if a missionary served as pastor, asked no support and solved all difficult questions. Nothing develops a man or a church more than responsibility, the bearing of burdens, the study of problems, and the appeal to its own independent action. And the native pastor is the natural leader of the church which is charged with these duties and responsibilities.

In a wise direction of missions the first claim to be met is, doubtless, the support and due reinforcement of the missionary ranks. Next to this, and of scarcely less importance, is the training and use of native laborers, and first of all of native pastors and preachers. A mission without missionaries is inconceivable. A mission without a goodly number of native laborers is intrinsically weak and without firm hold upon the future. An experienced missionary in China, on the graduation of nine men from the theological school, wrote home that those nine men were for the next ten years worth more to the mission than any nine new men from our leading theological seminaries in this country could be; and he was speaking soberly and quite within the facts. They could not take the places of the missionaries; but they could, under the lead and counsel of missionaries, serve the churches and develop the Christian communities and widen the reach of the gospel message more easily and effectually than these vital ends could be secured in any other way. This, in fact, is precisely what is taking place on all mission fields where solid growth is recorded. The native preachers are multiplying in number, increasing in ability and power, and pushing the boundaries of the Christian community far out on every side, and enriching its life and deepening its hold. Twenty years ago the American board reported in all its fields 158 ordained missionaries, 142 native pastors and 1,821 native laborers of all kinds. To-day there are 178 ordained men, an increase on the average of just one a year, 272 native pastors, an increase of 130, and 4,179 native laborers of all kinds, an increase of 2,358. The volume of the work has increased more rapidly even than the proportions of the native force; the communicants and the number annually received on confession of faith are about three times as many as twenty years since; the annual contributions from native sources, amounting now to $173,184, are more than three times as much as they were then. This is the kind of progress that not only sustains itself, but leads steadily on to greater things and gives assurance of final victory. The gospel has taken permanent root when the native force is thus developed and in place; as for example, in the Zulu mission, where no grant-in-aid is given to any one of the twenty-three churches; in the Ceylon mission, where substantially the same conditions prevail.

This question of the native force is very closely connected with that of the higher education in missions. Primarily the mission school is a training school to prepare those who give promise of service and efficiency for a share in the work of preaching and teaching. It soon develops into a high school, and then into a college on the one side and the theological school on the other, and through all these changes its justification and main purpose is to provide a trained and competent native ministry. Other ends are served by the high school and the college, and they belong to a successful missionary work almost for the same reason as they flourish in countries of civilization and Christian progress here at home. But it is the necessities of the missionary work, and the demands of the developing Christian community that first call them into being and give them a recognized and honored place on mission ground. Missions aim at a stable form of society, constantly developing in its qualities and power, and as constantly rising in its demands upon its leaders and guides. They succeed when the gospel and Christian institutions take possession of a community or people in forms and with agencies that are wielded by the leading members of that society. And native laborers competent to these duties can be secured only by the same general course of training which furnishes us the preachers and educators in our own communities, that, namely, which is offered in the college and the theological school. If we must have able native preachers and teachers, the college and high school are not only something which may be allowed or tolerated, they are an absolute necessity. To train and use capable native laborers in the mission field is as much a part of sound missionary policy, is as wise and just a use of missionary funds, as it is to send missionaries to the field or to aid in supporting churches there. The truth is, both things are essential, the missionaries and the native laborers; and they are wise who keep the missionary ranks strong and full, and at the same time set by their side a steadily growing force of well chosen and well trained native workers.

The Reign of The Child.

By E. L. Powell.*

A very pathetic story is told by the biographer of Emerson to the effect that on one occasion he was observed by his daughter gazing in reverie out upon his garden, and his daughter said to him: "Father, what are you looking for?" and he made answer in simple and yet pathetic fashion: "I am looking for myself." The old self that could flash and flame, the splendid self, with its keen intuitions, with its marvelous wisdom, was gone, and the feeble old man was looking for that lost self. What is religion but the earnest endeavor on the part of a man who has lost the divine image or has allowed that image to become effaced, and is seeking to recover it?

We are looking for that self which in the child is clean and pure and white, and which must be recovered in the man with the added elements of character and experience.

Furthermore, Christianity honors childhood because of its possibilities. The child is life in the bud, life unfolding, life with all of its vast possibilities. Interested friends gazed upon the tiny form of the infant, John the Baptist, and wonderingly inquired, what manner of child shall this be? and so all parents as they receive this great gift from the loving God dream of the future of this wonderful creature in their arms. "By what astrology of fear and hope dare I to cast thy horoscope?" So thought a young mother of the southland as she rocked the cradle in which slept her first born. With the flowers about her and the birds singing in her ears and in her heart, she dreamed of a splendid future for this child of divine love. The years come and go; the child grows to young manhood; is sent to college and to a university, and there forms the accursed appetite for strong drink. One day, frenzied and mad, under the spell of the awful demon, he slays a man; he is tried; he is sentenced; he is executed. It is too much for the brain of this mother. She became insane, and she sat all day long by the empty cradle rocking it and crooning a lullaby in ears that heard not. Empty was the cradle and dark was her soul.

Oh, the future of the child! Shall he be a Nero, the nightmare of history, or a Paul, the humble disciple of the Christ? What manner of child shall this be?

This is an age of the child. It is the age of the kindergarten; it is the age of the juvenile courts; it is the age of the newsboys' homes and houses of reform; it is the age of legal protection for childhood; it is an age when child-life is being more scientifically studied than ever before in all the history of the world. Christianity is responsible for this change. The child is the citizen and Christian of to-morrow. As the child is so the coming age will be. Shall it help to bring in the glories seen by prophet and seer, or shall the old world move onward unto night? Awful is the responsibility which rests upon those who are entrusted with child-life. May God give them the grace to discharge that responsibility in his fear and in the light of possibilities of childhood.

Mrs. Browning sang long ago a song that stirred the heart of America—the cry of the children:

"Do you not hear the children weeping,
Oh, my brothers, ere the sorrow comes with years?
They lean their young heads against their mothers,
But this cannot stop their tears."

When we think of the child laboring, whether in the factory or in the cotton fields of the south, we feel like echoing that other line in her poem:

"The sob of the child in the silence
Curses deeper than the strong man in his wrath."

Woe be unto the man who builds up his fortune on the blood and happiness of childhood; whose gold is piled up at the expense of buried innocence. In our Declaration of Independence we are fond of descanting upon the inalienable rights of man. The child has inalienable rights: the right to parental love, the right to legal protection, the right to sing as the bird, the right to be happy, the right to lay hold of opportunities provided for him for his free and spontaneous and full development. To rob the child of those rights is to dishonor the character of our liberties as well as to call down upon us the curse of Jesus Christ. It were better for such a man that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were buried in the depths of the sea.

Christianity has to a large extent emancipated childhood. The old Roman and Greek poets do not even so much as mention mother. Even Horace makes no reference to childhood.

Divine Presence.

By F. F. Mallory.

The assured and realized presence of the Lord and the help of heaven is the first essential of efficient effort in the kingdom. Jesus meant more than a dull faith finds in the concluding promise of the great commission, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the ages." He meant something extraordinary. He meant heavenly leadership. He meant power, omnipotent power, sustaining and seconding human effort. He meant, in short, that all heaven under the leadership of the Son of God, would be joined to humble human agency for the evangelization of the world. Now, what we need to make us aggressive and hopeful, is to realize that help—to have it and know that we have it. Not to read it in the Book merely, but to experience it. And has not God always found some way to make it real to those whom he called to do extraordinary work? Look at the Hebrews. They are ordered to go down into the Red Sea or out into the great and terrible wilderness. They must realize the divine presence, but with the pillar of cloud and of fire moving on before them they do not hesitate to attempt the impossible. They are commanded to cross the Jordan when it is sweeping by, a turbulent stream out over all its banks. But when the priests, bearing the ark, the symbol of the divine presence, go forward, the people press down into the tempestuous flood, as though the waters were adamant. Joshua is about to lead his army against the impregnable fortress, Jericho. As he reconnoitres he is confronted with the Captain of the Lord's host, who assures him of victory, and the marvel of the ages is wrought as the walls of a great city fall under the blast of a few rams' horns. And how are we to realize the Lord's presence and help in our enterprises? Look at this promise, "Lo, I am with you always." To whom is that promise made? To those whom he has ordered to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. The church, therefore, that is not missionary cannot claim that promise, nor realize the Lord's presence. But the aggressive church—the church that is obeying the Lord and is engaged in sending the gospel to the unsaved and unevangelized masses—is not left to do its work alone. Why, you can put that commission into the form of a syllogism—you can forge a chain of irresistible logic that must bind conviction to the dullest mind. Look at it; Jesus said to the missionary church, "Lo, I am with you always," which is the major premise of an argument. Our church is a missionary church—that is the minor premise. The logical conclusion is Jesus is with us. Hallelujah! And this thrilling and triumphant assurance is another of the blessed reflex results of missionary effort.

Our Budget

—Remember our colleges, January 15.

—Read our Education Day Number.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stands for every general interest among us, and not one is more important than Christian education.

—Aside from the financial help accruing from the observance of this day, it is a great thing to bring our churches into closer touch with our colleges. It will result in more of the young people attending these colleges.

—We are getting many cheering echoes from our Evangelistic Number of last week. Here is only a sample: "The last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST — great. It improves all the time. God bless you.

Martinsville, Va. "J. V. H. Book."

—H. C. Garrison has been holding a meeting in Baltimore.

—C. E. Shultz will preach half time at Arlington, Ind., and one-fourth time at Homer.

—I. G. Shaw expects to enter Butler college next fall, and has resigned at Kewanna, Ind., to take effect in March. He begins a meeting there on the third Sunday of this month.

—I. T. Lawson has resigned at Marysville, Ind., where he has done a good work.

—W. S. Willis, of Millersburg, Ky., is to go to Ironton, Ohio. He is a first class worker.

—H. K. Berry has been granted leave of absence from his churches in Kentucky for health reasons.

—Madison A. Hart has received an indefinite call to the church in Fulton, Mo., with increase of salary.

—E. J. Willis, of Bristol, Ky., has taken up the work at Carlisle, which has just been vacated by Philip F. King, whose work there has been both pleasant and profitable.

—The church at Mankato, Minn., has been without a pastor for some months, but the regular services are being kept up. All departments of the church are working.

—The Foreign Society has just received three gifts on the annuity plan, one of $2,000, one of $200 and one of $100. This plan is constantly growing in favor. The Foreign Society expects to receive a larger amount from annuities this year than in any previous year.

—The Foreign Society requests the churches to send in orders for March offering supplies at once. This course will be a great accommodation to the managers. The prospects for a general offering are quite favorable.

—The church at New Albany, Ind., has had a prosperous year. Many improvements in the building have been made. The organ is immediately to be overhauled, and a piano has been presented through the generosity of the late Addis E. Neat. The church has extended to B. F. Cato, its pastor, an indefinite call, and increased his salary by $200.

—Marcellus R. Ely has entered upon his duties as pastor of the Soniat avenue Christian church, New Orleans. He is its first pastor, and this is his first pastorate. The church is well pleased with the young minister, and he seems to be delighted with his new field. There was a large audience to greet him on new year's day, and two additions to the membership.

—The reports from the observance of C. W. B. M. day are the best in the history of the organization. Pastors of churches have presented the claims of the work more generally than ever before, and the results of their messages to the people are seen in numbers added to the auxiliaries, enlarged subscription lists for the Missionary Tidings and more generous offerings for our mission fields.

—L. O. Herold, of Indiana, has accepted a call to Jasper, Ala.

—J. A. Pine is succeeding well in his new field at Dayton, Wash.

—J. L. Haddock, Louisiana, will spend some time in the College of the Bible, Lexington.

—J. J. Handsaker and wife, of Coquille, Oregon, expect to sail for Jamaica, January 15, as missionaries of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

—W. M. White, who is one of the moving spirits in our San Francisco convention, had about 100 additions to his church last year, making the largest increase they have ever enjoyed.

—J. M. Mason, of Georgia, has cast in his lot for work in the Plantersville district, Alabama. New Decatur, Hartselle field and Greenville field are, we believe, still without ministers.

—The committee which W. J. Dodge appointed to solicit for a Christian church at Presho, S. D., succeeded in raising enough funds for the purpose, but too late to inaugurate the building before the warmer weather sets in.

—F. V. Kearns has been ordained to the ministry and installed as pastor at Nora Springs, Ia. G. A. Hess, of Charles City, had the matter in charge, and J. T. Shrieve, Nora Carwick and J. C. Hanna gave addresses.

—Matthew Small, who is a brother of James Small, the evangelist, has resigned at Edinburg, Ind., and will supply other churches until June, when he expects to leave for a trip to Europe. Brother Small is an Englishman by birth. His successor has not yet been selected.

—The church at New Glasgow, P. E. I., Canada, under the leadership of Sisters James and A. B. Dickinson, remembered very lovingly their pastor, John Simpson, at the Christmas tide. On the last day of the old year Brother Simpson organized a church at Bradalbane, with a membership of twenty, which will soon be increased.

—Gen. Sec. Harry G. Hill, of the Education Society, is giving quite a number of addresses for men. Recently he spoke to the Presbyterian men's club at Shelbyville, Ind., and he has been invited to give his lecture-sermon on "Unused Power" before the Y. M. C. A. at the grand opera house in Indianapolis. These meetings are averaging an attendance of about 1,800 men.

—Bro. E. T. McFarland, pastor of the Fourth church of this city, reports the total amount of money raised in that church during the past year as $4,370.60, of which $605.96 was for missions. The report shows 60 additions during the year, with a present membership of 465. The Sunday-school had an average attendance of 274 during the year, and all departments of the church seem to be in a prosperous condition.

—Our protracted meeting at the Central church is to begin Feb. 1. If any preacher, or other person, knows of members of the church of Christ having moved to Columbus and will kindly send me their name and address I will call upon them and urge them to identify themselves with the Central or one of our five churches in the city.

—The new church organized at Reno, Nevada, is under the care of R. L. McHatton. This is one of the two states in the union in which we had no church. The remaining state is New Hampshire.

—R. L. Bussabarger, minister of the church at University Place, Seattle, was granted a vacation to visit his friend, N. H. Brooks, of Pendleton, Ore. Brother Bussabarger's work is prospering at University Place.

—The American Christian Missionary Society received $200 on the annuity plan during the holidays. A number of others are considering the matter of giving to the Home Board on this annuity plan, which is a good one.

—Prof. Chas. M. Sharpe, of the Missouri Bible college, Columbia, Mo., began a meeting with the University church of Christ, Des Moines, Ia., on new year's day. Brother Medbury, the pastor, writes: "We are confident of the happiest outcome."

—Robert Pegrum, who has recently come to us as a minister from the Congregational church, is ready for work wherever he may be called. His address is in care of A. L. Ward, pastor of the Christian church, No. 11 Copeland St., Roxbury, Boston, Mass. He is commended by Brother Ward.

—Bro. W. R. Allison, of Carlsbad, N. M., made us a pleasant call last week. Brother Allison reports the work in his city as very promising despite certain hindering conditions. The little band of Disciples there are looking for the divine blessing in the growth that is sure to come to their town. Carlsbad has a fine climate.

—G. F. Assiter, minister of the church at Parkersburg, W. Va., reports the church as reunited and the work going forward. Sec., was called in to assist them in this new year's day service..

—Miss Mary Kingsbury, who is the mother of the orphanage of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions located in Bilaspur, India, has taken her girls, more than one hundred in number, to Pendra Road, on account of the serious outbreak of the bubonic plague in Bilaspur. —Geo. B. Ranshaw, who has been kept at home by the illness of his daughter, she having scarlet fever, was released from quarantine at the end of the year.

—A new serial story, "A Week With the Woodneys," will begin in our next issue. This will be a good time to get new readers for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—Contracts for the new Central Christian church at Jacksonville, Ill., have been let. The plans indicate a handsome building, with a total capacity of 1,475 and costing about $50,000.

—We are requested to say that any evangelist needing the assistance of an efficient singer, can be placed in communication with a young woman of Christian character and of marked ability as a singer, by addressing Bro. Chas. S. Medbury, 1120 Twenty-sixth street, Des Moines, Ia.

—We call attention to the article on "The Necessity of the Native Missionary Force." Dr. Judson Smith is one of the greatest authorities to-day on missions. In view of the fact that our Foreign Board is seeking to plant colleges in India and Japan for the training of native preachers, we are glad to present this endorsement of such an expert as Dr. Judson.

—The annual meeting of the Hammett Place Christian church, of St. Louis, was held Thursday evening, January 5. Reports from the various departments testified to the healthy condition of the work. Unanimity and enthusiasm were manifested in the election of the church officers for the year 1905, and in the other proceedings of the meeting. The following is a summary of the finances for the year 1904:

Balance on hand, Dec. 31, 1903	$ 112.80
Receipts during 1904:
General Fund	2,166.56
Mission Fund.	379.85
Building	561.24
Total receipts	$3,220.45
Disbursements during 1904:
General Expenses	$2,153.94
Missions	243.01
Building Improvements and Repairs	332.22
Total disbursements	$2,729.17

General Fund	$ 125.42
Mission Fund.	136.84
Building Fund	$ 229.02
Total	491.28

The Hammett Place church has a membership of about 250. Samuel B. Moore is the minister.

—The first anniversary of its organization was celebrated on new year's day by the Thirty-fourth street Christian church, Washington City. The congregation, which is located in a new suburban section, quadrupled its membership during the past year, and its existence has had an important influence upon the religious life of the community. The morning hour was largely devoted to receiving reports from the various auxiliary organizations of the church and the selection of officers for the ensuing year, the evening meeting being one of praise, at which time the pastor, Claude C. Jones, spoke upon "A Great Movement," setting forth the distinctive features of the Christian church. Three were added by confession during the day, and the new year is full of promise for this people.

—As announced in advance, Bro. J. C. Reynolds recently celebrated his 79th birthday. He writes that in response to the notice in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST he received letters from the states of Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota, Washington and Oklahoma. "Several of these letters," he writes, "enclosed valuable gifts in the way of check, draft, postal money order, and Uncle Sam's promises to pay, which you know are good anywhere. In addition to the letters, my friends of Macomb, both in the church and out of it, presented me two splendid books, splendidly bound—The Standard Bible, American Revised, published by Nelsons, and their Dictionary of the Bible and Concordance that goes with it." In addition to these tokens of regard, the church, at its annual election of officers, elected Brother Reynolds an elder for life. It is beautiful thus to grow old with the love of one's friends, and with the blessed hope of the life beyond.

Good News.

It rejoices us very much to announce that one who wishes to be unknown has just sent $1,000 for the permanent fund on the annuity plan in our state work. We are happy beyond expression; this is that for which we have prayed so long. We believe this is the forerunner of many like gifts that shall come from our generous hearted people. Missouri ought to have a permanent fund of $50,000 in a very few years. If you want to know more about it write to T. A. Abbott, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo. T. A. ABBOTT, Cor. Sec.

"Ever since I was in the Army, I had more or less kidney trouble, and within the past year it became so severe and complicated that I suffered everything and was much alarmed—my strength and power was fast leaving me. I saw an advertisement of Swamp-Root and wrote asking for advice. I began the use of the medicine and noted a decided improvement after taking Swamp-Root only a short time.

"I continued its use and am thankful to say that I am entirely cured and strong. In order to be very sure about this, I had a doctor examine some of my water to-day and he pronounced it all right and in splendid condition.

"I know that your Swamp-Root is purely vegetable and does not contain any harmful drugs. Thanking you for my complete recovery and recommending Swamp-Root to all sufferers, I am."

Very truly yours,
I. C. RICHARDSON.

two former, which alone increase the membership, we have 22,996. In order to reach an approximately accurate number we must add at least ten per cent to these reported in periodicals not reported in the six consulted, which brings up the number to 25,292. To this we must add 15 per cent not reported at all. We then have 29,185 added by baptism and from the denominations in three months. This is a splendid showing for the first three months in the new missionary year.

Free Baptist Greetings.

The Christian-Evangelist is being sent to a number of the leading brethren among the Free Baptists. We have just received the follow notes from two of their prominent educators. Dr. Davis is the president of Rio Grande college, and Dr. McDonald is the president of Storer college.

"I believe that the union of Disciples and Free Baptists would be for the good of the cause of Christ. This union can not be accomplished until the two bodies of people thoroughly know each other, and that knowledge is now being gained as never before. I may find occasion to take advantage of your kind statement that your paper is open to any news or communication that I may wish to send you.

"With heartfelt wishes for the prosperity of your work during the coming years, I remain,

"Fraternally yours,
"John Merrill Davis."

"Please accept my thanks for your generosity in sending me the Christian-Evangelist. I read each number with keen interest. And besides finding the discussion relative to the proposed union between Disciples and Free Baptists very interesting, I find the general subject matter and editorial comments from week to week, clean, fearless and satisfying. I thank you for the courtesy in offering me the use of its columns.

"Sincerely yours,
"Henry T. McDonald."

A Tribute to Our People.

The new mission building of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in Monterey, Mexico, was dedicated Dec. 28-Jan. 1. President W. E. Garrison, of Butler college, Indianapolis, Indiana, was in charge of the dedication as the representative of the National Board. In introducing him to the audience assembled to hear him, Consul-General Hanna, the representative of our government in Monterey, said: "I am thoroughly familiar with the founding of this institute and with the people who are back of it. I came from the land where they grew. There was a cause which produced the effect—this splendid building was not a matter of chance. I am well acquainted with the people in the United States who are the cause of what we behold—the Christian church. Though not a member of this church, I can say that I regard them as one of the most progressive and enterprising religious bodies in existence.

"When I was in Porto Rico I met the first missionary who reached the island after the war with Spain. Indeed, he was on the ground before the evacuation of the capital by the Spanish. He was a representative of the Christian church. They seem filled with the righteous ambition to serve God and to help their fellow man.

"The people of Mexico are awake to the fact that the strength of this republic is not in great armies and navies. With our people north of the Rio Grande they see that the strongest fortifications a nation can have are school houses on every hillside. I have known some of the good men connected with the work of this school—heroes who were ready to lay down their lives for the good of their fellow men. One of them did become a martyr to the cause. This school represents not only the money and brains put into it, but this life, which was laid down for it.

"I am fully in sympathy with this grand work. The church and the people who are back of this school are reliable, and where best known they are the best respected. You can depend on them wherever you find them. They always accomplish what they set out to do."

President Garrison made many friends for the work in Monterey, and the National Board is grateful to him for his fine service to its mission.

The actual receipts of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions for December, 1904, were $24,428.97, a gain over December, 1903, of $8,245.89.—Reported from the C. W. B. M. Headquarters.

Mrs. Levi Marshall's Death.

Brother Levi Marshall, pastor of our church at Hannibal, Mo., and the church, and the whole city have suffered a great bereavement in the death of Sister Marshall. We have seldom witnessed so profound and universal grief in a whole community, among all classes of people and in all the churches, as was manifested in the death of our lamented sister. She was the daughter of G. W. Kramer, one of the officers of the Lenox avenue church in New York City, and had returned from the funeral of her mother, only a week before. She brought back with her the germs of the typhoid fever with which her mother had died, reaching home on Christmas evening and attending church on Lord's day morning following. She was taken ill that evening, was sent to the hospital, and on new year's evening her pure, noble spirit left the earthly tabernacle of clay to be with the Lord.

Sister Marshall, whose maiden name was Ella Estelle Kramer, was born in Ashland, O., Oct. 7, 1870. She graduated from the Akron, (O.) hghs chool, and subsequently took a graduation course in the Oberlin (O.) conservatory of music. She was married to Levi Marshall, in August, 1888, while he was pastor of the Akron church. Since leaving Akron she has labored in connection with her husband, with the churches at Cedar Rapids, Ia., and Hannibal, Mo., and has endeared herself to these churches and to the people of these communities in a most remarkable manner.

What was the secret of this power and popularity? First of all, she was a devoted Christian, consecrating her gifts and graces to Christ's service. She possessed a most winning personality—beautiful in face and form, but more beautiful still in spirit and disposition. Kindness distilled from her speech and presence. She visited the homes of the poor and needy as well as those of the rich and cultured, and was equally welcome in both. She was a singer of rare power. In some remarks at the funeral the Baptist minister said her voice seemed more like an overflow of the soul than any voice he had ever heard. She had that priceless gift for a pastor's wife, of being a leader among the sisters in every good work, without offensive obtrusiveness or the semblance of self-assertion or self-seeking. Indeed it was her utter self-forgetfulness, and her desire to serve others and thereby serve her Lord, that made her the idol of the church and of the community, and the strength and comfort of her husband.

The editor of The Christian-Evangelist was present, by request, at the funeral services, as was also President J. B. Jones, of William Woods college, Fulton, Mo. There was a great outpouring of people which the large Christian church could not hold. The church was most tastefully decorated with flowers and plants. The music by the choir was beautiful and appropriate. After scripture reading and prayer by Brother Jones, the writer spoke first, seeking to comfort the people, who seemed wrought up to a high tension of feeling, by quoting and commenting on Christ's utterances concerning death and the life beyond. Brother Jones spoke most tenderly and fittingly, from a personal acquaintance with the deceased. The pastor of the Baptist church spoke in behalf of the other churches, and paid a glowing and eloquent eulogy to the life and character of Sister Marshall. The long procession then followed the remains to the cemetery, and there on one of the beautiful hills overlooking the Mississippi, in a flower-lined grave, the body was deposited, with the last rites of Christian service. This place of sepulture was of her choosing. She leaves a husband, deeply and sorely bereft, a lovely daughter of fifteen years of age, a sister younger than herself, a father whose heart is bowed with a double bereavement, and a whole church in mourning. May the hope of the gospel and the fellowship of Christ, comfort and sustain them!

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Dedication of the C. W. B. M. School at Monterey, Mexico.

The writer had the privilege of spending part of Christmas week and New Year's day with our mission workers at Monterey, and participating in the dedicatory exercises of the handsome new building of the Christian institute.

On a prominent corner, across the street from the residence of General Trevenis, which is one of the show places of Monterey, stands the large new building of yellow pressed brick. It has two entrances, one on each street. Over one is the sign, "The Christian Institute." Over the other, "El Instituto Cristiano." The fact is, there are two distinct schools conducted under one roof and under one general management, but with separate corps of teachers. In the American school there is an enrollment of 110 children from the American colony, ranging from the kindergarten to the seventh grade. The instruction is in English, and the teachers are Jasper T. Moses, Mrs. McDaniel, Mrs. Alderman and Mrs. Bushnell, all of whom are well-trained teachers, the efficiency of whose work has given the school a very high standing among the Americans in the city. The Mexican school has an enrollment of 480, taught by about ten native Mexican teachers, nearly all of whom are graduates of the government normal school at Monterey. The Mexican teachers are all Protestant Christians and most of them are members of our local Mexican congregation. The daughters of our Bro. T. M. Westrup are among the Mexican teachers, and one of them, Miss Bertha Westrup, is principal of the Mexican school. In the Mexican school, all instruction is in Spanish, and most of the teachers do not speak English. The American pupils are expected to pay a tuition fee, and most of them do so. There is a nominal tuition fee in the Mexican school, but four-fifths of the pupils pay nothing.

So the institute has, in its two schools, about 600 pupils, making it by far the largest school in the city, except the Civil college which is maintained by the government.

The new building was projected when the school had about one hundred pupils. It was planned and its erection was begun when the attendance was far less than it is now. The growth has been so rapid that the building was outgrown before it was dedicated. Its fourteen school rooms are already crowded to their full capacity. The chapel—a beautiful room which seats 300 when the adjoining reading room is thrown into it—will not hold more than half of the school, so when entertainments are given, it is necessary to have dress rehearsals for the school in sections, and then exclude the pupils from the final performance to make room for the public. The attendance could be doubled while you wait if the building was large enough.

The exercises of dedication week lasted from Wednesday until Sunday. Wednesday evening there was an entertainment by the Mexican school. How they sang! And how they marched! And with what fervor they recited their patriotic poems—in Spanish, of course, so I did not catch much but the fervor! And with what outbursts of unpremeditated dramatic art did those small Mexicanos give their little dialogues. Thursday evening the American school gave a similar entertainment in English, which was equally good. The house was packed to its full capacity on both occasions, though an admission fee was charged at the latter. The first audience was Mexican, the second American.

On Friday the school itself was on exhibition, and parents and friends were filing through all day to see the rooms beautifully decorated with flags and flowers (flowers at Christmas time are cheaper in Mexico than in Missouri) and to see the children put through their academic paces. Friday night the writer delivered to an intelligent American audience, composed largely of members of other churches and of no church, a lecture on "American Christianity," in which he attempted to show: (1) That the characteristics of American civilization demand a certain type of religion; (2) that awakening Mexico needs the same type of religion; (3) that these demands are met by the simple religion of Jesus; and (4) that the plea of the Disciples of Christ presents what is needed. General Hanna, the United States consul at Monterey, introduced the speaker and the subject with a very admirable and stirring talk.

School Building at Monterey, Mexico.

Saturday morning there was a symposium of brief addresses in Spanish by visiting friends and missionaries, and Saturday afternoon a similar group of talks in English by Judge J. J. Jarvis, of Ft. Worth, Tex., Miss Bertha Mason, Rev. A. T. Graybill, a veteran Presbyterian missionary of Linares, Rev. W. S. Wallace, a Presbyterian missionary at Saltillo, and the writer; in the evening, an address in Spanish by Brother Wallace.

Sunday, New Year's Day, was the day of the dedication proper. In the morning there was a large audience of American people and the writer preached the dedication sermon. In the afternoon there were three baptisms. The evening services were in Spanish.

To all of these services, which I have tediously recounted, the Monterey News, which circulates throughout Mexico, and especially in the northern part, gave generous space. From one to two columns every morning in prominent position was devoted to the doings of the Christian institute.

The situation at Monterey is full of promise. It always is where children are being reached. It must be remembered that everything has to be done in two parts—Spanish and English. Americans will not go to Spanish service or send their children to Spanish school. Mexicans cannot, of course, profit by services or teaching in English. So we must have two congregations as well as two schools. The Mexican congregation numbers about fifty. During the past year it has had 16 additions, mostly from the Baptists. Very few, if any, real Catholics are being reached. Some who have lost interest in Catholicism are being interested. Some who are children of Mexican Protestant parents, but have never joined any church, are being won. But a majority of the pupils in the Mexican school are from Catholic families. They hear a scripture lesson and a prayer every morning in the school.

Bro. T. M. Westrup, an Englishman by birth but in most other respects a Mexican, is the official translator for the mission. He was a Baptist until about two years ago. He is a man of no small culture, reads his Greek New Testament and his Hebrew Old Testament and is indispensable in the literary work of the mission. His son Enrique preaches to the Mexican congregation.

The American congregation is a mere handful—chiefly the missionaries and their families. Bro. J. E. McDaniel preaches to them, as well as serving as principal of the school. This part of the field is a very hard one. The American population of Monterey consists chiefly of two classes: First, ardent and absorbed money-getters who have deliberately left their God in the states, and second, fugitives from justice. There are besides, of course, some thoroughly good people who might and ought to be reached. The others ought to be, but it will be very slow.

One thing has been fairly demonstrated by the Monterey mission, and that is the importance of the educational work as the basis for all mission work in the Spanish American countries. The building up of churches ought not to be neglected, and there should be constant preaching and visitation. But the school does two things: it serves as an entering wedge, for almost any community will gratefully accept a school if the approach be tactful; and it gets hold of the children and paves the way for a work in the next generation which cannot possibly be done in this.

The problem of expansion is the pressing one now in Monterey. There must be more ground and more buildings. But this must be viewed in the light of the larger problem of the expansion of this work throughout Mexico. There is scarcely a limit to the number of cities in which such work might be carried on just as profitably as in Monterey. There should be primary grade schools in the various parts of cities like Monterey, for the little tots can not come clear across a large city, and most of the Mexican pupils come from the immediate neighborhood. There must be a training school for teachers and for native preachers at some central point. The questions of industrial training and of a boarding school are to be considered—but cautiously. In fact, the whole problem needs the consideration of an educational expert on the ground, and a comprehensive policy ought to be worked out and adopted before there is much more building in Monterey or anywhere else.

Mexico is a land well worth working and fighting for. Our next-door neighbor, our greatest sister-republic, a land to which we are bound by commercial and industrial ties, a country given over to what is not much less gross than the better forms of paganism, a people whose political liberties are a farce and a fiction because they have not yet risen to the stature of citizenship—it is our nearest and, in some respects, our most urgent mission field. W. E. Garrison.

North Iowa.

Over one-half of our great state is contained in what we call our northwest and northeast missionary districts. Mason City is on the western border of the northeast district, which includes twenty-five fertile, populous, and very wealthy counties. In these counties there are only about fifty congregations of Disciples of Christ—most of them numerically weak. The congregation to which I try to minister is the largest in all this vast territory—while the First church of Cedar Rapids has the greatest financial ability and stands at the head in its missionary and benevolent work.

The churches of northern Iowa have shown very little if any increase in the last three years. This is due, no doubt, to the inactivity and discouragement resulting from crop failures, reaction from land speculations, and especially from the flood of emigration to the Dakotas and Canada.

Most of us feel, however, quite sure that affairs are settling down to the normal again, and that a brighter day is dawning for the cause we love.

With the faithful men and women who have stood by the work so heroically in the crisis through which we have been passing, it cannot be otherwise than that the day of phenomenal growth shall again come to the princely plea made for the Christianity of Christ.

Brother Stinson, of Cedar Rapids, is to take up the life of a business man, and the First church there is on the lookout for a pastor. Rumor says some "courting" has been going on between this church and one of our ablest men. I cannot give names, however, we would be delighted to see this "Dr." again giving his princely leadership to one of our churches.

G. A. Hess is one of the bravest souls in Iowa. He is battling against great odds at Charles City in a herculean effort to re-establish the cause there. Leaving a good church last October, he went into this field without the promise of a cent of remuneration and is doing a telling work. No man in the missionary work at home or abroad is sacrificing more and no one is more possessed of the missionary life of the gospel.

Our problem here in Mason City is a crushing debt. We have a magnificent plant and some as loyal and devout souls as ever enlisted in the King's army. The worry, anxiety and many discouragements that such a condition brings, are all borne in patience. Last year we gave over $400 for missions and benevolences. At the same time we were paying in interest more than enough to make us a living link church. Our people are poor, but good and true.

The Protestant churches are to engage in a great union meeting here, beginning Jan. 10; with Evangelists Sunday and Fisher. We have built a tabernacle that will seat 3,500 people, and are hoping to stir the town and surrounding country.

The temperance forces have again defeated the effort of the liquor men to introduce saloons into our city. Mason City is the largest city in Iowa without the saloon and is in the midst of a large "saloonless" district. The liquor forces are anxious to have this "district" opened to their abominable traffic, but such a thing is impossible so long as we can keep them out of this place. We are organized and determined that they shall not enter here without a struggle to the very "trenches." Dr. McCash, of Des Moines, rendered us invaluable service in this contest through which we have just passed. W. W. Burks.

Eastern Illinois Notes—Vermilion Co.

Bro. L. I. Mercer is to hold a meeting at Antioch, about six miles southeast of Hoopeston, early in January. We predict a good meeting as Antioch is one of the strongest and most up-to-date country churches among us, and Brother Mercer is an evangelist able to lead the forces to the realization of the church being built up and the salvation of many souls.

S. S. Jones, of Danville, Ill., has secured Brother Stevenson, of Chicago, to hold a Bible institute in the Third Christian church during the second week in January.

L. P. Kapp is doing a splendid work at the Second church in Danville, Ill. He is a man of good abilities, noble spirit and a worker that seems to know how to succeed. Brother Kapp, assisted by the other congregations of the city and vicinity, has started a mission at Oak Lawn, has purchased a good lot and expects to have a nice house of worship erected there before many months. Brother Kapp while doing this work is making a considerable sacrifice of his time and means and certainly is deserving of the highest commendation.

The First church in Danville is fostering a splendid mission in that city known as Vermilion Heights. Eldon Norton has been helping them in a series of meetings and there were about 75 added to that mission. Danville is beginning to be leavened by the primitive plea as but few of our cities of its size have been.

Vermilion county, Ill., has 31 Christian churches and yet there is much territory unoccupied and undeveloped.

H. C. Gaumer, of Alvin, Ill., who preaches for Alvin, Bismarck and Prairie chapel—congregations all in this county—was elected from this district to the legislature of the state on the Prohibition ticket. Mr. McKinley, of Edgar county, is talking of contesting the election. Brother Gaumer showed his popularity by the majorities he overcame. Brother Gaumer is a good preacher and we believe he will make a representative of whom the people may be proud. He has just been holding a brief meeting at Alvin. Four candidates were brought here, six miles north, to be baptized.

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all he beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs, and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for hat reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

W. H. Kerr, of Crawfordsville, Ind., has been doing splendid work at Walnut Corner in this county, where they have built and dedicated a beautiful house of worship this year. Brother Kerr held them a good meeting early in the fall.

Brother Martin, of Crawfordsville, Ind., who preaches half-time at Antioch, has been called to continue another year. In talking with one of the prominent members, I was told that Brother

Martin is both an excellent preacher and pastor and is highly esteemed for his works' sake.

I will close my work at Rossville as soon as satisfactory arrangements can be made. I prefer to locate in Indiana. C. H. TROUT.

Report of North Michigan Missionary Work.

In the early part of the year I took a cold which settled on my throat and lungs and caused me to return to my home. After the severe winter I found the home church at Yale without a minister and I thought it best and needful for me to help until a man could be located. This I did and the first of June I started with a hopeful heart and pure purpose for north Michigan as the first one to cross the Straits of Mackinaw as a missionary for the Disciples of Christ to the people of the north peninsula.

Previous to this I had worked in the northern counties of the lower peninsula since consecrating my life to this work four years ago. I am thankful to God that he has given me the opportunity to enter this field comprising 39 counties into which our people had never sent one to preach the gospel and a few other counties in which some preaching had been done and some souls won. I believe the north peninsula will be a fruitful field in a few years.

In some places and cities nearly every church is represented excepting the church of Christ comprised of those who want to be Christians only. The Adventists (Seventh day) entered the north peninsula three years ago (I was told by one of their workers) and have established 60 missions for Bible reading. They have now a membership of 400 on the peninsula.

It is a mistake to suppose that the settlement of the north peninsula is composed of foreigners. It is true that all nations are represented in the different cities, but is not this true of the cities of all the different states? This certainly ought not to be used as an argumeut against preaching the gospel in any territory. Go preach the gospel to every creature and all nations, is Christ's command. A place where all nations are represented may be a good place to begin. In a few years they will all be talking in our language.

While on the north peninsula I started one Sunday-school in a place with three teachers in the public school and they had been without preaching of any kind or a Sunday-school for nearly three years. At first the children came and stood in groups and asked if they would have to pay to come in to hear the preaching. This occurred three times. But because of this don't think that the people are heathen. I found on the north peninsula some of the kindest and best people I ever met with in all my life. I am glad I took up this work and sorry I did not go before. The prospect is growing brighter. One bright young man has decided to consecrate his life to the ministry of the gospel and will study with Bro. Ashley Johnson and I have reason to believe that another will take the same course.

In this first tour on the northern peninsula I baptized but three persons, but they were indeed promising persons. How glad I was to hear the first confession of faith in Christ and to baptize for the first time on this peninsula. May God bless the work with souls!

I will return to the north after being at my home for a time. I was away from my home six months this time and will certainly appreciate a visit with my family for a few days. I had the pleasure of meeting with some of the kindest and most faithful brethren at Laurium and Calumet, 275 miles northwest of Mackinaw. I have promised to return to them to labor for a short time with them in the gospel. There are 40,000 people in the city and the brethren have asked for my return for an effort of three months. At Baraga I met our loved brother, Chas. Price, and enjoyed his hospitality. He and his mother are the only Disciples in the town and he has arranged for a hall for a meeting and will take care of me. I will have missions at Allenville and Rapinville, as at both places I have the promise of places to preach the gospel in and also care while I am holding forth the truth in those places. And at Dollarville I have arranged for the use of one of the rooms in the school building to preach in. I have not been forgetful of the northern part of this penimsula. At Pellston I have secured a lot for a church building. Pellston is a new town of 1,500 people with only one church. The lot is worth about $300. We have ten Disciples in the place. I have preached two Sundays for them and will expect to help them considerably until a church is established. At Westwood I found the people without preaching of any kind for five years and I secured the use of the church building owned by the Congregationalists and had a good attendance and one confession when sickness compelled me to close the meeting for a time. At Coleman, a town of 1,800, in Midland county, I have also done some preaching. We have some true Disciples in and around Coleman, and in the near future a meeting will be held there. Brother Green, of Mt. Pleasant, and Brother Raum, of Saginaw, have both promised to render assistance in this meeting and we pray for it to be fruitful. I must not forget to say that I called on the brethren at Burt Lake and preached for them one Lord's day when two took membership—one a man who had been a minister in the Mennonite church. His name is Wm. Dudley. He is a scholarly man and has a good library at his command and is giving excellent satisfaction for the brethren at Burt Lake, Springvale and Wildwood. At Wildwood he is completing the unfinished and unused church building, he being a carpenter as well as a good preacher. On Thanksgiving day the friends helped him to the amount of $58 on this work. I had hoped to raise much means to push this work, but instead I have had a close time of it, some of the time without a dollar. Expenses are always heavy in a new country and especially is this true in north Michigan. Railroad fare and everything else is high. Some way or other, by God's help, I have passed through the year and I feel thankful to the dear friends who have sent to my assistance. With a determination to be loyal to the truth and do my best for the Master and to save souls, I am your brother in Christ, R. BRUCE BROWN.

Ohio Letter.

P. H. Welsheimer, of Canton, reports 57 additions on decision day, Dec. 11; 44 were baptized, 42 were adults. That makes a good protracted meeting report. He also reports the new church building under roof. All this proves that it pays to magnify the Bible-school.

There were 17 additions at Galion, where Bristor and Pierce worked together. Galion is growing beautifully and will walk alone after Feb. 1, 1905. I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., will preach in a meeting at High street, Akron, this month. A. A. Doak, of Pennsylvania, has been inaugurated as pastor at Kent. We welcome him to the Buckeye fellowship.

The Cleveland simultaneous meetings begin Jan. 8. So far as now arranged the pulpit force will be as follows: Franklin Circle, A. M. Harvuot; Euclid avenue, union meeting with neighboring church one week and H. L. Willett one week; Cedar avenue, Pastor E. P. Wise; Miles avenue, Pastor T. A. Flemming; Ætna street, Pastor F. D. Butchart; Lakewood, D. H. Bartlett; Glenville, C. A. Freer. Dunham avenue and West Madison avenue and Birch street have not arranged definitely at this date. It is believed this effort will do much needed good aside from the additions that may be gained.

Samuel H. Forrer took to himself a wife Dec. 22. The happy bride was Miss Lulu Lloyd, of Fostoria. After a ten day trip to Strasburg, Va., the bride and groom will be "at home" at 376 W. Sixth Ave., Columbus. I extend most hearty congratulations.

Collinwood is now in the second local option fight with splendid chance of winning "dry" again. The election will be held Jan. 5.

The latest move among the politicians is to have Governor Herrick appointed to some office by President Roosevelt and thus save him from the humility of defeat for nomination or at the polls. There never was such universal feeling against a chief executive in Ohio. The next nine months will be interesting political history in Ohio. We here and now predict that Myron T. Herrick will not be nominated by the Republican convention. They are too wise to risk such a move. His certain defeat at the polls would be the greatest defeat on record.

The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

As stated in our last issue the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered action of the Kidneys and urinary organs.

The President of the Suffolk Hospital, Boston, states that Alkavis was tested in the hospital on chronic cases of Bladder and Rheumatic trouble. It cured when old and established compounds wholly failed, and our good words are at your disposal, for all should know of the good accomplished by its use. Dr. W. H. Hawley, Physician and Surgeon, Penn Yan, N. Y., writes: "I have used Alkavis myself and in my practice with satisfactory results." Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from numbers of others, including many ladies suffering from disorders peculiar to womanhood.

The Church Kidney Cure Company, of New York, who so far are its only importers, are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free sample of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the Company, and receive the Alkavis entirely free. Address Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 404 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Southern California Notes.

Closing my work in Bellaire, Ohio, on Sunday, Nov. 27, I came immediately here with my family, to begin seven months of service as evangelist for southern California. I am enjoying exceedingly the hearty welcome extended, and this sunny land, "where every proapect pleases," and where "with lavish kindness the gifts of God are strewn." The multitudes appear so well satisfied with this earthly paradise that they have little concern for the heavenly.

I began a meeting here December 4 and closed on Sunday, December 25, with 40 accessions—about half by confession and baptism. The Sunday congregations were very large and on week nights fair. The people here assured me that the meeting in point of attendance, interest and results was fully equal to the best ever held in this old church. Bro. Geo. Ringo is the wise, winning, and worthy minister. He has been here three years, has seen the church grow in numbers, and in standing and influence, and into a fine new house of worship but recently dedicated. I have never known a more diligent pastor, a more congenial yoke-fellow. The church is living in peace, with a mind to work, and is composed of as noble a group of godly men and women as I have ever labored with. I have located my family here, and we are members of this church.

I begin a meeting at Monrovia next Sunday. This is a new point for our people, some 20 miles out from Los Angeles, where there are some 20 or 30 Disciples of Christ waiting for organization. We hope to add others to this nucleus, sound out the simple gospel in the community and win all the attention possible to the message of evangelization and union according to New Testament models. We are promised a professional singer for our help, and we hope to leave an organized church with a building lot purchased and a permanent work established. Watch us and pray for us, that God may give his grace and guidance.

It is cause for grief and disappointment that Frank M. Dowling, the brilliant and successful pastor in Pasadena, and one of the best-beloved and most useful men on the coast, has been ordered by his physician to give up preaching for at least a year. His health is seriously impaired and Mrs. Dowling is far from well. His friends will hope and pray that complete rest will bring complete recovery. A Presbyterian minister, who made the journey from Chicago to the coast in the same tourist sleeper with us, told me that Brother Dowling was one of the most gifted after-dinner speakers in California, and that Bob Burdette, who lived in the same city with Dowling, and often appeared on the same program, was easily outclassed by him, Burdette's friends being the witnesses. Bro. F. B. Walker, an old Bethany friend of mine and of Brother Dowling, will supply the Pasadena pulpit during Brother Dowling's leave of absence.

One of the happy surprises of my first visit to the southern California preachers' meeting in Los Angeles was to see so many I had known in other fields of labor in the east, and to receive from them every one a warm welcome and hearty God-speed in my new work. First was the big, brainy, breezy, bustling pastor at Pomona, R. P. Shepherd, who came from the sunrise to the sunset sea—from New Jersey to southern California. And there were Walker and Myers, Grieve and Sloane, of Ohio, McKnight and Walter L. Martin, whom I had known in Iowa, and other fellow laborers in Kansas or Nebraska.

The southern California missionary board is composed of a group of strong men, about equally divided between preachers and business men. C. C. Chapman, of Los Angeles, is president; Grant K. Lewis, of Long Beach, is secretary, and A. K. Crawford, of Los Angeles, is treasurer. Some of the other members are, A. C. Smither, for near 15 years the efficient pastor of the First church, Los Angeles, and easily one of the most influential men in all broad missionary movements to be found out here, F. M. Dowling, R. P. Shepherd, Geo. Ringo, of Riverside, and W. G. Conley, of Redlands.

Sumner T. Martin, evangelist.

Riverside, Cal.

Oklahoma.

J. V. Updike has recently held a short but very fine meeting at Weatherford. He has been engaged in a few days' meeting at Ponca City, the hardest field in Oklahoma. If he can only arouse the church to love and activity it will be a great revival.

E. W. Brickert, of San Antonio, Texas, is in a meeting at Lamont and can be secured for pastoral or evangelistic work.

The church at Shawnee, where Brother Granville Snell is laboring, will build a $20,000 house of worship. El Reno church, where J. E. Parker is ministering, will also build a $20,000 house.

The new $20,000 Christian church at Chickasha, is about completed. Bro. J. B. Boen is our popular pastor there. He has had something like 300 additions this year. Among the number was a Methodist preacher.

J. C. Mullins has located with the church at Mangum and is getting the work well started. M. Myers is now dividing his time between Nardin and Brahman.

The church at Hunter is to be congratulated for its wise judgment in retaining its pastor, G. W. McQuiddy. Other congregations in much larger towns tried to take him but the brethren at Hunter fully appreciated his ability and retained him at an increase in salary.

Oklahoma is a fine field but the ministers that do the work here are compelled to make a great sacrifice financially. The church here has grown rapidly and is still progressing, but it has been done at the sacrifice of the majority of the preachers who have labored in Oklahoma. A few of our churches have now begun to pay promptly and well, but they are very few. When our people fully awaken to their financial ability and obligation it will then be an easy mater for us to take Oklahoma for Christ.

Canton Letter.

The fall term of Christian University closed Dec. 22, and a large number of students hastened away to enjoy Christmas at home. Our next term opens Jan. 3. The outlook for an increased attendance is good.

Christian University is now in a position where a few thousand dollars as additional endowment would give it firm footing for development. Here is a good opportunity for some man of means to honor himself and bless posterity.

Dr. Dungan recently delivered some lectures before the Texas Christian lectureship. He reports a very profitable and pleasant visit.

A number of our student preachers are spending their holidays with their respective churches, some holding meetings and others making pastoral calls.

Dr. Dungan will spend the week between Christmas and New Year at Granville, in Monroe county, where he will deliver three lectures. His son, R. M. Dungan, preaches at Granville while pursuing a postgraduate course in Christian University.

An Old and Well-tried Remedy

"My Methods of Work."

[The following replies to our questions on evangelism we were not able to print last week. The questions were: 1. Will you state briefly your method of work? 2. Have you tried other plans, and will you state your reasons for abandoning these? 3. What value do you place upon music in your work? 4. What is the hardest thing you have to contend with? 5. Do you find that the "love of God" is, or is not, more effective for conversion than the idea of a future punishment? 6. What relative emphasis do you place upon the divine and the human side of salvation? 7. To what extent does the idea of Christian union enter into your evangelistic preaching? 8. In what ways can the pastor best help the evangelist in his work?]

By O. P. Spiegel.

In answer to your questions relative to aggressive Christian evangelism, I answer briefly your points of inquiry by number.

1. I have no set method of work. I try to take in the situation and conduct my campaign somewhat in keeping with the people I am laboring with and among. Most of my work is in destitute places, in the larger cities.

2. I rarely close a meeting without learning something about how to hold a meeting. So you see I am constantly casting off old methods for new ones. Some new ones I try and are fine; these I use when opportunity affords. Those that do not come up to my expectations I cast off.

3. Music is the drawing card for sinners, lukewarm Christians and the worldly minded, and for the young people. No meeting can be a great success without good music. It surely draws. And the kind that draws is congregational singing. I do not object to an occasional solo or quartette or chorus, but it must be a blessing and not a bore! I usually use a good organ and piano tuned and trained together and have plenty of books for everyone, and we usually have very good music.

4. In the beginning the hardest thing I have to contend with is making my brethren believe we are going to have a great meeting! They have no faith in themselves, and but little in anyone else. The hardest thing among the denominations is to get them to do what they believe to be right. I can easily convince such that theoretically we have the only reasonable and scriptural platform, and that they are wrong in propagating divisions, but to get them to leave that position where "pa" and "ma" belonged is very difficult. And yet many of them do so.

5. The love of God must be preached and is very effective, but to preach a full gospel for which we have both precedent and precept we must tell sinners what the result will be if they fail to accept and obey. But I find a sermon on future punishment is not as popular as it once was, perhaps for the reason that many are more wicked than they once were.

6. I place most emphasis on the human side for the very good reason that the divine side has already been emphasized and that when it needs new emphasis there is a stronger than I to emphasize it! In the commission and in the examples of the apostles it seems to me the human side was ordered emphasized more than the divine side. In other words I have to labor among a people who have been taught from time immemorial that God does it all. I have to tell them that God does only for men what they cannot do for themselves.

7. Very largely. Most of my sermons breathe not only the teaching but the spirit of Christian unity. This is the great problem to be solved by the contending forces of Christendom to-day, and we are in better position to lead in the solution than anyone else.

8. The pastor can help by having the church thoroughly aroused to the idea that a great meeting is both necessary and possible; by having a list of those who are to be reached; by leading the church to uphold the hands of the evangelist in all his methods of work, for if the preacher and church have not confidence enough in the evangelist to follow him in the series they should never call him to their assistance. The pastor is the evangelist's greatest friend.

Birmingham, Ala.

By Wm. F. Cowden.

In replying to your recent letter I would say that I have no special methods of work in the matter of holding revival meetings. My work for the most part has been that of organization and general supervision of missionary work with new and feeble churches. I have no pet methods or theories touching evangelism. I think nearly everything depends on the spirit of the preacher, his genius for the work, and especially his faithfulness and tactfulness in preaching the whole gospel, persuading men, as did Paul, by "the wrath of God revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness and ungodliness of men," and also by the love of God for sinful men, "which passeth all knowledge." The gospel which Paul preached is heaven's most powerful display of both, and most strongly appeals to men both "to flee from the wrath to come" and also "to lay hold on eternal life," and my observation is that men seldom do the latter unless they realize in a large measure the meaning of the former. I have no fine spun theory as to the relative potency of God's wrath and God's love to move men apart. Neither is healthfully potent, but united, as in the gospel, they become "the power of God" to save men. The preacher who preaches the word, the whole word, and nothing but the word, other things being equal, will, I think, succeed best in awakening the conscience and winning the love of the sinner.

Books that Have Helped Me.

[This year the Iowa ministerial association, through its reading course committee, instead of blocking out a fixed course of books to read, will ask some of our most successful preachers to contribute, from time to time, articles for our several religious journals, stating which books have helped them. We are glad to announce that the first installment is from Bro. C. S. Medbury. In behalf of the associartion I wish to thank him for the article. Personally I wish to testify to the helpfulness of the books he suggests. By his courtesy I have just finished reading Stalker's "The Preacher and his Model." I consider it one of the most helpful books I have ever read. I do hope the suggestions given may help all preachers in the state. Very sincerely,

JOEL BROWN,
Chairman Reading Course Committee.

Drake University, Des Moines, Iova, Dec. 15, 1904.]

At the suggestion of the committee whose it is to suggest helpful literature I am glad to commend whole-heartedly the following books or groups of books that have particularly enriched my own life.

First. I believe in our ministry we should be thoroughly familiar with our own literature —the literature of our own restoration movement. In some quarters many of the books of our brethren are regarded as out of date or as inadequately dealing with present problems. My own view is entirely counter to this. For depth and richness of biblical research we as a people have large numbers of works that are eminently to our credit. The debates of Mr. Campbell will not be surpassed in their clear setting forth of the great fundamentals of faith and practice. Maintaining the poise and dignity of a master even under the fire of antagonists far inferior to himself in both ability and spirit, he has left us a heritage of honor whether viewed from the standpoint of sacred themes or from the literary style of their treatment.

Much can be said also for the splendid works of Isaac Errett, Milligan, Richardson and a host of others of our earliest workers.

Of the later books among our people I will mention three, though a dozen are entitled to a word of praise. (1) "Studies in Acts," by Lhamon. (2) "The Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism," by Aylsworth. (3) "The Christ in Modern Literature," by Combs.

Second. Missionary Literature.

Under this head I wish to commend first to every preacher, "The Missionary Review of the World," published by Funk and Wagnalls. It is a monthly publication, $2.50 a year. It gives a world-wide view. Personally, I have several bound yearly volumes and consider it an invaluable reference library. Beyond this magazine I wish first to speak of our own Brother McLean's "Missionary Addresses," which I think is not equaled by any book of its kind. It is a perfect store-house of information. Mentioning only one other book, when hundreds might be named, I will refer to the "Islands of the Pacific," by James M. Alexander.

Third. Inspirational Literature.

Every good book on missions would properly come under this head but I am thinking of other kinds of works. First, let me mention Stalker's "The Preacher and his Model." I have read and reread this masterly little work and know that it has helped me in appreciating the beauty and dignity of the ministry of the word. Second, "A Man's Value to Society," by Hillis. Third, a book that lets the preacher into the optimism of Jesus as to "every creature"—"Up From Slavery," by Booker T. Washington.

Under the same and other heads I would like to mention a score of others—my friends on the shelves. Even as I write, looking at my books, some of them seem to protest against the omission of their names. What a wonderful companion a good book is! What fellowship with master spirits a well chosen library affords! "God be thanked for books. They are voices of the distance and the dead, and make us heirs of the spiritual life of the past ages. In the best books great men talk to us, give us their precious thoughts and pour their souls into ours." CHARLES S. MEDBURY.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

It gives us great pleasure to anuounce the discovery of a positive cure for Asthma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo river, West Africa. The cures wrought by it in the worst cases, are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been at once restored to health by the Kola Plant Compound. Among others, many ministers of the Gospel testify to its wonderful powers.

Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., perhaps one of the worst cases, was permanently cured after many years' suffering. Rev. D. S. Hopkins, Wilson, Ind. Ter., writes May 25th, his wife was cured two years ago after eight years' suffering. Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Texas, writes, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years' suffering and had no return of the disease. Mr. L. H. Johnson, of Gainesville, Ga., Manager of the Gainesville Shoe Co., writes, the Kola Compound is a death blow to Asthma. It cured my daughter after all hope had gone and words are inadequate to express our gratitude to the Importers.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Maryville, Jan. 3.—Yesterday we held our annual meeting. It was a happy day in the history of the church. The church proper raised $3,637.09, Sunday-school and other departments, $1,271.28; giving a total of $4,908.37. Missionary offerings of the church proper were $689.57, and other organizations raised $726.26, making a total of $1,415.83. It is but fair to say that during the time of some of these offerings the church was without a pastor. I have been here seven months. During that time 96 have been added to the church—65 of this number by baptism. Of the conversions during the entire year 53 came from the Sunday-school; 29 associate members from the Y. P. S. C. E.; 29 from the Intermediate C. E.; five from the Junior C. E.; two from the young woman's mission circle. MONTANA.

Missoula.—The C. W. B. M. auxiliary and the ladies' aid society tendered a new year's reception to the members of the Missoula Christian church at the parsonage, January 2. It was characterized by true western hospitality and sociability. About 100 were in attendance and all were afforded the opportunity personally to greet both Brother and Sister Sawyer. The Missoula church is on the upward trend, thanks to the able leadership of our beloved pastor, Brother Sawyer. The various branches and auxiliaries of the church are in a prosperous condition. Our choir is one of the finest in the city. We are planning for a series of revival meeetings soon, and in our present spiritual condition with the primitive plea of the Bible alone we hope for great blessings in his name.—Mrs. H. A. Wheeldon.

NEBRASKA.

Overton, Jan. 2.—We had two added yesterday, one a young man who made the good confession, and his sister who had formerly been a Baptist. We begin the new year with much joy and hope.—O. L. Adams.

Red Cloud, Jan. 3.—Three additions to the church here on new year's day—one by baptism.—E. C. Davis.

Grand Island, Jan. 4.—Evangelists Putman and Egbert have just closed the greatest meeting ever held in this city. The people were never so stirred before; 97 took their stand for Christ—69 confessions, 12 by letter and statement and 16 from the denominations who had formerly been immersed. Those added were from 10 to 74 years of age. The official board of this church immediately called Brother Putman and Sister Egbert to hold another meeting this year.—Z. O. Doward.

Overton.—The church has extended to us a call for another year from March 1. One addition recently by letter. Expect to begin a meeting about Feb. 1 with a good evangelist.—O. L. Adams, preacher.

NEW YORK.

North Tonawanda, Dec. 30.—The work is prospering nicely at the Central church. There have been 11 additions during November and December at the regular services. We expect to begin a meeting the first Sunday in February with Bro. H. H. Moninger, of Steubenville, O., as evangelist.—W. C. Bower.

Buffalo, Jan. 2.—Three more added here since last report—two of them by primary obedience.—B. S. Ferrall.

OHIO.

Dayton, Jan. 5.—At Central church 11 were added last Sunday, one last night at prayer-meeting—nine of these were by confession and baptism, three by statement.—I. J. Cahill.

Beach City, Dec. 30.—The church at Dundee had not met regularly or had not had any Sunday-school for about four years. I held a meeting of 17 days resulting in three baptisms, renewal of spiritual life of the church, the re-establishing of the regular worship and provision for preaching half time. A Sunday-school will be organized and extensive repairs made on the church building. I can hold other meetings in January or February.—Bowman Hostetler.

North Baltimore, Jan. 3.—The meeting held by Evangelists J. D. Hull and Miss Gertrude Maxwell closed Lord's day evening, Dec. 25, with 24 accessions—18 by confession and baptism and six by statement. This was a remarkable meeting in some respects, especially in the number and character of the converts and in the splendid attendance throughout. On December 4 the congregation saw the conclusion of its debt raising campaign when all the notes, mortgages, etc., which had been outstanding against it, were burned. This scene marked the beginning of a new era in the work of the church at North Baltimore. For seven years it has been a constant struggle with debt but within the last two years the last dollar of nearly $2,000 indebtedness has been raised and paid. Bro. S. H. Bartlett spent the day with us and conducted the note burning service. The 24 new members represent 16 new homes, so that a family membership of about 60 additional persons is brought in contact with the church, not to speak of the friends and neighbors who can be reached through them. To a congregation of only 70 members such a large addition to its membership means a great deal also, for all of these new members are adult persons. On Oct. 1, 1904, this church became a self-supporting work and the outlook certainly is very bright.—T. J. White.

OKLAHOMA.

Perkins, Jan. 2.—We have just closed a three weeks' meeting at Carney; 28 were added: 18 by primary obedience, and 10 otherwise.—J. W. Garner.

Cleo, Dec. 30.—A. E. Wrentmore, of Erie, Kan., just closed an 18 days' meeting here with 22 added, nine by baptism. Good interest to the close. Three added the last night. This is extraordinarily good work, considering the field.—C. J. Chastain.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Erie, Dec. 30.—I held a 23 days' meeting in Winnemeg, O., with nine additions: six baptisms, two from the denominations and one by statement. I also held a nine days' meeting in Lyons, O., with 12 additions—11 baptisms and one by statement.—F. A. Wright.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston, Dec. 31.—Three added here Dec. 18; also three Dec. 25, making 31 added during the past eight months.—Charles E. Smith.

TENNESSEE.

Johnson City, Dec. 30.—I closed a short meeting of two weeks here, where J. Lem Keevil ministers. He had everything in readiness for a good meeting. Leonard Daugherty led the singing in the meeting. He is beyond all odds the best leader I have met in the south. Brother Keevil has some fine men to help in the work at Johnson City. Among them are Adam and Edward Crouch. These young married men are among the salt of the earth. Their brother, William, preaches at Bristol, Tenn. Sam

Priceless Book Sent Free for the Asking.

"There be books and books;" some edifying, others entertaining, and still others instructive. The average man is so busily engaged in the labor of money making, that he has little time and less inclination for books which instruct; hence, when he feels out of sorts, either he gives no heed to Nature's warning, or he consults a physician, at an expense which a little knowledge would have enabled him to avoid.

There is probably no complaint upon which the public is so little informed, as hemorrhoids, or piles; this small book tells all about their causes and cure; it treats of the different forms of blind, bleeding, itching and protruding piles; describes their symptoms, and points the way to a cure so simple and inexpensive, that anyone can understand and apply.

All affections of the rectum are treated in simple, plain language, so that all may understand, and learn how the cause may be removed. Many people suffer from piles, because after trying the numerous lotions, ointments and salves that are on the market, without relief, they come to the conclusion that a surgical operation is the only thing left to try, and rather than submit to the shock and risk to life of an operation, prefer to suffer on.

This little book tells how this may be avoided, and a cure be effected without pain, inconvenience or detention from business. Write your name and address plainly on a postal card, mail to the Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., and you will receive the book promptly.

Bullock is another splendid man in the church. I begin a meeting Jan. 1 at Wilmington, Ohio, where E. J. Meacham preaches.—James Small.

TEXAS.

Dallas, Jan. 2.—Seventeen additions to the Central church yesterday, which we trust is the beginning of the best year's work in our history.—M. M. Davis.

Greenville, Jan. 2.—One addition yesterday. Reports made of year's work. I preached 224 sermons and made 113 pastoral visits. There were 119 additions under my ministry, 69 here and 50 in meetings at other points. This church raised, in cash, $3,282.43, $515.90 of this being for missions and benevolences.—John Wright Holsapple.

HOW TO WIN SOULS FOR CHRIST—John 1:40-46.

For the Leader.

This is the season of the year when the churches are engaged in special evangelistic efforts. Has our church a meeting at present? Has it enjoyed such a blessing in the recent past? Are we just now preparing for a revival? These are questions we in all the societies of the land may well ask ourselves this night. One who wins souls for the Master is said to add stars to his crown in proportion to the number he wins. Is this not an opportunity for us all? There is no one who may not beautify his crown in this way. Then what joy it brings in this life. We are happiest when we are leading someone else into the light. There is nothing more productive of happiness than helping the other person. The religion of Jesus Christ is the one way of life in all lands, the one system of all systems, the one plan of all plans that sends back upon the worshiper, the servant, the doer, as great a blessing as he sends forward upon the object of his efforts. And of all gifts, what one is more to be desired than the gift of enabling one to see the light, the gift of giving the life-giving word, the gift of bearing to one who is lost in sin the glad tidings of salvation? There is none greater. Let us study, then, how we may win souls this new year, this year the most of which is yet before us.

For the Members.

1. Personal work is the one method of winning souls for Christ. We see here in the lesson how the method of personal work figured in the making up of that blessed company who journeyed all the way with the Lord in his earth life. Personal influence is the most lasting and potent influence in the world. There is nothing else half so powerful to-day. The glory of the gospel in its great triumphs over men in all lands lies in the personal Savior it brings to men. Study then to be a person of influence, for thus can one direct the most powerful incentive in the world for good.

2. Personal work means not only the method of bringing to bear upon people the personality of Jesus, and along with it in the work of bringing them to the Savior, the personality of the worker, but it means the method of emphasizing the personal over the institutional. The impersonal method of the modern world, that method that is seen in the great daily which carries the name of a company instead of, as in the olden time, the name of an editor, and as could be cited from other instances, may catch some who are susceptible to the influences of abstractions and who stand in awe of the colossal, but there is great loss every way in good work as compared with the days past and present where the personal reigns.

3. The church is important. There is no need of minimizing the place and the worth of the church. But we will succeed in proportion as we preach to men a personal Christ who died and arose again for them. And we will succeed in proportion as we send persons after those we would bring into the fold. Let there be organization, let there be plans, let there be institutions, but let all these be for the sake of enlisting, stirring up, quickening men and women to their opportunities as personal workers, going out to bring in their friends and neighbors, and the stranger of all the land from the many ways of sin. A church will never become so large that it is not still made up of persons, and that its greatest power is not its personal power. Put a thousand members to work saving every man his man. Put the largest Endeavor Society to work, member by member, each to win one for the Master.

4. Then, the prevailing form of humility that is heard from upon every field of gospel action where young people are exhorted to go out and work with the people, to go out and plead with the wayward, to go out and ask those in the audience who are almost persuaded to go forward in answer to the invitation—that form of humility that expresses itself like this: "I can not do personal work. Why, I would drive people away from the Christ rather than bring them to him"—is a most dangerous attitude to assume towards the duty that is incumbent upon every one—the duty of making a personal effort to save someone else, to bring others to the Master. It is also a mistaken estimate of one's influence. Every one has influence. There is not an Endeavorer who can not have influence with some one in the community. God has not made anything wholly void of worth, nor has he one of all his poor, weak children who is not stronger than someone else not far off. Think of it! And herein lies the ground of the responsibility to do personal work. I can, therefore I must.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Have I ever asked the Lord in prayer to help to know the one whom I should lead to him?

Christian-Evangelist,

Dear Sir:—I beg to call your attention to the fact that the National Lines of Mexico will put in a new time card on January 8, 1905, which will shorten the time considerably between Mexico City and points in the United States, and make the fastest time ever scheduled between the two republics. This will also be the first time that any road has given to the public three daily trains each way between St. Louis and Mexico City. Two fast express trains, one leaving St. Louis at 2:21 p. m. and one at 8:40 p. m., over the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & So., for Laredo, Texas, making direct connection there for Mexico and carrying through Pullman sleepers to Mexico City without change. A third train leaves St. Louis daily via the Missouri, Kansas and Texas, "The Katy," at 8:32 p. m., carrying through sleeper for Mexico City via San Antonio, Eagle Pass and Monterey.

We take pleasure in giving below the proposed schedule of these trains, and I trust that you will find it convenient to make mention of this important event in Mexican R. R. progress. You will note that the time between Mexico City and the United States has been very considerably shortened by this change. In the matter of mails from 12 to 20 hours will be saved in the time necessary to bring a letter from St. Louis, New York and other points in the United States to Mexico.

THE FIRST MIRACLE IN CANA.—John 2:1-11.

Memory verse, 11.

Golden Text.—Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.—John 2:5.

After his baptism and temptation, Jesus had, apparently without much delay, returned to his own community of Galilee where he had been reared (John 1:43). He may have remained there for a considerable time in comparative retirement. The circumstances connected with the baptism and the alternatives presented by the temptation in the wilderness (not mentioned in John's Gospel) must have given him much to think about, for they served, in a measure, to define the nature of his Messianic work and the conditions under which it was to be performed.

But however long or short this stay in Galilee may have been, the miracle at Cana occurred near the end of it (John 2:12).

Jesus went to a marriage feast. This simple fact marks out a distinction between him and many other great religious leaders and teachers. They have been aloof, remote, unintimate with the common life of men, as if their influence depended upon the maintenance of an air of mysterious separation from all secular and ordinary things. There has been an impression that ministers should be so. Happily, the idea is vanishing.

With Jesus there was no fictitious dignity or artificial elevation above the common interests of men. He was human, not professional, in his attitude toward life's joys and sorrows. So he went to the wedding feast in the village near his own town of Nazareth and doubtless he was a welcome guest—he and the little group of men who had already attached themselves to him as friends and followers.

The occasion for this miracle of the water and wine seems strangely trivial for an outpouring of divine power. But the occasion for nearly all of the miracles was comparatively trivial. It was the curing of a fever, or the increase of a draught of fishes, or the feeding of people who had wandered into the wilderness forgetting to carry their lunch. At the greatest it was the restoring of a dead man to his friends and family for a few more years. Disease and death are, to be sure, weighty matters with the individual, but the point is that the miracles of Jesus, in their immediate and direct results, had a bearing only upon the comfort or happiness of certain individual people and did not look toward the advancement of his own kingdom or the promotion of his mission or any general change in the natural and slow development of institutions and events.

There is no fact more significant in connection with the miracles of Jesus than the moderation with which he used his divine power. Not only did he refrain from using it to save himself from hunger or effort or fatigue—that comparatively gross temptation was put away when he refused the invitation to turn stones into bread for his own satisfaction—but he refrained also from using his miraculous power to bring about the sudden establishment and triumph of his own kingdom. There was no summoning of legions of angels, no overwhelming demonstrations of Messianic power in the presence of the religious leaders, no great displays of glory and authority. Instead of that, he used his power to help people who needed help. The first thought was always of the other person's need; the second, of the revelation of God's love and sympathy with men. The miracles had, to be sure, an evidential value to those who saw them, showing that the one who performed them was endowed with divine power, but their greater value was in showing the character of God as one who is ilwling to use his power for the good of men.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting.

PRAYER FOR THE MINISTRY.

"Remember them that had the rule over you, and that spake unto you the word of God; and, considering the issue of their lives, imitate their faith. . . Pray for us; for we are persuaded that we have a good conscience, desiring to live honorably in all things. And I exhort you the more exceedingly to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner."—Heb. 13:7, 18, 19.

It would argue great ingratitude, and a lack of intelligent appreciation, for the members of any church to be unmindful of those to whom it is indebted for the preaching of the gospel. Such is the vital relation of the ministry to the successful ongoing of the church, that the church can not succeed without carrying its ministers on its heart, and remembering them in its prayers.

A call to remembrance. These Hebrew Christians were exhorted to remember them that had the rule over them, and that spake unto them the word of God. This refers to those who had accomplished their work in the past, and who had gone on to their reward. They are not to be forgotten because they are no longer present in the flesh, but are to be remembered for what they were and for what they did. What church can not call up a long line of noble men of God; through whose labors, directly and indirectly, it has received its inheritance of faith and spiritual privilege? They are to be remembered, and the issue of their life considered, in order that we may "imitate their faith."

A request for prayer. "Pray for us," is the cry that comes out of the heart of this inspired writer, as it has come from the heart of many a preacher of the gospel since his time. Whatever may be said of other parts of this Hebrew letter, this passage has the Pauline ring in it. It would be interesting to know what proportion of the membership of our churches make it a part of their daily devotions to pray for their ministers. Is it not likely that, if our churches prayed more for their preachers and criticised them less, they would have longer pastorates and do a much greater work? It may be recommended as a divine recipe for long and successful pastorates, that churches pray for their ministers.

Twofold reason for prayer. The first reason for praying for the preacher is that he may receive the needed wisdom and grace for his difficult and responsible duties. Every true preacher feels deeply the need of divine assistance in order to do his work acceptably. Even inspired preachers felt the need of the prayers of their brethren. A second reason is that the church that prays for its minister is not likely to find fault easily, nor to magnify his faults On the contrary, if its prayers are sincere, it will give its hearty moral and financial support to the preacher, and will speak kindly of him to others. The church that does this to the greatest extent, other things being equal, will achieve the largest success.

Basis of request for prayer. "For we ar persuaded that we have a good conscience, desiring to live honorably in all things." It ought to be easy to pray for such a preacher. No other kind of preacher is likely to desire the prayers of his brethren, or to request them. To maintain a good conscience, and to desire to live honorably in all things, is the standard of life to which all should aspire. One object of his request for prayer was, "that I may be restored to you the sooner." Separated for a time, for some reason, from those with whom he was connected by spiritual ties, he longs to be with them, and solicits their prayers to this end.

Prayer and Evangelism. In these days when we are hoping for a widespread revival among the churches, what better way is there to bring it about than by earnestly praying that our ministers may be filled with the Spirit, and burdened with the sense of their responsibility for the salvation of the lost?

Prayer. Oh, God, our Father, we thank Thee for the gift of godly and consecrated men who have preached the gospel in the past, and who are to-day preaching Thy word faithfully, both to saint and sinner. May they be richly endowed with Thy Spirit, and, under the constraining love of Christ, so preach the gospel of Thy grace, that multitudes of people may be won from the service of sin to the love and service of God. In Christ's name. Amen.

The Lantern Man. By Geo. W. Hamilton, (Broadway Publishing Co., 835 Broadway, New York. Pages 381, price $1.50.)

College life is generally one of interest, and this story of "sweetheart days" will, no doubt, appeal to many young people. For ourselves we found it rather tedious in the beginning, but the interest increased as one became more familiar with the characters. The fault of the book is that it has no outstanding character. The Lantern Man, which gives the title to the book, is the author of a startling, sarcastic and mysterious sheet, "The Lantern," which throws the college into consternation, but he can hardly be called the hero of the story. The author has insight into the emotions which sway the heart and rule the events of life, but he has brought on to the canvas too many figures for a picture that will last.

but what can be cured if treated in time and the proper remedy is used. Medical authorities have known for a long time that the Berry of the Saw Palmetto is one of the best remedial agents known. Vernal Palmettona (Palmetto Berry Wine) is made from a combination of Palmetto berries and seven other vegetable drugs of well known curative properties, and the remedy is meeting with a hitherto unheard of success in the cure of all diseases of the stomach, kidneys, liver and bladder, and the minor ailments that are brought on by diseases of the mucous membrane and impure blood. This remedy works in harmony with nature and the Vernal Remedy Company, of Le Roy, N. Y., will cheerfully send you, free of charge, a trial bottle and booklet. Grudge none, bring thou unsparingly

Then when the pot is filled—
  What doth thy counsel say?
Empty it 'til the last be spilled;

LLOYD BAXENDALE.

By G. P. RUTLEDGE.

Author of "Pledge in Sermon."

CHAPTER XV.

THE SITUATION BECOMES MORE COMPLEX.

Two years have elapsed since Mr. Baxendale's resignation; yet the Poplar Square church is looking for a pastor. Dozens of distinguished men have supplied the pulpit, with a call in view, but upon each candidate a division of sentiment has retarded the work of the pulpit committee.

Dr. Sullivan, the first applicant, was not even officially considered. In conversation with a few members of the church, Mr. Cunningham and two or three others urged his candidacy, but the committee did not think it worth while to place his name before the board.

The Rev. Alexander Norris, D. D., of Washington, the next prospective pastor, either thought it his duty or concluded that it would result in his own favor to publicly review Mr. Baxendale's position. It is hardly necessary to say that his sermon occasioned much unfavorable comment. All students of human nature know that such an effort would only add fuel to the flames. He left many enemies in the church, and also in the city, outside of the church. One of the daily papers quoted his sermon and criticised his lack of discretion. Mr. Steele, who accompanied him to the train, told him that while he, personally, agreed with his criticisms of Mr. Baxendale, he had made a mistake.

Others came and went, but the selection of a pastor seemed impossible. Quite a number were recommended by the committee, but the board usually failed to acquiesce in the choice. Only three were unanimously decided upon by the board, and when their names were presented to the congregation an unhealthy division was the result.

By this time, the Poplar Square church had acquired an unenviable reputation throughout the denomination. It came to be looked upon by the ministry as "a preacher killer." It was, therefore, with exceeding difficulty that an occasional representative minister could be induced to fill the pulpit. Frequently, there was no preaching for several consecutive Sundays—except by the young man who had acted as Mr. Baxendale's assistant, and had been retained indefinitely. Consequently, the audiences were gradually diminished, many of the members lost interest, and the great church seemed to be facing a new crisis—that of disintegration.

In the meantime, Mr. Baxendale was kept very busy—answering his numerous correspondents, lecturing, and writing for various periodicals. The circulation of his book, "The Scriptural Church," published about one year after his resignation, was rapidly increasing. His friends procured it because of their admiration of the author, his enemies bought it to find new material for criticism, and the general public innocently read it through mere curiosity. The heaviest sales were in Providence. Six months after its publication, it was estimated that every family in the Poplar Square church possessed a copy, and the rage naturally took fast hold upon the city. The newsdealers gave it the most prominent place in their stores, and were soon forced to lay in a tremendous supply.

Determined upon having a part in the sensation, Major Burns, without consulting the author, purchased ten thousand copies direct from the publishers, and advertised that upon the receipt of a postal card a copy would be mailed from his office, free of charge! Some of the local dealers protested, but he stubbornly maintained that he had the right to buy books and give them away, if he so desired.

The book, like its author, was condemned by the religious press and held up to ridicule by the pulpit. The criticisms upon it, however, instead of diminishing the sales, increased them.

One newsdealer, in the neighborhood of the Rev. Dr. Mc Giniter's church, gave out the information that on Monday after the learned divine had paid his respects to Mr. Baxendale and his book, he had disposed of his entire stock and taken more than a hundred orders besides! When Major Burns heard of this, he suggested that the publishers ought to send the preacher a liberal check with the request that he repeat his attack upon the book!

Such a wholesale dissemination of Mr. Baxendale's views naturally imbedded the new doctrine in the hearts of thousands. He planted a greater harvest than he had planned.

Mr. Baxendale and Alma met occasionally. The love each felt for the other became more intense as the weeks and months passed, but neither suspected the feelings of the other to be more than a friendship born of a long and pleasant acquaintanceship and fraught with an interest of mutual welfare. Alma imagined that Mr. Baxendale was kindly disposed toward her because he and her father were congenial to each other, while he felt that she thought of him only as her former pastor and her father's friend. When invited to the Randolphs—always by the head of the household—he visited with the entire family, as he had always done, and never sought her exclusive company. He argued with himself that this was the only honorable course to pursue. He wondered, at times, however, that he did not meet Ralph Cunningham at the Randolph home as of yore. Could he only have known the circumstances connected with that young man's last call upon Alma, his course might have been different.

Upon Alma's return from Europe, Ralph had called and spent the evening. He upbraided her for not writing to him while away, and likewise for the chilly reception he was then receiving. She frankly informed him that she wished their former friendship discontinued. Whereupon, he took her hand in his, confessed his love for her, and entreated her to become his wife. Withdrawing her hand, rather abruptly, she assured him that she did not love him and never could. Thus rebuffed, he flew into a rage, accused her of being infatuated with the excommunicated preacher, and registered a vow that, in some way, he would have revenge. From his jealous eyes there gleamed a terrible threatening demon, which frightened her; and, without replying, she quietly withdrew, leaving him alone in the parlor. After vainly waiting a reasonable length of time for her return, he left the house, declaring in his heart that he would be avenged of his rival, if it required a lifetime.

A CHEAP HEART CURE.

"Oh, That Choir!"

The wail of the "convention-goer" on "that organ" has stirred up another friend to express his feelings about "that choir" which plays Mrs. Malaprop not infrequently on like occasions.

"Why should a choir," he asks, "consider itself a thing apart from the rest of the program, singing anything that fancy suggests, at its own sweet will, whether it has any bearing upon the intellectual or devotional side of the meeting or not? Let us give one or two specific instances. In a recent spirited Christian Endeavor meeting, after an enthusiastic speaker had aroused the audience to action, when the theme was life and progress, and when aggressive vigor, earnest hopefulness, was in the air, the choir sang Phœbe Cary's beautiful funeral song,

> "'One sweetly solemn thought
> Comes to me o'er and o'er—
> I'm nearer my home to-day
> Than e'er I was before.'

They might just as well have sung,

> "'Sleep on, beloved; take thy rest.'

"On another occasion, when the audience was wearied with the long service, a large part of which had been musical, and when all were waiting for one of the chief speakers, whose time had already been cut down from half an hour to twenty minutes by preceding anthems, the choir arose, shook out their skirts, adjusted their stiff collars, cleared their throats, listened to a long voluntary on the organ, and then began,

> "'A little time for patient waiting.'

"Once more, toward the close of a long session, when the spiritual forces were at their best and the congregation was about to go away with new resolves to lead a strenuous Christian life, the quartette choir, wishing to show their musical agility, began each one individually and collectively to declare that he or she was a pilgrim. The tenor declared that he was a pilgrim, and the bass hastened to add that he was a pilgrim, and the soprano volunteered the same information, while the alto, not to be outdone, asserted that she, too, was a pilgrim. Then each added that he or she was a stranger as well as a pilgrim. They followed each other over hill and dale, jumped all the musical fences, and came in on the home stretch, all declaring unanimously that they were both pilgrims and strangers—a fact which, if true, had absolutely nothing to do with the subject of the meeting or the program as outlined.

"But most exasperating of all is the mumbling choir, whom nobody can understand. Many anthems sound to the audience something like this:

> "'Um, um, am, dum, dum, sam,
> Oh, ah, se, la, la, lam.'

Why should a choir consider the words it sings of no consequence? Suppose a speaker should mount a platform and give vent to a number of connected musical sounds, without any sense or any possibility of being understood by the audience! He would be hissed off the platform. But that is just what half the professional choirs are constantly inflicting on a long-suffering public."

So much for our friend's protest. Who will say there is not much reason in it? The fact is, the anthems and special choir music should be selected to fit the occasion as carefully as the addresses or the scripture reading.

It is as unfit to have an inappropriate anthem as to have a speech on the use of farm fertilizer at a Christian Endeavor convention, or an address on the duties of the lookout committee at a meeting of the grange.

The anthem should never be chosen to show off the choir, but always to add to the spiritual power of the meeting. Usually, too, there is far too much special music. One short anthem for a convention session is quite enough. Let the congregation do the singing. It is the only audible part they can take in the service. Don't deprive them of this privilege.—Christian Endeavor World.

What Ailed Tommy-Mule?

"But how are we all going—that's what I want to know?" And grandpa looked from one to another of the big folks and the little folks that were seated around the breakfast table.

"Going where?" asked grandma.

"Why, to church, of course."

"That's so, and we all want to go."

"Grandpa," said Jack, "I could go on my pony."

"Yes, you could—that's a fact—and that makes one out; but how about the rest of us? The two-seated wagon won't hold us all, and the three-seated wagon is too heavy for one horse, and the other horse is sick."

Here Jack was ready with another suggestion.

"Why couldn't Tommy-Mule pull the big wagon? Isn't he strong enough?"

"Why, I suppose he could—that's so," and grandpa looked very much pleased with the idea. He hadn't thought of the mule, for the mule had never gone to church.

"Well, then," he added, "there will be room for everybody, and you must all get ready early, for it's a good long drive, and we don't want to go too fast on Sunday."

And so it happened that half an hour afterward grandpa and grandma, mamma and papa, and all the children but Jack, were in the big wagon being quietly taken to church by Tommy-Mule. Jack kept beside them on the pony all the way. When they reached the queer little country church they left the mule and the wagon and the pony in the sheds that were behind it—there were so many sheds that there was plenty of room—and then they went into the church. Just as they were all seated and the service began, Tommy-Mule gave such a loud cry that everybody was startled.

"What is the matter with that animal?" grandpa whispered in a confused way to grandma.

"I don't know what can ail it," she said, looking very red and uncomfortable; and then the mule cried again, louder than before.

"Dear me! We can't stand that—I'll have to go out and see what the trouble is."

"I think I know," whispered grandma, an idea coming to her, "Jack has put the pony too far away from Tommy-Mule, and he's crying for it—he's so fond of the pony, and he's lonesome among all those strange horses," and then grandma said something in a low tone to Jack, and the boy went out and tied the pony right beside Tommy-Mule. After that the mule kept very quiet and they were all glad.—S. Jennie Smith, in Christian Work.

The Real Pickaninny

Most pickaninnies are fond of the white people. The acme of many a little black girl's happiness is reached, her cup of joy runneth over, when she is allowed to play for half an hour with the dainty little white child of the "big house," as the planter's residence is invariably called by the little darkies.

The pickaninny is provided with a hat, but he seldom wears it. No matter whether the mercury in the thermometer is near the zero mark or whether the Southern sun is beating unmercifully down on his kinky head, he carries his hat in his hand.

The pickaninnies of Dixieland are probably the most neglected little mortals on the face of the globe. And they thrive on neglect. They are always fat and healthy. No one has ever heard of a delicate little negro. Occasionally one dies, to be sure, but neglect cannot be ascribed as the cause of its demise, for if neglect could kill them, there would be no pickaninnies in Dixieland to-day. It gets used to neglect early in life. Even during its babyhood, when the wee pickaninny's voice reaches out for a high C in the stilly night, its mother seldom hears it, and when she does, she seldom heeds it.

The pickaninny's mother often puts into practice that advice of Solomon's concerning the use of the rod. He is often tried, condemned, and executed without being allowed a word in his own defense. "Yo'se done hurt dat baby, 'caze hit hain't er squallin' fuh nuffin," she declares, and although the little accused one is not guilty, his jacket is severely tanned.

Strange to relate, the pickaninny seldom minds chastisement. In fact, at school, many mischievous ones endeavor to see how many whippings they can get in one day. One little fellow, who was so black that soot would have made a white mark on him, was looked upon for a whole week as a hero, because he had received fourteen separate and distinct floggings in one day.—Blanche M. Knowlton in The Pilgrim for January.

The Medieval Religious Wars.

On both sides of the great controversy which took such fearful shape in the middle of the seventeenth century, but especially on the Protestant side, the minds of men were devoted, not to seeking that peace which was breathed upon the world by the New Testament, but to finding warrant for war—and especially the methods of the Chosen People in waging war against unbelievers—in the Old Testament. Did any legislator or professor of law yield to feelings of humanity, he was sure to meet with protests based upon authority of Holy Scripture. Plunder and pillage were supported by reference to the divinely approved "spoiling of the Egyptians" by the Israelites. The right to massacre unresisting enemies was based upon the command of the Almighty to the Jews in the twentieth chapter of Deuteronomy. The indiscriminate slaughter of whole populations was justified by a reference to the divine command to slaughter the nations round about Israel. Torture and mutilation of enemies was sactioned by the conduct of Samuel against Agag, of King David against the Philistines, of the men of Judah against Adonibezek. Even the slaughter of babes in arms was supported by a passage from the psalms, "Happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones." Treachery and assassination were supported by a reference to the divinely approved Phinehas, Ehud, Judith and Jael; murdering the ministers of unapproved religions, by Elijah's slaughter of the priests of Baal.—Andrew D. White in the January Atlantic.

A Barnyard Curiosity.

Any one who has taught in a school whose children live on treeless streets and are miles away from woods and fields, will be inclined to doubt whether in these respects the country school has not the best of the bargain. Not long ago in a school of two thousand children on the lower east side of the city of New York one of the teachers brought a hen and chickens to school for the benefit of her own class, none of whom had ever seen either a live fowl or a brood of chicks. With the consent of the principal the hen and her family were put into a barrel in the small garden in the rear of the school. It was arranged to have the entire school of two thousand children visit the back yard in squads of fifty each day for a week, each squad spending one half hour in observation. It was found that not only had the children, with few exceptions, never seen a hen and chickens, but that many of the teachers had never seen them either. So ignorant were both teachers and children as to the proper treatment of the creatures they were observing, that the principal found it necessary to assign someone to supervise the observations in order that the chicks might not be poked to death.—The Chautauquan for December.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The Coming Man.

A pair of very chubby legs
Incased in scarlet hose;
A pair of little stubby boots,
With rather doubtful toes,
A little kilt, a little coat,
Cut as a mother can—
And lo! before us stands in state
The future's "coming man."

His eyes, perchance, will read the stars
And search their unknown ways;
Perchance the human heart and soul
Will open to their gaze;
Perchance their keen and flashing glance
Will be a nation's light—
Those eyes that now are wistful bent
On some "big fellow's" kite.

Those hands—those little, busy hands—
So sticky, small and brown;
Those hands, whose only mission seems
To pull all order down—
Who knows what hidden strength may be Concealed within their grasp?
Though now 'tis but a taffy stick
In sturdy hold they clasp.

Ah, blessings on those little hands,
Whose work is yet undone!
And blessings on those little feet,
Whose race is yet unrun!
And blessings on the little brain,
That has not learned to plan!
Whate'er the future holds in store,
God bless the "coming man"!

The Advance Society.

Next week begins our new continued story, "A Week with the Woodneys." I hope you'll like it. Sadie Evelyn Pugsley, Cedar Crest, Woodbine, Ia.: "I have determined with the new year to try to keep the Advance Society rules. I realize how important good reading is, and while it is hard to do it without some incentive, I hope with the aid of the Av. S. to do more than the rules require. Please state just what the quarterly report should contain." (Either a brief summary of work done, or a detailed account of each week, as you have time or inclination.) Mrs. A. F. Calvin, Brunswick, Mo.: "Enclosed you will find one dollar to use for our orphan Charlie, from a collection taken at our Christmas tree entertainment. God bless the work of the children!" (What a dear old Santa Claus, to remember our orphan!) Jean Chambers, Richwood, Ky.: "I think you must have the patience of Job, or you would refuse to tell the rules of the Av. S. again. I can't find time to do more than just keep the rules. Now you needn't begin to talk, for I don't crochet tidies, or 'make sofa cushions' either. And one has to talk a little about bonnets, if she is going to wear them. I send a dollar for Charlie, or for the missionary, as you think best." (I'll divide it equally.) Harry Buckley, of Lawrenceburg, Ky., has sent me a clipping about our missionary, which he takes from the Louisville Times; it appeared some weeks ago: "There sailed to-day from San Francisco a little Louisville woman with a purpose to devote her life to missionary work among the Chinese. Drusie Malott was born at Jeffersontown, Ky., twenty-two years ago. She was the daughter of a Christian minister. Her mother and brother live in this city. Drusie, at four years, could answer 267 Bible questions. She has always been of a deeply religious nature. She is a graduate of the girls' high school and of the business department of the public schools. Last July she resolved to be a missionary. She left for Chicago having, besides her railroad ticket, only fifty-five cents. After mission work in Chicago, she left with others for Los Angeles to be trained for foreign service. Since leaving Louisville she has received from those who learned of her purpose, the $149 necessary to pay her passage across the Pacific to China. Since leaving, she has written one of her friends, associated with her in Louisville mission work: 'No one can know how hard it was to leave mother and the loved ones. I had to pray over it for hours and ask God to give me the courage to stand out against all entreaties. But I am glad I have stepped out. I never knew such peace and quietness and joy in my life.'" (This is the girl whom the Advance Society is endeavoring to support so far away from her home. We have chosen her because from her words, her acts, her purpose, she shows that religion is with her a real thing—something for which she gladly gives up the comforts and pleasures of home and finds "quietness and peace" in entering a stranger's unfriendly land. Without support except as you send it to her, she goes with joy. And I think if the Chinese can learn Christianity from anyone they will learn it from a person like Drusie Malott.)

Richard Mitchell, Apache, Okla.: "I am 11 and in the 6th grade. I have just heard of the Av. S. and want to become a member. How long do I have to keep the rules before I can be on the Honor List?" (12 weeks.) "Where can I get a badge?" (You can send me 90 cents and receive the gold pin; as for the badge each one makes his own.) This came from Miss Tena, of our Orphans' Home: "Your letter to Charlie came all right, and the money enclosed. He is improving so much in his writing. He is a nice boy in every way. It was very impressive when he was baptized. I wished his friends could be there. But none were, except our big orphan-family and three ministers. Charlie goes as fast and as reckless as any boy with two good legs. He is learning his music lessons very well and very seldom gives us a particle of trouble. He is full of fun and keeps those of his table laughing most of the time. I am so sorry I did not get to see you at our convention. My! I was busy!" Vessie Porter, Hiawatha, Kan.: "I will write you a few lines to-day for the fun of it. I am going to the same old school-house. We are going to have a box-supper on Thanksgiving night. I wish you could come." (Maybe I can.) "My papa and sister have been visiting in Illinois over three weeks and I have been doing the chores and I have a big time of it, too, sometimes! I am so glad Teddy got in for President, but maybe you are a Democrat." (Yes, maybe I am; but what has that to do with being glad about Teddy?) "Our teacher is a Democrat." (I should be pleased to meet her.) "She yelled 'Hurrah for Parker and Davis' so much that once when I went to cry 'Hurrah for Roosevelt and Fairbanks,' my tongue slipped and I almost said 'Parker and Davis,' and she said she had one girl converted; but it didn't last long, I'm thinking. I took music lessons all summer, but I want vocal lessons, too, when school is out. We have 48 pupils enrolled. How is the Av S.? I don't see the Evangelist till I go to the library in town. I don't think it much fun to not get an answer to my letters from you, so I send two pennies, for I can't find a stamp." (I bought a postal with one of the pennies and told Vessie that I just can't write letters to my young friends, it would take quite all my time. The other penny I put in our orphan fund. Speaking of pennies—the other day Ruth Thompson came over—it was on her 13th birthday, and she brought an offering of 13 pennies—a penny for each year. I think that was ever so much pleasanter and more profitable than my giving her a birthday present. I put three cents in the orphan fund and a whole dime for the missionary. In September I received 50 cents from Mrs. Carrie Johnston, of Eskin, Mo., and the same amount from a Colorado young lady who was visiting Plattsburg. Soon after a young lady living in Plattsburg gave me a dollar—all for our orphan.) Hazel Gilmore, Shenandoah, Ia.: "I inclose 90 cents for a gold Av. S. pin." (Did you get it?) "I have kept the rules several times for eight or nine weeks, but never for 12 weeks but once. I would like to see Charlie and Joe." Oklahoma City: "Enclosed find 50 cents for Charlie from another grandma who loves boys and prays God to bless them." S. John Duncan-Clark, Rushwell Manse, Throopshire, N. Y.: "My wife and I were away from home last summer when Charlie was visiting you. Had we known earlier, we should have been delighted to welcome him here. We live right out in the country, four miles from Auburn. We think Charlie could have had a good time with us. We love children, and as God has given us none of our own, we feel especially drawn to the homeless ones." (By the way, I wonder if any will invite Charlie for next summer to spend a week with them? New York, however, is too far. The trip is so much longer than our pocket-book!) Eva Williams, Delta, Col.: "I wish to join the Av. S. I am nine years old and in the fourth grade. As we have no Christian church here, I attend the Baptist church. As my sister is writing, I will close for this time." Alma Williams: "I kept the Av. S. rules for one quarter three years ago. I have started again. I am 13 and in the eighth grade. I joined the Baptist church three years ago. We live two miles from town on the banks of the Gunnison river. In summer it is very pretty here; the river in front, a grove on the left and back, and alfalfa to the right. I have taken music lessons two years. Two of my brothers have trombones, one a cornet, another a violin, my sister a guitar and papa a piccalo. How long does a person have to be a member before they can have an Av. S. badge?" (Membership and badges begin simultaneously.) "I send 25 cents for our orphan. God has said, 'As ye have done it to the least of these, ye have done it unto me.' My sister and I are piecing a quilt and we have 15 blocks. My brother is taking an electrical engineering course at the California University. I am very glad you are going to write another story."

(3rd); Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo. (24th); Ednah Shriver, Nebo, Ill. (6th); May Speece, Bucklin, Mo. (8th and 9th sent at same time); Mary Rice, Harrisonville, Mo. (4th); Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn. (14th); Evelyn Hord, Grayson, Mo. (6th). On Christmas day of 1903, Mrs. Deborah Ely, of Joplin, Mo., then 87 years old, sent a dollar for our orphan, and a New Year's greeting for the Av. S. Little late getting to it, in my report. Will announce prizes presently.

Business Notes.

The Topical Leaflet contains the Midweek Prayer Meeting Topics for 1905 and sells for 25 cents per 100.

Do not forget us in your song book selections, as we carry more of the good song books of the brotherhood than any other house.

Adnah, a tale of the time of Christ, is having a good run, for it is one of J. Breckenridge Ellis' best, and was never before offered for the price, $1.

For devotional and helpful books we can always refer you to Alone with God, Half Hour Studies at the Cross, and Heavenward Way, 75 cents each.

The best proposition we have at seven cents is the Revised New Testament, but it is not the American Standard, their cheapest being 20 cents the copy.

We are very grateful to our friends for the fine holiday trade, and trust that all the books and parcels were received in good order, but hold ourselves in readiness for the proper corrections.

Have you seen the new catalogue with the miscellaneous books? Well, order anything you want from this house, and if it is on the market you shall have it sure, and at just the price offered by others.

Robert Gordon, a story of the Mexican war, is one of our attractive books of good fiction, and has never been offered until put in our hands this winter for less than $1.50, but we are postpaying it for $1.00.

The first edition of the Lesson Commentary is in the hands of the brethren, and more than half of the second edition will go out to-day, so that all those ordering should have them by the middle of the week coming.

The Communion Wafers are now in such packages as will carry safely and securely, and have three pounds in a tin, selling at 75 cents per tin, not prepaid. All having used them commend them very highly.

To all those ordering Topic cards for either the Endeavor or Bible school we must beg a little time, so of the Lesson Commentary orders, as the first edition is entirely exhausted, but the second is on the press, and will be off the coming week and mailed you in good time for the first Sunday in the new year.

We have the best New Testament for use in your schools that can be had for seven cents per copy, it being revised, too, and we have the same book in better binding at 15 cents and in large primer type at 35 cents, all postpaid, but when these are gone, the supply cannot be renewed at such prices.

The Midweeks, better known as the Midweek Prayer Meeting Topics, are also a little late this year, but if our customers will wait on us a few days now, we promise to have all the orders filled in good time, and if all will be careful in ordering to specify just what they want, no mistake will be made. The price of the Midweek is 25 cents per dozen, $1.50 per 100.

Remember, the Communion Wafers as now shipped have just three times the quantity in a good tin, and are packed to carry safely, and are sold in proportion at the same price, the three-pound tins selling at 75 cents, whereas the one-pound pasteboard boxes sold at 25 cents. Not one of those using these wafers will ever trouble the ladies again about "baking the loaf," and they should not, either.

One enthusiastic friend writes us, "I had two other Lesson Commentaries given me Christmas, but yours is the best of all." Over 400 pages, selling for only $1.00, handsomely bound in cloth, no "limp" business done here when it comes to a book that is good for life, and should be retained in one's library for years to come.

The Y. P. S. C. E. societies are taking up the Bethany Reading Course as never before, and that means growth and development in the Lord and his work, and we are making special inducements to all such societies, believing it to pay all departments of the church to have our young people taught and developed in the work of the Christ and his church.

We are sending out the Normal Instructor, Part II, "The Christ," to many who are using them in connection with our lessons in the Bible school for the next six months, on the life of Jesus. The International Lessons are confined to the Gospel of John, but the Instructor takes up the life of the Christ systematically, and thus supplies for you what is lacking in John's testimony, but you will also need the part on The Land, Part IV, and the one discussing the People, Part VII. These are offered at the nominal price of 15 cents each, or $1.50 by the dozen, prepaid, or the set of seven for $1.00.

BUSINESS IN RELIGION.

A WRONG idea may work infinite mischief. The idea that religion and business are two separate and distinct things and should not be mixed, is a fundamental misconception that has wrought untold harm to the kingdom of God. That a business man may be a Christian and not put his business sense, his business experience and his means at the service of the church, is a notion that needs to be extirpated. For years our local churches, and particularly our state and national conventions, have suffered because the business men of the church—the men of affairs—were not behind the enterprises of the brotherhood with their capital, zeal and brains. To remedy this, the "Business Men's Association of the Christian Church" was organized at our last National Convention. It is nothing less than the effort to mobilize the most potent forces in our churches for aggressive Christian work. It is calling into active service a mighty unused reserve force preparatory to a great forward movement. National in its scope, worldwide in its purposes, it has its feet planted in the local congregations, and its hands outstretched to help forward every good work of the church. With the blessing of God, it has in it the promise and potency of infinite possibilities.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Missouri Bible College.

Allow us to present the following claims in behalf of the Bible college of Missouri:

1. The Bible college charges no tuitions. Practically therefore it is giving tuitions to young men, who are preparing for the ministry.

2. Because it charges no tuitions it must rely upon the gifts of its friends and the friends of ministerial education for its support.

3. The Bible college is the only institution in Missouri devoting itself entirely and exclusively to biblical and ministerial education.

4. The Bible college is reaching many of the young men and women who are coming in increasing numbers every year to the university of Missouri and the various colleges in Columbia.

5. Our beautiful and commodious new building will be ready for occupancy in February, and the problem of furnishing it is upon us. Your gift would help mightily. Thirty rooms are to be furnished for dormitories, and from these we must have an income to meet the annuity due to Brother and Sister Lowry upon their gift of $15,000, and to care for the running expenses of the building itself. Perhaps your congregation, or some member, would undertake to furnish a room. If so, will you not kindly correspond with us?

6. Lastly. We long to be serviceable to the growing cause of Christ in Missouri and neighboring states. Can you therefore put us in correspondence with young men who are available for the ministry or for missions? Can you yourself influence any of the bright and consecrated boys of your congregation to devote themselves thus to Christ? The harvest is ripe; the laborers are few. We ask you to join us in prayers that the Lord will send forth laborers into his field. W. J. Lhamon, Dean.

Current Events.

The True Moral.

Mr. Dooley is right—as he not infrequently is—in his analysis of the Chadwick case and the moral and financial principles underlying it.

> "How d'ye suppose that there lady fr'm Cleveland fooled thim bankers?" asked Mr. Hennessy. "Ye'd think they'd be too smart to be bunkoed."
> "Don't ye believe it," said Mr. Dooley. "Nobody is too smart to be bunkoed. Th' on'y kind iv people that can be bunkoed are smart people. Ye can be too honest to be bunkoed, but niver too smart."

Right, Mr. Dooley. The man who is bunkoed is, nine times out of ten, particeps criminis with the man who works the game. The two feloniously conspire to ignore the common principles of morality and fair dealing, and to get unlawful gain. But they do not deal frankly with each other, like honest thieves, so one of them pays tribute to the other. Then the rascal who loses calls the police. That is the natural history of most confidence games, whether of the gold-brick, three-shell, turf-investment or bogus-security variety. The case of Mrs. Chadwick was of the same sort. There is little doubt but that her wonderful success in securing money from banks was due to no hypnotic influence but to the promise of large bonuses which induced the bankers to take the chances and by the impartation of "secrets" which would put the bankers in a position, as they supposed, to blackmail certain well-known and wealthy men. The resulting crash and scandal are a warning to the bankers not to be more careful in their scrutiny of securities but to be more honest.

The Foolish Rich.

Perhaps we ought to be pretty well accustomed by this time to violent contrasts between poverty and wealth, but there are occasions when those who in reality can least afford to do so—namely, the rich—seem to go out of their way to make the contrast odiously conspicuous. The papers of a single day last week contained two "stories" which help to explain each other. One told of a $50,000 dinner for 36 people at the St. Regis hotel in New York, and the other gave some startling statistics of the poverty in that city. The dinner has already been a good deal commented upon, as of course it ought to be, for the advertising thus received by the host is one of the legitimate returns for his expenditure. The dinner was served in the "white marble room" of that luxurious hostelry, and the gold service was used exclusively. We are told that "no other metal was in sight" and very little porcelain. Other details are freely given by the press—whether accurately or not. But, however the details may have been, it is clear that a dinner costing nearly $1,400 per plate must have been a tolerably gorgeous affair. The comments which this episode suggests, are doubtless commonplace, but they are true. The plain fact, however commonplace, is that such a use of money is trifling with the sweat and blood of humanity. Fifty thousand dollars does not come without toil—somebody's. And when some gilded fool spends it on a night of revelry, it is as though you saw him pouring out the very life fluid of humanity for the fun of hearing it gurgle and seeing it flow. Of course it is, in principle, no worse than thousands of less conspicuous cases, but it makes one long for the pen of a Tolstoy to say again with a new fire some old familiar things about the relations of man to man.

The Other Story.

The other story, which came into sharp contrast with that of the St. Regis dinner, because it happened to be published on the same day, told of the poverty of New York City. A careful student of society, the former head of a university settlement, says there are 70,000 children in New York who go to school hungry every morning because there is not food enough in their houses to make a meal. He says that in that city there are two-thirds of a million people who are in acute distress by reason of poverty—not merely anxiety about the future, but actual suffering in the present. There are 4,000,000 paupers in the United States, according to his estimate, and one out of every eight in our total population is in grinding poverty, either being cared for at public expense or earning a wage which is grossly inadequate for a decent support. 1,700,000 little children, who ought to be dividing their time between school and play, are in factories and mills. There are other figures of similar import, but these are enough. Is it not fortunate that the windows of the "white marble room" in the St. Regis do not afford a good view of the scenes where these manifold tragedies of poverty are being enacted? It is no crime to be comfortable and happy, even in a world which contains much of unhappiness and discomfort. But it is scarcely less than criminal to be wastefully lavish in the midst of want. And it is monumentally foolish for those who are on top to flaunt in the face of society the evidences of the need of a sweeping readjustment. And it is, moreover, stupidly vulgar to spend fortunes on the mere glitter of gold service for a few hours in a world where there are things really worth doing with money. If Miss Corelli wishes to direct against such cases her criticisms of the vulgar rich, we will give her a hearty second.

Charges Against Senators.

The crusade against graft in the public service is getting uncomfortably close to some members of the United States Senate. Mr. Niedringhaus, who had been chosen by the Republican caucus for election to the Senate from Missouri, has been called upon to defend himself against a charge of receiving large campaign funds from the St. Louis brewers, on an agreement that he would favor legislation favorable to their business. The official investigation vindicates Mr. Niedringhaus, and he is likely, at this writing, to be elected as Senator by his full party vote. Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, has been indicted for conspiracy to defraud the government of public lands in Oregon, Idaho and California. Representative Hermann, also of Oregon, and United States District Attorney Hall, of the same state, are involved in the same charges. It is beyond question that the distribution of public lands in our western domain has been a fertile field for jobbery and graft in various forms. The enormous grants to some of the railroads in the west and northwest come properly under this head. Fraudulent claims under the homestead laws have also been common and the abuses which are now being uncovered are of this sort. Many minor offenders have been prosecuted during the past year, but the prevailing opinion has been that the greatest guilt has been higher up and that certain parties in high political circles were promoting these nefarious schemes and using their official influence to that end. The indictment of a United States Senator and other high officials is the result of an earnest effort of the department of justice to trace the fraud to its true source.

Senator Platt Attacked.

Of a different nature but not less startling is the charge which has been made against Senator Thomas C. Platt, of New York, by Mr. Post, chairman of the Postal Progress League. This league has been active in trying to secure legislation to improve the efficiency of the postal service, especially by the adoption of the post cheque currency plan and by the establishment of a parcels post similar to that in operation in several European countries. Both of these would bring the postal service into competition with the express companies far more seriously than at present. Senator Platt is president of the United States Express Company, and he opposes the proposed measures. Of course it would be wholly unfair to assume that his relation to the express business is the cause for his opposition to the postal bills. But Mr. Post claims to have evidence on this point. He says: "Senator Platt was approached by my representative to know his attitude on the question, and he clearly defined the fact that he was opposed to the measure (post cheque currency) because it was contrary to the interests of the express companies." On this ground Mr. Post is asking the Supreme Court to issue a restraining order to prevent Senator Platt from taking his seat because he does not fulfill his duties according to his oath of office. The mode of procedure is unusual, probably unique. Very likely the court will disclaim jurisdiction, and in any case it will manifestly be difficult to procure the kind of evidence that a court must require, since the issue has to do solely with the senator's motive in opposing the bills. But the case has the merit of bringing forcibly to mind the fact that there is in the United States Senate a coterie of men who are very closely allied with important private interests which stand to make or lose millions by the passage or defeat of pending bills. It is considered indelicate, even scandalous, for a judge to sit in trial upon a case in which he has even the remotest personal interest on either side, and of course no man is allowed to serve as juror in a case involving his own financial or personal interests. They are not asked to be impartial in spite of their private interests, but are ruled out to make room for those for whom no private interests are involved. Why should not the same principle apply to the making of laws as to their enforcement?

Cotton Twining.

He who pitches too high need not be surprised if he does not get through his song. The slump in cotton is a result of a lack of common sense. The effort last year to push the pendulum too high in a "corner" gave an unhealthy excitement to the culture of cotton, and this year there is an unprecedented crop, with diminished demand. The pendulum has swung the other way, and now there is talk of burning 2,000,000 bales of cotton to restore the equilibrium. And while foolish planters, in their disappointment at not reaping, as a result of speculation, get wild in their talk and action, England and France are seeking to extend their cotton fields in their colonies, so as to be more independent of the American. The American "has a good thing," but by the greed of some speculators, may lose very largely his foreign market, if he be not wise.

Postal Rates.

We have often commented approvingly upon the proposed post cheque currency plan. It was approved by the department, but rejected by the last Congress. The reasons which the committee gave for its adverse report were so shallow and transparent that they ought to be circulated by those in favor of the measure. As bearing upon the further measures proposed by the Postal Progress League we quote certain facts contained in a recent statement by the secretary of that association:

England has increased her two-cent weight limit from one ounce to four ounces with almost no increase of expenditure to the post office.

The Postal Progress League asks of Congress:

1. The enactment into law of H. R. 15,983, consolidating third and fourth class mail matter, at one cent per each two ounces, as recommended by the Post Office Department, thus reducing the present merchandise rate fifty per cent.

2. The enactment into law of H. R. 7,874—the Pope Parcels Post Bill—providing for the consolidation of third and fourth class matter, insuring parcels up to their full value, extending weight limit up to eleven pounds, and with rates:

3 oz. parcels	1c.
1 lb. parcels	5c.
11 lb. parcels	25c.

3. A convenient postal currency to supplement our inconvenient money-order service.

4. A local delivery parcels post, carrying large parcels at low rates, reviving the old post coach service on the rural post route.

5. The extension of the free rural service to the whole country.

College Fraternities.

It has been a question with educators for some time as to whether the Greek letter fraternities in connection with a great many institutions of learning were not an evil rather than a blessing. It has been argued by some that their tendency is to cultivate "snobbery" on the part of their members, and to unfit them, in a measure, for that free intermingling with people of all classes which is so marked a feature of our American life. Some time ago President Harper from the University of Chicago appointed a special committee to investigate conditions in these fraternities connected with the secondary schools in affiliation with the university. The committee, we understand through the daily press, has made its report, after due investigation, and such report is unfavorable to these societies, characterizing them as "an evil and a curse." The report points out the tendency in these fraternities to such evils as "smoking, drinking and card playing until a late hour," and advises President Harper to forbid all fraternities and sororities in the schools under his control. What effect this will have upon fraternities in general remains to be seen. Perhaps the agitation may result in correcting the abuses if it does not abolish the societies.

Forest Preserves.

Closely allied with the great irrigation schemes with which our government is rightly concerning itself, is the question of the preservation of our magnificent forests. The first congress ever held in this country in the interests of such preservation has just been in session. Even the lumber companies, which have had no compunction in ringing trees, so long as profits were in sight, and the railways are getting alarmed at the rapid disappearance of our forests. The woodman's axe and saw are steadily cutting away the woods, and fires devastate, sometimes due to the carelessness of hunters and campers, and sometimes the result of deliberate effort to improve pasturage or to clear a portion of land. The government established nine additional forest reserves last year, but its plans will be of little avail unless a rising public opinion backs up its efforts to check the vandalism with which the country has been cursed.

Characteristics of the New Evangelism.

In the old evangelism, special stress was laid on the work of getting God willing to save sinners. To this end, earnest prayer was made that God would send convicting power and regenerating grace, and convict and convert men. When penitents came to the altar to be prayed for, this was the prayer that was offered in their behalf. In the new evangelism, God is presented as seeking the sinner, and as anxious and willing to save all who will come to him. Its effort is to persuade men to be reconciled to God, and not to persuade God to be reconciled to men. It lays stress on human responsibility, and points out that God cannot save man without his consent and co-operation.

In the old evangelism, the appeal was to the emotions, or the spirit of fear, and the chief reliance of the popular evangelist was upon death-bed scenes and pathetic stories. The chief motive urged for immediate repentance was to get ready for death and for the judgment. Religion was not presented as having much relation with the life that now is, but as a sort of insurance against future punishment. In the new evangelism, the gospel is preached as "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." This means the preaching of Christ—his incarnation, his life of sinless perfection, his teaching, his death for man's sins, his burial, his resurrection from the dead, his ascension to the right hand of God, the descent of the Holy Spirit who was sent by him, and the proclamation of the terms of pardon through men who were guided by the Holy Spirit. Salvation is presented as fitting men for living here and now, as well as for dying. Christianity is presented as meeting the universal needs of man, and as the only means by which he can be brought into that perfection of character to which it is God's purpose to bring men.

The old evangelism was vague and indefinite in its directions to those who desired to enter upon the Christian life. It often left convicted sinners weeping and mourning because they could not find pardon and peace. Many became hardened and skeptical under such teaching. The new evangelism not only holds up Christ as the personal Savior, but points out clearly and definitely how men may accept him and his offer of salvation, and rejoice in the knowledge of sins forgiven. When men are brought to faith in Jesus Christ, and have a desire to become his followers, they are told, in the new evangelism, to put that faith and desire into the concrete acts of confessing Christ, and of being baptized in his name.

During the editor's recent visit to Denver, he heard a paper read at the ministerial alliance by a student of the new psychology, on the psychology of conversion, in which the writer urged, among other things, the value of putting the gospel into some concrete form so that men could take hold of it. Speaking to a Methodist minister on this point, after the adjournment, we called his attention to the value of the confession of Christ and baptism, as fulfilling this demand, and as having been, no doubt, provided in the gospel for this very purpose. He agreed with us at once, saying: "That is right; when men profess a willingness to be saved, close the contract with them at once!" We thanked him for the phrase—"Closing the contract"—and told him that was the greatest weakness in much of the popular evangelism of our day. When two business men agree on the terms of a trade involving large business interests, they do not separate with this vague agreement, but close the contract in some formal way that commits each other to the deal. Why not be as sensible in religion?

In his recent work on "Education in Religion and Morals," Prof. George Albert Coe, speaking of the value of the concrete in religious teaching, says: "Preaching, for example, is often weak, in spite of both intelligence and earnestness, because it fails to reveal a direct way for the hearers actively to apply the truth they hear" (p. 129). Again, the same author says: "As religious training has in the past erred by putting symbol in the place of reality, so there is danger in our day of not registering our moral and religious experience in any sufficient manner" (p. 169). We shall learn, after awhile, that the New Testament evangelism is based on the laws of the human mind, and that it has anticipated, by two thousand years, the findings of the new psychology.

Comparing Views—Baptists and Disciples.

The Watchman (Baptist) of Boston contains in its issue of Jan. 5 a paper which was read before the joint conference of Baptist and Disciple ministers in Washington, D. C., October 31, 1904, by Rev. C. F. Winbigler, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist church. The paper is in good spirit and was evidently written with a desire to be fair and just to both religious peoples involved. It mentions seven points of "fundamental agreements," namely: (1) the Bible the authoritative rule of faith and practice; (2) man's sinfulness and need of regeneration; (3) believers only should be baptized; (4) immersion of believers in water in the name of the Lord Jesus, is the only Christian or New Testament baptism; (5) that churches should be composed of baptized believers only; (6) the autonomy of the local churches; (7) that the Lord's supper should be regularly celebrated.

Then follow several points of "incidental agreement," including the setting apart of ministers; what the officers of the church are; calling Bible things by Bible names; believing in educational and missionary work; separation of Church and State; in holding the generally accepted theology; in having "the short but comprehensive creed — Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and obedience to his will and word." It is a little remarkable that this last item should be mentioned as an "incidental agreement," rather than as an "agreement in fundamentals." There is certainly nothing more fundamental in Christianity than its creed, and to agree on that is to be far along on the way to union.

In the matter of "disagreements," the writer does not always present the representative thought among the Disciples. The statement concerning our attitude toward the Old Testament is a case in point. He states the Baptist position as follows: "The Old Testament is not only the history of the Jews, but is the prophetical book of the world, containing eternal principles for individual, social and national life." Very few Disciples would dissent from that statement. Modern historical investigation of the Bible has made the Old Testament a much more living book than it once was. There is a great deal in the Old Testament Scriptures besides the old covenant, which, in the days of the apostles, was "ready to vanish away." Nor is it true that the deity of Christ is a more "cardinal and fundamental doctrine of the Baptist denomination," than it is among the Disciples. On the contrary, that truth is given a much more central and controlling place in our theology and practice than it has yet obtained among Baptists. As to the operation of the Holy Spirit, the writer says: "The Baptists believe that the Holy Spirit ordinarily operates through the truth to regenerate a soul, but, unlike the Disciples, they would not limit Him in His operation, and say that He can not and does not at times operate independently of the word." We doubt if there is a single representative teacher and preacher among the Disciples of Christ to-day who would limit the operation of the Holy Spirit to the written word. The statement that "the Holy Spirit operates through the truth," is very much broader than to say that He operates only through the written word, which is only one form of expressing truth. God's providences, the experiences of a human soul, influence of a Christian life, etc., are often used, no doubt, as means through which the Spirit conveys the truth to the mind and heart. Again, the writer does injustice, unintentionally, no doubt, when he says that "Disciples say that faith is a mere assurance and acknowledgment of facts." On the contrary, Disciples no less than Baptists, hold and teach that faith means "assent of the mind and consent of the heart, and trust of the will, in the personal Christ as a Savior."

It is no doubt true, as the writer claims, that there is a difference between the teachings of the two bodies as to the place which baptism occupies in its relation to formal pardon, and formal admission into the kingdom of God; but that the view of the Disciples verges on that of "baptismal regeneration" is not true. We would like to refer Dr. Winbigler to the little book of Dr. W. T. Moore on "The Fundamental Error of Christendom," which, the author holds, is baptismal regeneration. We must not say that to hold and teach what the New Testament says concerning baptism in its own exact words, verges on baptismal regeneration.

The whole article emphasizes the fact that Baptists and Disciples should become better acquainted with each other. They are much nearer together than they think. Each of them fails to some extent to get the point of view of the other, and hence to understand each other fully. The "plan of union" which the writer of the article emphasizes is for each of the two bodies to emphasize certain things, which, in his judgment, need more emphasis, and to modify its attitude concerning other points, which, in his judgment are made too prominent. The suggestions are, in the main, very wise, but they are not likely to be carried out except through a more free intermingling with each other, and a better understanding of each other. How can that be brought about?

Editor's Easy Chair.

At this writing, we are having what is called an "old-fashioned winter." There is snow, ice and sleet in abundance, with the mercury playing about zero. But why do we call such weather an "old-fashioned winter?" The tradition prevails that fifty years ago the winters all used to be made up of this kind of weather. You have heard your fathers and mothers tell of the deep snow that fell when they were boys and girls, and how they walked right over the tops of the fences, hunting in the fields or going to school. They have told you, too, how the rivers were all frozen over so that wagons could cross upon the ice, and what a number of people were found frozen to death. "Ah," they say, "we do not have such winters as those any more!" They may admit that this looks a little like the winters of those days, but after all it isn't the real thing! But the strange thing about it is that if you press these old people they will admit that when they were young their fathers talked to them the same way! Do the old people, then, consciously falsify concerning the weather? Certainly not. They report faithfully what they find registered in their memory. But it is only the unusual or extraordinary that makes deep and lasting impressions. The rest—the ordinary winters—have faded out of memory, leaving only the impressions of the extraordinary. This is one of the delusions of memory.

Every one of us can recall some event, or circumstance, back in childhood that made a profound impression on the mind. Perhaps it was a death in the family, or of some neighbor. Perhaps it was a little journey—the longest you had made up to that time—when you saw strange scenes and met with strange people. One of the earliest scenes, standing out in our childhood memory, is that of a covered wagon standing before the gate, as some relatives called by on their way to Texas to say good bye. There were tears and sad farewells. How far away Texas seemed in those early days! We can recall, too—and who of us can not?—bright, happy days that stand out, clear and distinct above other days, because of the happiness which came to us from some little circumstance that would seem trifling to us to-day. How little it takes to make the child-heart happy, and how ineffaceable is the memory of the deed that confers the happiness! The ravages of time which destroy so many of the works of man can not obliterate from the human heart the memory of a kind word or a loving deed, that dries up tears and dispels sadness and fear. Not for the weather's sake, then, have we referred to this law of memory, but for the sake of the childhood of to day. Deep and lasting impressions for good may be made upon the plastic mind and heart of the child. These will loom up as bright spots in memory, when the hair is streaked with gray and the eyes are dimmed by age.

Geologists tell us that deep down in the earth, on the hard surface of the rocks, formed in the remote ages of the past, are the tracks of birds, which were made in the then plastic material, and which have been perpetuated through all the intervening cycles of time. If parents and teachers could only realize that the child minds with which they are dealing are thus plastic and capable of receiving indelible impressions, how careful would they be in their actions, in their examples, and in their words, to make only such impressions as they would have perpetuated in the lives and characters of those whom they are training! How this fact emphasizes the value of early religious training, and of planting the young mind with the religious facts and truths that will abide with it forever! This is why the memorizing of selections of scripture and of noble poetry is so important a part of the education of young children. How it emphasizes, too, the law of kindness to children, both in the home and in the school! One of the saddest confessions we ever heard from the lips of a man, was the statement that he carried with him no bright recollections, no tender memories, no impressions of unselfish love, from the days of his childhood. He felt, he said, that his whole life had been impoverished by the lack of this treasure of pleasant boyhood memories. God forbid that there should go out from the homes of any of the readers of the Easy Chair, any boy or girl, to face the trials and temptations of life, unblessed by the memory of a Christian home, with its atmosphere of mutual love, and of mutual sacrifice for each other's happiness, and of the godly example of a father and mother!

A lady reader of the Easy Chair doubts whether she comes within the class of people we recently described as readers of this department. She would like to be, she says, but she finds it hard to be content with her lot in life, and she frets against the bars of circumstance that shut her out from the larger world, into which she would like to enter. Perhaps there is a little pride at the bottom of this fretting at one's lot in life. Nothing is more delusive than the idea, which is all too common, that if we had a larger sphere, or even a different sphere from that in which we find ourselves, we could do more good and be happier. The probability is, we are just where we ought to be, and where we can accomplish most good, if we could make up our minds to make the best of our situation. God wishes every humble, circumscribed sphere of life illuminated and glorified by the radiance of Christian faith, courage and patience. "He giveth grace to the lowly." And Jesus said: "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart." In this spirit of humility, we shall find opportunity, in every condition of life, to do good and to come into touch with God, who counts the humblest act done out of love for him, or for one's fellowmen, as immortal. Abide with us, sister, and we will seek to do thee good.

Notes and Comments.

Governor Folk's inaugural address sounds very much like his campaign speeches. He strikes the same clear, strong notes of reform which he then struck, and does not yield one hair's breadth because of the new power which has come to him from his election as governor. Official dishonesty is to find no quarter; participation in political affairs by all the voters is urged as a matter of common duty; the cities should have home rule; the police should be non-partisan; honest elections must be maintained at all cost, and a high ideal of civic righteousness should be demanded and maintained. These are some of the distinctive notes in the Governor's inaugural. The fact that Speaker Hill (Republican) left the chair to propose a resolution of endorsement of the policy outlined by Governor Folk, and that this resolution passed by a practically unanimous vote, gives hope that we are to witness an era of political reform in the state of Missouri, such as the oldest inhabitant has never seen. We have always believed that Mr. Folk, if elected governor, would do his duty in that high office as faithfully as he did in the humbler office of circuit attorney. He is starting out that way.

A great convention is being planned to be held in the city of New York next November in the interest of church federation, or a closer co-operation among the various evangelical Protestant bodies, in extending the kingdom of God on earth. We quote the following from a circular received:

> The convention of 1905 is assured. For the first time in the history of the Protestant evangelical churches in the United States, delegates representing denominations whose aggregate membership is over seventeen millions, will meet together for mutual counsel and federated action regarding matters of common interest. The letter missive that has called together the messengers from these churches that hold to Christ as the head says, "We believe that the great Christian bodies in our country should stand together and lead in the discussion of, and give an impulse to, all great movements that 'make for righteousness.' We believe that questions like that of the saloon, marriage and divorce, Sabbath desecration, the social evil, child labor, relation of labor to capital, the bettering of the conditions of the laboring classes, the moral and religious training of the young, the problem created by foreign immigration and international arbitration—indeed all great questions in which the voice of the churches should be heard—concern Christians of every name and demand their united and concerted action if the church is to lead effectively in the conquest of the world for Christ."

It would indeed be a great thing to bring to bear the united sentiment of these seventeen millions of Christian people on the great questions mentioned above. Why should it not be done? Why not join hands to push forward these great moral reforms while we are coming to a better understanding of each other and of the truth so as to form a more perfect union? Of course such co-operation does not involve or contemplate any interference with the perfect autonomy of any religious body thus co-operating. It will be a great convention and may mark a new era in the history of Protestantism in the United States.

The Herald and Presbyter, referring to the proposed union between the Presbyterians and Cumberland Presbyterians, speaks of it as "a union on the basis of our own doctrinal standards." That makes it a little hard for the Cumberland brethren, among whom are some of the best people we have ever known, to accept the proposed union. How much more simple and easy is the plan of union between Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ, where each body invites the other, not to its "own doctrinal standards," as the basis of union, but to the New Testament, to which both agree to conform their faith and practice.

The young revivalist to whom Brother Durban refers, and who has so deeply stirred all Wales, is thus described by a London paper:

> A wealth of black hair surmounts a head of no unusual contour or size. His black, searching eyes flash forth a message of hope and ambition. Now to the right, anon on the left, then straight ahead he peers into the faces of his mixed congregation as if to read the condition of the soul. His face bears the pallid hue that sleepless nights and long vigils ensure. His arms are either uplifted, outstretched, or folded—not still for a moment. And listen to his remarks: you are struck with the homeliness, the simplicity of the practical truths he enforces. His theme is the love of God. "Oh, friends," he declares, in the emotional language of Wales, "do you know what the love of God is? My heart is full to overflowing. Will you not also have the love of God in your heart? Oh, that I could tell you what it is and what it means. I ——" but his voice is choked, and tears trickle down the revivalist's cheeks; nor is he alone in his weeping. Someone relieves the intensity of the strained atmosphere by striking up a favorite song. In an instant the face of the preacher is wreathed in boyish smiles, and, with hypnotic sways of the hands, he leads the vast choir in their exultant singing.

Wherever he goes the evangelist insists on the following four essentials:

> 1. "Is there any sin in your past that you have not confessed to God? On your knees at once. Your past must be at peace."
> 2. "Is there anything in your life that is doubtful—anything you cannot decide whether it is good or evil? Away with it. There must not be a trace of a cloud between you and God. Have you forgiven everybody—everybody? If not, don't expect forgiveness for your own sins. You won't get it."
> 3 "Do what the spirit prompts you, obedience—prompt, implicit, unquestionable obedience—to the spirit."
> 4. "A public confession of Christ as your Savior. There is a vast difference between profession and confession."
> Some of the older inhabitants state that they do not remember anything like the present revival. Comparing it with the great Welsh religious revival of the years 1859 and 1860, they say that one great difference was that the revival of thirty-five years ago was largely a revival of fear, caused by the fact that the scourge of cholera was then heavy on the country, whereas the present awakening is one brought about by the manifestations of God's love.

It is in the earnestness and sincerity of the evangelist that his power lies. His utterances are reported to be crude and commonplace.

The Standard (Baptist) of Chicago, presents reasons for the union of Baptists and Free Baptists. Among other reasons, it states the following:

> The union would help towards the fulfilment of our Lord's prayer for the unity of his disciples. It is easy to descant upon the advantages of ecclesiastical competition and assert with loud voice that the divisions of Christendom work out the glory of God and the good of the kingdom. It is well to empasize that unity of spirit which is constantly increasing. But whoever gives careful thought to the work of making this world God's world cannot fail to realize that there are grave evils arising from a divided church of Christ. No one is wise enough to devise practical ways and means for the unifying of Christendom, but it is certain that its beginnings must be found in the coming together of those bodies which have most in common. If the various Baptist bodies cannot unite or the different Methodist organizations be merged, there is little hope for the union of denominations widely separated in faith and practice.

All of which is very good, indeed. It is refreshing and reassuring to see one of our staunch Baptist journals raising its voice in behalf of Christian union. It was not ever thus. It betrays their kinship to another religious body that has been urging the duty of Christians to unite these many years. We feel grateful for this reinforcement in our advocacy of Christian union from one of the ablest of our Baptist journals.

The different branches of the Presbyterian family—"the split P's," as one of their number has called them—are working at the problem of federation among themselves, having, it seems, despaired of effecting a complete organic union. Committees of seven of these Presbterian and Reformed churches in the United States of America, met recently in Pittsburg and adopted a plan of federation, which, we presume, will be submitted to the various Presbyteries for their approval, if it shall meet with the endorsement of the supreme judicatories of the several churches. The plan provides that each church, entering into this federation, shall retain its distinct individuality, that is, its own creed, government and worship, and all its rights and powers, except such as may be delegated to the "Federal Council," which is to be formed. The object of this council is stated to be "the prosecution of work that can be better done in union than separately." This federal council is to consist of at least four representatives from each of the constituent churches for each 100,000 communicants, or fraction thereof, up to 300,000, and where a church has more than 300,000 communicants, then four representatives for each additional 200,000 communicants, or fraction thereof. These representatives are to be selected by the general assemblies of the various bodies. This federal council is not to interfere with the autonomy of the different churches, but shall promote their co-operation in home and foreign missionary work, and in their publication and educational interests. It remains to be seen how this plan will be received by the churches. The significant fact is that it is a movement in the direction of closer union and co-operation, which is so marked a feature of the times.

The City the Goal*

By Lloyd Darsie

The quest of Abraham, the man of faith, is also our quest. The vision that filled his soul is the vision that beckons us on. The city is the goal of our ambition, "the city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." When the hour of destiny was striking; when the fulness of time was come; when great world empires had come and gone; when the last universal kingdom had reached "the golden age"; when Daniel's vision was to be realized; when the God of heaven set up the everlasting kingdom, he selected a city. Jerusalem was the beginning point. Here the highways of the nations met. Here the civilizations of the world converged. Here at this focal point, here in this forum of the nations, the cross was planted, the divine love was manifested and the world's altar was erected. When Jesus made his program for world-wide conquest, he said to his disciples, "Begin at Jerusalem." "Ye shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem and in Judea and in Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Jerusalem was a strategic point. The city, as ever, offered unbounded opportunities. Here the leaven was put in the meal. Here the mustard seed was planted. Here the handful of corn was scattered on the top of the mountains. Here the gospel was first proclaimed and the law went forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Thus Almighty God ordered his advancing and conquering kingdom. Thus great victories of faith were won; and let it be remembered that the apostles, under the immediate guidance and inspiration of the Holy Spirit, followed the world's great highways, selected the teeming centers of population and in the cities of Antioch, Ephesus, Corinth, Athens, and finally in imperial Rome, preached the gospel and founded great metropolitan churches, whose life and history was the glory and strength of the kingdom in the early days of Christianity. Then, as now, the city was the point of influence and the unit of power. What the heart is to the body, the city is to the country. It contains all that is fairest and foulest in our present civilization. It is a throbbing focus of both good and evil. Its mighty pulsations drive the currents of life to the very finger tips. When the blood is impure, the body suffers; when the heart is deranged, every function of the being is impaired. When the heart is overpowered by toxic poison, the body dies. Make the heart pure and you purify the body.

If the gospel is to take America, it must first conquer the city. If the Disciples are to dominate America, we must win our way in the great centers of population. If we are to teach and influence to any considerable degree the life of our country we must make a thorough, persistent and intelligent study of city evangelization.

This is the main issue before us. It is a subject of intense and thrilling interest. It is a subject to which we, as a people, have given little attention. The conquest of the great cities of America has excited, at the best, only a languid interest among us. There has been no hearty, generous, enthusiastic response to city evangelization. This is partly due to ignorance and partly to heredity. We have not fully appreciated the dominance of the city in American life. We have not grasped the truth that the intelligence, the wealth, the commerce, in fact, the forces of our present civilization, are fast centralizing in the cities. Our great business corporations, our federated industries, our educational institutions, our political organizations, our benevolent societies, our great daily newspapers, our gigantic treasure houses, all find in the city a common home. It is the center of influence. It is the source of power. It is the hub of the wheel. All life and enterprise radiate from this common center. We have said with complacency, "The great men come from the country." This has been true in the past. The future will tell a different tale. Profound changes are taking place. The thrift, the intelligence, the genius of the country trend irresistibly to the city. The maelstrom of city life makes its imperious demands upon the strong, the enterprising, the audacious, the original. Nor will it be denied. The country will no longer enjoy a monopoly of our great men. The Disciples will find themselves sadly out of touch with the stirring present, if we depend on the rural districts for our great men and our great forward movements.

Perhaps we have been too optimistic. Perhaps we have spent too much time counting our victories. Perhaps too much steam has been expended in blowing the whistle. Optimism has its uses. But unlimited optimism ceases to be a virtue.

Brethren, unless we get a strong grip upon St. Louis and Chicago and Kansas City and Denver and San Francisco, we are not safe. Our great plea, our splendid restoration movement, will fail of a hearing. It will never command respect or attention while we are practically unknown in the cities.

Heredity, too, has been a bar to our progress. We have inherited from the fathers a distaste for city work They seemed to avoid the cities. Their propaganda was largely confined to the towns and villages. But few of our great pioneers made the city the theater of their efforts. As a result our religious neighbors have a perfect right to style us "their country cousins." Alexander Campbell visited many cities of the middle west, but only to deliver special addresses or to engage in religious discussions, and even these sporadic excursions resulted in marked success. But how few evangelists, those pioneer heralds, those men of splendid intellect, admirably qualified in every way to represent us, found their way to the great centers of population! How many shared the ambition of Paul "to see Rome"? How many possessed his faith and sagacity to see that Rome offered unrivaled facilities to the church of Jesus Christ?

This reluctance to enter the cities is decidedly shown in those states where we have made our greatest advance. Even in the Mississippi valley we are a country people. Who will say that in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, Louisville and St. Louis we have grown symmetrically? Who will be rash enough to declare that our progress in those cities, where we have been most successful, is proportionate to our progress in the several states in which they are found?

Less than fifteen per cent of our members are to be found in the great cities and this small ratio obtains in those states where the Disciples are "the people," in Kentucky and Missouri and Illinois and Iowa. We are lop-sided; we are a little moss-backed, a little hay-seeded. We ought to have at least forty per cent of our people in the great cities, if our city influence is to be proportionate to our state influence. We have suffered because of our indifference to the cities; we have lost prestige and power and people and institutions. Splendid opportunities, once within our reach, have passed away forever. And now we must work hard and pay high prices for what we get. It is the old lesson of neglected opportunity.

"Miss not the occasion. By the forelock take
That subtle power, never halting time,
Lest a mere moment's 'putting off' should make Mischance almost as heavy as a crime."

The first city evangelization society among the Disciples was established in Cleveland in the month of June, 1888. The brethren met in the parlors of the Franklin Circle church. An organization was effected, a charter was secured and the Madison avenue building was begun.

The Cleveland society was followed by similar organizations in Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Buffalo, Pittsburg and New York. The Cleveland society pioneered the way and as secretary of that organization for more than seven years, I received letters from these cities asking for copies of our constitution and by-laws.

The Great Revival Wave in Britain

By William Durban

The "paradox of Christmas," as it has been called, has been startling this season. It is singular that the passage in Isaiah which predicts in glowing terms the Nativity of the Prince of Peace should be introduced by a picture of people in garments rolled in blood. How exactly that order of ideas accords with the order of history and experience. Peace does not come to sinful nations without ordeals of blood and fire. Progress is the sequel of revolution, commotion, tribulation, catastrophe. The geologists still dispute concerning the convultionist and the uniformitarian theories. But the true theologian is bound to be in relation to religious development a convulsionist. Truth and righteousness will triumph, but not by peaceful stages. Sin, superstition, error and carnality will prevent smooth and easy progression. Thus what I have alluded to as the "paradox of Christmas" once more repeated is consistent with the law of victory through conflict. This last Christmastide has been crimsoned by the blood of hosts of warriors in the far east. That is indeed a lurid commentary on the angelic canticle. Sad that Christmas carols should have for their deep bass accompaniment the booming bass notes of siege cannon. Nevertheless, the last year has been memorable in the cause of peace. For the progress of international arbitration has been marvelously expedited by the joint efforts of the British Peace Society and President Roosevelt. So the paradox is emphatically apparent once more.

The Cambrian Commotion.

The most wonderful features of 1904 in this old country were the great campaigns of General Booth in his motor-car, the immense missions of Torrey and Alexander, and the magnificent outburst in Wales with which the year closed. This latter demonstration is staggering the whole country. Once more the Spirit of God is moving the hearts of men by strangely weak and, humanly speaking, contemptible instrumentalities. There are several noted bishops, several learned and excellent deans, many fashionable cathedral canons, and other dignitaries in Wales. But though some of these favored divines have of late been upsetting Wales very miserably by promoting squabbles over the question of religious education, not one of them had any part, in any way, directly or indirectly, in bringing about this marvelous revival, which has in a few weeks from its commencement swept like a prairie fire through the principality, from the mining country in the south, up to the very gates of old Chester on the northern border. I have never heard of any bishop or dean kindling such a holy fire though I have known many who have fanned the flames of controversy. It was by the fervent impulse stirred in the heart of a young miner, Evan Roberts, that this wild and fanatical outbreak was initiated. For wild and fanatical it is. Thousands of men and women of all ages are day after day the subjects of actual frenzy. At first the cooler English people were inclined to disparage the movement because it seemed to be unlikely to do more than create a spasmodic excitement. But there is in no quarter now any such tendency to minimize or criticise the phenomenon. For the singing and praying and excitable testifying, lasting in many places all night, have been followed by the conversion of publicans, the cessation of drunkenness, and even the death of golf and football. Now, there is nothing at all reprehensible in either of these athletic games. Hockey, golf, cricket, tennis, football might well conduce to righteousness by helping to create a sound body in which to hold a sound mind, and I have witnessed many desirable results, from the Christian point of view, in the system which socially favors these forms of recreation. But the fact remains that of late years cricket, golf, and football have degenerated into stupendous and baneful crazes. They have for some time been the despair of reformers. These popular and beautiful pastimes have been made the vehicles of professionalism and also of a vast system of gambling. But the overwhelming Welsh revival has suddenly knocked the breath out of the wholesale abuse. I should say that never have there been so many spiritual conversions in connection with any religious movement. The Welsh people are inclined by temperament for such demonstration whenever a leader arises. It is singular that the germ of the revival is English. When Mr. F. B. Meyer was in Wales in 1902 he made fervent appeals to his hearers to seek a special blessing from the Holy Spirit. Some who heard him began to hold all-night prayer-meetings. One of these hearers was young Roberts, the obscure worker in the coalpits. He during last autumn suddenly found courage to begin exhorting from his pew in a little chapel in his own village. That was the actual beginning of the outburst. He is not a preacher after the order of ministers. He moves about in a congregation talking to individuals or groups. He despises all regular modes. He spurns the suggestions of certain ministerial associations that he should co-operate with some appointed committee. He may be wise. At any rate he is acute. Committees are in many ways useful and are often essential. Especially where public money is used no man ought to dispense with them. But other cases are different. And I suppose Evan Roberts feels that under present conditions he can best work as he is moved by the power on which he relies.

The Great Torrey Campaign.

I do not know Dr. Torrey personally, and I do not hold a brief for him. He does not need any apology for himself on my part, but I feel that he has been unfairly and even cruelly treated. I do not agree with his theology in many respects, any more than I might altogether endorse that of the Welsh revivalists or of General Booth. But it is to my mind very painful to find respectable and comfortably situated ministers making it part of their mission to write and publish sharp and biting criticisms in pamphlets which are especially circulated wherever Dr. Torrey goes, not because there is any possible fault to be alleged against his character, to which universal homage is paid. Most strenuous attempts are made in each place where Messrs. Torrey and Alexander have been evangelizing to minimize the results, to ascertain how many real converts have been made, and to create prejudice against these American evangelists on account of their stiff, old-fashioned Puritanism. The leading opposition comes from a little knot of Congregationalist ministers who have become known as the Broad Church section in their own denomination. But a Baptist who is identified with them in friendship and opinion has been uttering a protest which I was proud to see. Dr. F. Aked, of Liverpool, where the campaign is now going on, refused to join in an organized attempt to prevent a joint invitation to the evangelists to come to that city. Dr. Aked said he did not like Dr. Torrey's hard theologic lines, but he knew that great good had been done in other places, and he himself had known enough of bitter opposition from brethren who disagreed with him.

It may not be out of place to give in summary form a record of Dr. Torrey's work in this country. My American readers all well know that he belongs to them by nationality. They also must generally be aware that American evangelists are eagerly listened to and are warmly welcomed in England. I wish that I could have persuaded the F. C. M. S. board to try whether able Americans would not achieve mighty success in Wales, Scotland and Ireland. Torrey is a great American and Alexander is another. They are great in zeal, in ability, in the faculty of appealing to crowds and in the intensity of their earnest devotion. R. A. Torrey is a native of New Jersey. After graduating at Yale he was in 1878 ordained and assumed the pastorate in the same year. Very soon he went to study theology in Germany. Ere completing his studies he had taken two good degrees. Returning to America he carried on a great and successful work as superintendent of the Minneapolis city mission. In 1889 at the instance of the late D. L. Moody he removed to Chicago to become head of the great Moody Bible institute. Five years later he became pastor of the Chicago avenue church which had been built and equipped by Mr. Moody. Dr. Torrey is a cosmopolitan evangelist. He and Alexander have had wonderful campaigns in Australia and Japan and China. He has everywhere posed as being interdenominational and humorously styles himself an Episcopaleopresbygationalapist! New Zealand and India were visited. Most romantic histories ensued. Then in January, 1903, began the wonderful mission in Britain. Unemotional Scotland was powerfully moved. In Edinburg and Glasgow pentecostal power was overwhelmingly manifested. Cultured Aberdeen was stirred as never before since the Reformation. Then the two evangelists went to Ireland. In Belfast a splendid work was done. After a visit to America they came back to Britain and addressed magnificent audiences in Liverpool, Manchester, Dundee, Kilmarnock, Dunfermline, Greenock, Bristol, Birmingham, Bradford, Brighton and London. And now this winter, after Cardiff, they have once more taken hold of Liverpool, and are shortly coming again to London with all the prestige of their work round the world behind them. I smile when I read articles on the "Passing of the Evangelist." For it is evident that the evangelist is like the Christian Endeavorer—passing on to immeasurably greater success than has ever been dreamed of. Oh, how I often wish that our own American friends would send a great preacher and a great singer to move the masses in this wonderful historic land! They would meet everywhere with an unparalleled reception. But I am as the voice of one crying in the wilderness, for I have time and again suggested the only way of reaching the whole population in this land. To think that a few good average ministers can do what needs to be done is a fallacy. I can but point it out. Some day the plan may be adopted. It would cost money, but this nation would rise to far more than repay it.

Letters from a Retired Minister

From the Rev. Dr. William Prentice, D. D., at Los Angeles, to his nephew, the Rev. Will Westbrook Prentice, at Belleview. The Rev. Dr. Prentice, after a long and fruitful ministry, is spending his declining years in California. His nephew, who was but recently graduated from the seminary, has accepted a call to a prominent church in Belleview and is already at work in his new field.

LOS ANGELES, July 28, 19—.

MY DEAR NEPHEW: — Your letter came yesterday and I enjoyed it hugely. It has the right ring. It is a great thing to be standing on the threshold of a useful career in the Christian ministry. I like your enthusiasm, for it bespeaks a vigorous service. The fact is, I don't build much on the future of a young fellow who never once slops over in talking or writing about his life work. I want you to know, too, that my enthusiasm for the same cause has never left me. Even now I count no privilege quite so dear as that of going into the pulpit occasionally and preaching the word. Last Sunday I preached for Dr. Bailey of the First church here, and more than once during the service I so far forgot my infirmities that I began to question the wisdom of my retirement from the active ministry. Of course I came to myself by and by, but I think I am pretty much like an old wornout fire department horse that pricks up his ears and dashes off with a flourish every time he hears the alarm bell.

I thank you for opening your heart to me, and if I can be of any service to you I shall feel repaid for the little difficulty I experience in writing a readable letter in these twilight years of mine. I infer from what you write that you are a bit apprehensive as to my opinion of your acceptance of the call to Belleview; and for the reason, I take it, that it is a city church. Well, I am not disposed to censure you nor criticise your decision. I am rather inclined toward the view of my old Professor Baxter, who used to say to his class in the seminary, "Young gentlemen, it makes little difference where you preach, just so you preach." In your letter you go on to remind me that you were reared in the city, that you were a member of a city congregation and that before you concluded your seminary course you had several years' experience as pastor at D. Yes, I recall all this, but I am building more on your good, average, common sense to carry you through, than on any of the things you mention. On the whole, I see no reason why you should have declined the call simply because Belleview happens to be a city of some fifty thousand and the church a prominent one.

Wherever you go problems will present themselves. After no little experience with country and city pastorates, I should say the handicap of the former is as marked as that of the latter. That the country or village church affords more opportunity for close study is not always the case. Frequently where it does, such opportunities are not seized and used. In both fields there will always be, I supppose a few who feel that the minister isn't quite doing his duty unless he is pulling doorbells or enjoying the conviviality of some hospitable home. After all, success in anything depends more on the man himself than on his environment. I have known more than one bright young fellow to go to seed in a pastorate where there were many opportunities for study; while on the other hand I have been acquainted with a score of very busy ministers who found or made the opportunity to become good scholars.

You are going to have problems at Belleview. I want to hint at one of them in this letter. I know the little city pretty well and it has some reputation as a society town. I want to hang out a red light right here. You are young and have an attractive personality; your piety is natural and not of the clergyman in the novel type (for which I am very thankful), and you will be in demand at social gatherings. There will be invitations galore. Have a care! This is where so many bright young fellows go down and out. Did you read what Alexander M'Laren said about some young men in the ministry who come into sudden prominence? Well, if you did, it will not be out of place for me to repeat a good thing. Your uncle knows Dr. M'Laren and puts a high value on his advice. Here is what he says: "The trouble with most of you young fellows is that you are pitchforked into prominent positions and have to spend your time attending anniversaries, even breakfasts, when you ought to be at home studying your Bible." See to it, Will, that this never becomes your "trouble."

I have usually noticed that the preacher who becomes a lion socially soon dwindles into a lamb intellectually. Of course there are exceptions. But too many pink teas will take the red blood from your sermons. Pale pulpit papers have a habit of haunting preachers. Beware of these unholy ghosts! Then besides the time conventional society takes from your studies, a portion of it could be put to better advantage by visiting among the humble and lowly of your congregation. No man can preach powerfully who is always in an atmosphere of glitter and gleam. Our blessed Master had wealthy friends whose companionship he enjoyed, yet oftener he was found in the company of the poor, but don't be a class preacher. Demagogy in politics is bad enough; in religion it is devilish. Like death Christianity is a great leveler. As a minister of the word you are to know no man after the flesh. To be all things to all men, as I understand it, is to be simply manly and straightforward with everybody.

Well, I think I have written enough for this once, but I expect to write later touching upon other phases of your work. I pray the dear Lord's blessing on your ministry. Look to him constantly for guidance!

Affectionately your uncle,
WILLIAM PRENTICE.

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

The outlook from this point of view is every way encouraging with the opening of the new year. Some important functions occur in the first month. The Temple Christian church in Baltimore, of which Peter Ainslie is pastor, was formally dedicated on Sunday, 15, George W. Muckley preaching the sermon. The Sixth church, Washington, will be set apart to the service of God on the 22nd, with Muckley as the chief speaker. This new house of worship is in the southeast section of the city, fifteen squares east of the capitol, in a needy and growing community. It cost $6,000 apart from the lot. J. E. Stuart, of Harriman, Tenn., will be the pastor of this new congregation, and we confidently expect to have a strong church added to our force in Washington. A new church will be dedicated at Plymouth, Pa., also on 22nd, where L. O. Knipp is doing such splendid service. Though not in sight of the Dome, the man who takes his bearings from this point will be with the congregation on this happy occasion. So the work moves in these parts.

A successful missionary rally was held in the Vermont avenue church on Jan. 9. F. M. Rains conducted it, and with him was Dr. Macklin of China. These two men can organize and constitute a "rally" all by themselves. They seem to be thoroughly equipped. There is no lack of missionary facts or missionary enthusiasm in either of them. Then on the program with them were such men as B. A. Abbott and O. G. White, of Baltimore, E. B. Bagby, C. C. Jones and Walter F. Smith of Washington, W. B. Taylor of Rockville, and Joseph T. Watson of Vienna, Va. It was an array of talent that would have done credit to a state convention, and Rains said, "These speeches would be great anywhere, brethren. You never heard better in a general convention!" No doubt he says this frequently, but this time it was of course justly said. We have heard speeches in general conventions, however, that were not masterpieces. The rally was all right. Such meetings are most encouraging and helpful, and the fruits will appear in the March offering. The quarter of a million by all means should be reached, and even half a million were none too much for a people great in numbers and worldly goods as ours. It shall come by 1909, but it could come sooner if we willed it.

It was my privilege recently to visit three of the churches in that region where things for us had their beginnings in 1809 and which is such a scene of activity to-day with "those disciples who would be simply Christian." The church at Beaver, Pa., where W. H. Fields is in a most successful pastorate, is doing excellent service. They have a beautiful house of worship worth $25,000 and a congregation of 300, though only eight years organized. They are growing rapidly. W. S. Kidd is one of the strong pillars, who is also such a support in our Bethany college and Bethany Beach interests.

Beaver Falls near by is the mother church. Here I had the pleasure of a visit with Z. E. Bates. He has a church of 300 and is pushing the work with vigor. Though he has been only about six months in this field the church is feeling the strong impulse of his ministry and a mission in one of the adjoining towns promises to develop into another church at an early date. 75,000 people in this valley, over which Pittsburg, but thirty miles away, makes itself felt, give ample opportunity for a splendid missionary service. Beaver was the home of the famous politician who held all Pennsylvania in the hollow of his hand and who last year went to his reward—Matthew Stanley Quay; and Beaver Falls of W. S. Shallenbarger, assistant postmaster general and superintendent of the largest Sunday-school in our city—that of Calvary Baptist church.

Steubenville, O., was my third point. Who knows Bethany to whom Steubenville, just up the river a few miles from Wellsburg, is not a familiar spot? How many young theologians from time to time have practiced on those Steubenville saints! And yet they live. In fact it is one of the liveliest congregations in the brotherhood. H. H. Moninger is here, one of the best Sunday-school men in the land. Think of a church with 1,000 members; with 1,200 in the Sunday-school, including cradle roll and home department, with 800 Sunday scholars in regular attendance, and with only about twenty-five persons coming to the church service on Sunday morning who are not in the school! The whole church in the Sunday-school and the whole Sunday-school in the church! They have a fine church property worth $30,000 and a flourishing mission with chapel worth $3,000; 400 have been added during Moninger's ministry of three years. It is a great thing to get away from this quiet resort of ours and see what the young men are doing. What a blessing to be permitted to preach a great gospel in a small town!

B. A. Abbott sends out such a beautiful new year's message to his people I must insert it here for the benefit of a larger circle.

> In his name by whom we are united in the greatest work and fellowship in the world, I send you greetings and good wishes for the New Year. If the prayer of my heart can prevail with God the passing days will bring to your home and heart and life all the spiritual graces and material joys needful to make you meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. Suffer the word of exhortation that we make this year an advance on all the past in every good thing. Let us forget the losses and hurts that may have thrust a thorn into the heart, counting them only the sharp cuts of the chisel carving us into characters of divine beauty. Those we have "loved and lost awhile," whose memories are written in unfading letters upon our hearts, are awaiting us beyond the golden gates, and the hushed voices we yearn so tenderly to hear once more are, with the voice of Jesus also, calling us to the home of light within the veil. We will tenderly throw the mantle of charity over the mistakes of friends, enemies, strangers and brethren, and give to all who have sinned and marred life's joy and beauty, the great, sweet sacrament of forgiveness. Never denying the hand of help to him who is down, nor the word of encouragement to him who has sinned and is trying to walk again in the path of rectitude, neither will we faint on account of our own sins nor give up the battle of life because there are many and great temptations, burdens and difficulties. This year shall there be no soul harmed, no heart hurt, no life made less happy by any word or deed, or faithlessness of ours. This year fill we life to its full with our best. Whatever may come, even if we shall be brought to the gates of death, we will be "loyal and loving one to another." Resolve we this year—
> "To love some one more dearly every day,
> To help a wandering child to find its way,
> To ponder o'er a noble thought and pray,
> And smile when evening falls.
> "To follow truth as blind men long for light,
> To do my best from dawn of day till night,
> To keep my heart fit for his holy sight,
> And answer when he calls!"

The many friends of J. Z. Tyler will be glad of Dr. Clark's word from him in the last C. E. World. The Doctor tells of a visit to our sick brother in his home at Cleveland, and speaks warm words of praise for his faithful labors and for his beautiful Christian spirit in this his time of weakness and suffering. He quotes Mrs. Tyler as saying: "We never had such good times before. We are having a honeymoon every month. We have time to see each other now, and get acquainted, as we could not do when parish and other duties were always crowding."

"'O, we have good times in this house!'" echoed the invalid from his couch of suffering, says Dr. Clark. "Dr. Tyler not only makes the best he can of a hard lot; he makes positive good of it. He not only suffers without complaint; he suffers with joy. He has found the silver lining to his cloud, and it is real silver, and a cloud no longer to him."

"O, we have good times in this house!" sounds like J. Z. He always was a Christian. We are glad of this news from him. He has preached his best sermon from his sick bed. "Happy new year," we all say to him with all our hearts.

W. B. Taylor has taken charge of the work at Rockville, Md. He comes to us from Georgetown, Ky., and was for a number of years pastor at Versailles. A son of old Bethany, one of the brightest students during my service on the faculty, he is a strong preacher and a splendid character.

We hope much from his labors here. J. Murray Taylor is in a meeting at Beaver Creek. His brother, J. J. Taylor, will assist him in a series of services in this city in February. Eighteen were added at Ninth street the first Sunday of the new year, eight at Vermont avenue, and four at H street. Chauncey F. Black, son of Judge Jeremiah S. Black, died recently at Brockie, near York, Pa. He was at one time lieutenant governor of the state, and was a brilliant writer. He graduated at Hiram, and for some years was a member of the Vermont avenue church. Read the Baptist Watchman of January 5 if you would see what Dr. C. F. Winbigler, of this city, has to say of Baptists and Disciples.

The Press*

You are doubtless familiar, many of you at least, with the story of the young man who, visiting his best girl at her home, tarried until a very late hour, when the father, appearing at the head of the stairs, called down, sarcastically, of course, "Mary, has the morning paper come?" "No, father," she calmly replied, "but we are about to go to press!" This, of course, is not the press about which I am asked to speak to-day. "The press" is a compact phrase which stands for that greatest of modern forces, the periodical and especially the daily and weekly newspaper. Perhaps I am expected to limit my remarks to the religious press, and even when thus limited the theme is altogether too large for a ten-minute address.

It would be difficult to overestimate the value, to religion and to the religious life of the people, of the real religious newspaper. I do not share in the opinion expressed recently by some of the daily papers that the religious journal has accomplished its mission and is now a spent, or rapidly waning, force. True, there is a certain type of religious newspaper that has become archaic and obsolescent, if not quite obsolete. The narrow, pugilistic, sectarian journal, that sees no good outside of the little party it represents, and is untouched by any sympathetic throb of the general life of the world, is no longer in great demand, and its death will be "unwept, unhonored and unsung." The religious journal that draws a very distinct line between what is called the secular and the religious life and does not concern itself with anything that is not technically and nominally religious, narrows the field of its usefulness, because it is based on a wrong conception of life. On the other hand, the religious newspaper that enters the arena of party politics and fills its columns with a discussion of current political issues, fails in the highest mission of the religious journal. It ought to go without saying that a religious journal should be religious. Not only should it present the great and eternal verities of religion, but it should treat all life and all events and movements of the time from a religious point of view. If religion is what we claim it to be—an illuminative and regulative principle of all life—the people have a right to expect from the religious journal an independent and fair treatment of every question that affects the moral life of the people.

There is an old time question as to whether a newspaper should merely reflect public sentiment or seek to mold and direct it. My own conviction on that question is that the religious editor, at least, who has no higher aim than to reflect the popular sentiment of the people, and who does not feel it his duty, in so far as he believes public sentiment to be too low, to lift it up to a higher plane and to hold up higher ideals, ought to abdicate his tripod and give place to one who has a worthier conception of his calling.

To be the medium of the discussion of living issues, to report faithfully what is being done for the extension of God's kingdom, to interpret the current events of the time in the light of Christianity, to be a messenger of cheer and hope to its care-burdened readers, to hold up before the world the highest ideals of Christian life and its best thought, and to illustrate the Christian spirit in its treatment of others—this is the high mission of the religious press. Of course it is expected to champion every good cause, to advocate the claims of all worthy enterprises in the church, and to stir up the pure minds of the membership as to their obligations to such enterprises, and in every way to be an assistant to the pastor, and to every missionary, educational and benevolent secretary in the brotherhood which it represents. In addition to all this, it must have a vision broad enough to see and report what the rest of the religious world is doing and thinking about. The law of reciprocity, however, is often forgotten by those who are the beneficiaries of its constant assistance.

May I add that the religious journal that approximates, to any good degree to this high ideal, deserves the sympathy, the hearty co-operation and support of all ministers of the gospel, of all Christian people and of all lovers of mankind. When it receives this recognition and support from the constituency whose interests it so faithfully serves, the religious press will be a vastly greater power than it is to-day.

*Delivered at the rally of Missouri Disciples at the Missouri building, World's Fair ground, on Disciples of Christ day, October 20, 1904, by J. H. Garrison, T. P. Haley presiding.

A Prayer.

By Cecil Hampden Cutts Howard.

We give Thee thanks, O Lord, at this glad New Year tide
For mercies manifold. Let not our hearts forget
These blessings sent, in boundless store, Thou dost provide;
That Thou Thy erring children dost remember yet.

We, who have been so heedless, through the flying years,
So mindful of the petty, selfish aims of life,
In pity look upon us, as through blinding tears
We humbly look to Thee, and rest from endless strife.

Do Thou in mercy guide our feet that fain would stray
From righteous paths aside. Give us the strength we need
To bear life's burdens as they come, that when we pray
We feel that Thou art waiting, that Thou wilt always heed.

Teach Thy thoughtless children that we may daily know
The value of Thy wisdom, Thy wondrous love and peace,
That ever through each day Thou would'st on us bestow
To bring us daily nearer joys that never cease.

Beebe, Ark.

MIGHT HAVE SAVED IT

A Lot of Trouble from Too Much Starchy Food.

A little boy of eight years whose parents did not feed him on the right kind of food, was always nervous and suffered from a weak condition of the stomach and bowels. Finally he was taken down with appendicitis and after the operation the doctor, knowing that his intestinal digestion was very weak, put him on Grape-Nuts twice a day.

He rapidly recovered and about two months thereafter, his Father states, "He has grown to be strong, muscular, and sleeps soundly, weighs 62 pounds, and his whole system is in a fine condition of health." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

It is plain that if he had been put on Grape-Nuts at an earlier period in his life, and kept from the use of foods that he could not digest, he never would have had appendicitis. That disease is caused by undigested food decaying in the stomach and bowels, causing irritation and making for the growth of all kinds of microbes, setting up a diseased condition which is the active cause of appendicitis, and this is more marked with people who do not properly digest white bread.

Grape-Nuts is made of the selected parts of wheat and barley and by the peculiar processes of the cooking at the factory, all of the starch is turned into sugar ready for immediate digestion and the more perfect nourishment of all parts of the body, particularly the brain and nerve centres.

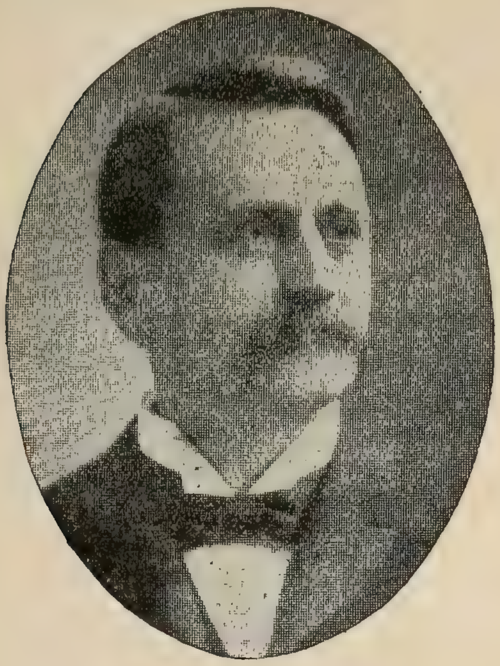
The Business Men's Association of the Christian Church

The most recently organized body in our brotherhood is the "Business Men's Association of the Christian church," concerning which we wish to speak particularly.

For many years our great conventions have been attended by our faithful preachers and good women, and it was often remarked that our men, our business men, were conspicuous by their absence. Inquiry as to why they did not attend or manifest an interest in our cause in general developed the reason to be that we really had never asked our men to do anything in particular, nor made any place for them in our important deliberations.



A. R. TEACHOUT,
Vice-President.

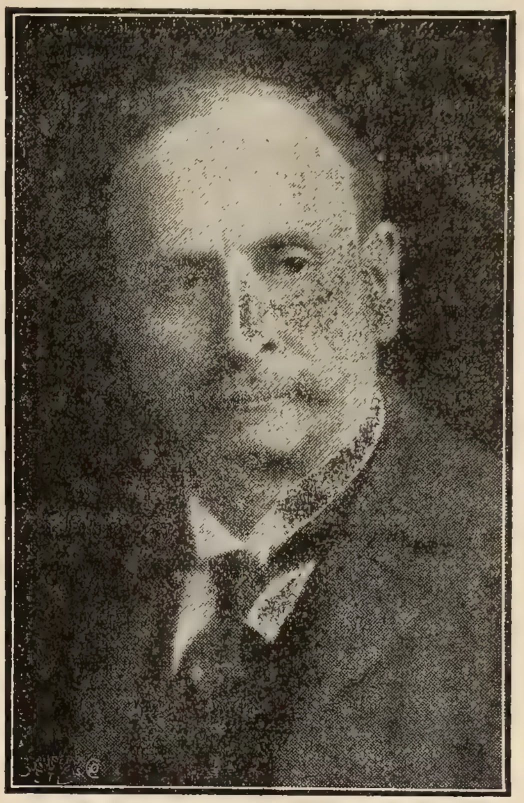
W. DAVIESS PITTMAN,
Cor. Sec'y.

Under these conditions, a few of our splendid business men who attended our conventions started a movement looking to the enlisting of our men in the Lord's work; the result of which crystallized last fall into the formation of the association above referred to, and now they are seeking to enlist every male member of our churches in this great movement.

The Business Men's Association of the Christian church is a national organization, and it is intended to embrace in its membership all the members of the local chapters and district organizations of this association as hereinafter set forth. It will endeavor to keep before our men the great opportunities for service in the Lord's work, and, better still, seek to organize them so that they will move as a solid phalanx against the forces of iniquity.

The plan of organization suggested by the association is as follows: First, let each congregation organize a local chapter of the "Business Men's Association of the Christian church." After coming together, let them elect such officers as they think best; adopt such by-laws, rules, or regulations as they may deem necessary, and hold meetings not less frequently than once a month.

As soon as the local chapter is organized, the leader or president should promptly send to this association (Business Men's Association of the Christian church, with headquarters in St Louis) the names and addresses of all the members of the local chapter, together with a free-will offering from each member. This will enroll all of the members of the local chapter as members of this association, with all the rights and privileges of members.



J. H. ALLEN,
President.

We further suggest that, in cities or towns where there are several congregations and local chapters, or in counties or groups of counties where it is customary to form district organizations in religious work, the local chapters in such districts federate and form a district organization, which should have meetings at stated times (say quarterly) or when called by the president. It may also be advisable to form state organizations along the same lines; but this may be left for after consideration.

The Work of the Association.

After organizing a local chapter of this association, the first question is, what will be the specific work for the men to do? To answer this would take more space than is at our disposal; but briefly stated, it occurs to us that the first work to be done would be that of giving to the local church a thorough and businesslike administration; for instance, to see that the obligatons of the church are paid promptly when due; that the preacher and others serving the church receive adequate compensation for their services, and having received the same, that they devote all of their time and energies to the work for which they are employed. The business methods of a great many of our churches are very lax and surely there is much room for improvement here.

SYDNEY H. THOMSON,
Treasurer.

CHAS. B. SALA,
Secretary.

In the second place, there are not enough men in attendance upon our regular services, and each local chapter could take such steps as would insure not only a full attendance of the male membership of the church, but invite to its services other men who might be interested. Surely it would be accomplishing great things if we

Our Budget

—An "old-fashioned winter" sure enough!

—But a splendid time to get subscribers for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—Many agents are getting busy with the canvass, and we hope many others besides regular agents will do the same.

—We call attention this week to the Business Men's Association of the brotherhood, whose objects and methods are herein explained. It is a movement that has in it the promise of great things. It calls for action in each local church of the brotherhood in the formation of a local chapter to co-operate with the national association.

—At a recent meeting of the representatives of our St. Louis churches, a St. Louis Union was formed, comprising the members of the Business Men's League or Chapter in each of the local congregations, which holds quarterly meetings. The local chapters will meet monthly. The purpose of all this, as will be seen, is the enlistment of all the male members of the churches in active service, first, in their local church and second, in behalf of our general enterprise. The headquarters of this new organization are in St. Louis, and elsewhere we present a group of the general officers of the association.

—The editor called at the office of the association one day last week, which is room 306 in the Carleton building. He found the corresponding secretary, W. D. Pittman, at his desk, having just gotten his new office fitted up and ready for business. There were two desks in the office, the second one being occupied by the stenographer, besides a cabinet, with the latest device of the card system for keeping track of all the local chapters and of the individual members thereof throughout the United States. Brother Pittman, who is an experienced and successful business man, will devote a large part of his time, without salary, this year, to pushing forward this work.

—If your congregation did not observe education day, last Lord's day, do so yet, and enroll your church among the banner congregations in the brotherhood. What church among us can afford to be a non-contributor to the work of Christian education which our colleges are doing?

—The annual meeting of our city missionary society in St. Louis, held in the Union avenue Christian church on January 6, was, in several respects, the best meeting we have ever held. The addresses were full of earnestness and the spirit of the meeting was for aggressive Christian work in the planting of several new missions. The committee is already planning a forward movement.

—"May 1905 be the best year of your life and mine. To help in making it such will you not adopt the following seven golden rules for the Christian? 1. Know that you are a Christian; 2. Do no evil; 3. Search the Scriptures daily; 4. Pray without ceasing; 5. Be filled with the Holy Spirit; 6. Work every day for the Lord; 7. Watch daily for the coming of Christ. To follow these golden rules will make any life useful and happy.

"THOS. J. EASTERWOOD."

—Many subscribers continue to send us cheques on their local banks. They do not seem to have observed our request that they will not do this. We have to pay fifteen cents to collect the money from these banks. At the price charged for our periodicals we cannot afford to do this. Please send us money orders or drafts on St. Louis banks.

—According to the Arizona Gazette, a delightful surprise party was given to B. D. Boyd, now serving the church at Phoenix, by his congregation. The evangelistic services recently held have resulted in over 40 additions, and the regular attendance has doubled.

—Miss Mattie W. Burgess says that the church at Rome, Ga., is making a heroic struggle to plant primitive Christianity in that cultured and conservative little city. Though winning favorable recognition, the brethren there have still a hard battle before them.

—Robert Pegrum, who has recently come among us from the Congregational church and who has taken membership with the church at Boston, Mass., is highly recommended by Bro. A. L. Ward, minister at Boston, Mass., as a man well worthy of the most cordial reception as a minister among our churches.

—At the annual meeting of the Central church, Cincinnati, O., the reports showed that over $2,000 had been given for missions, $5,640 for current expenses of the church, with all bills paid and $19.19 in the treasury. —The church at Wilkesbarre, Pa., one of the missions of the home board, is engaged in a special series of meetings under the leadership of E. E. Cowperthwait, with the Martin family as evangelists. It is confessedly a difficult field, but they are hoping for a good hearing.

—John F. Marshall, North Waco, Texas, is holding some meetings in the north. He has just held a meeting at Pembroke, N. Y., with 13 baptisms. His next meeting is Shueyville, Kan., and from there he goes to University Place church, Champaign, Ill. He is doing good work.

—The American Christian Missionary Society received another offering on the annuity plan last week, from a friend residing in South Dakota. The more the anuuity plan is known the better it is liked. Write to B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, for a free booklet concerning this annuity plan.

—"It was a joyful day yesterday at Spartansburg when it was publicly announced that the last cent of the $1,500 improvement of the church had been paid. Truly Norman Anderson is a splendid yoke-fellow. Twenty-seven pledges to win a soul for Christ during 1905.

—I crave the sympathy of my brethren. I lost to-day, by sudden death, my best earthly friend—mother. C. A. FREER.

Collinwood, Ohio, Jan. 10, 1905.

We are sure a host of our readers who read our Ohio correspondent's news letters will join us in an expression of sincere sympathy with him in his great bereavement.

—Dick T. Morgan, president of the Oklahoma state board of missions, one of the strongest members of the Christian church in the territory, has been appointed register of the United States land office, Woodward, Ind. Ter. He has already found twenty members of the Christian church, and is asking the Home Board for help to establish a congregation.

—Allen Wilson and W. E. M. Hackleman began a meeting with the Central Christian church, Terre Haute, Ind., January 1. L. E. Sellers is the pastor. Extensive and well planned preparations have been made and the outlook is exceedingly hopeful. The choir consists of 100 voices, re-inforced by the pipe organ, piano and several smaller instruments. Several additions to date.

—We continue to receive commendations on our evangelistic number. Here is one just at hand. "Never was a number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as timely as the last number—the evangelistic one. It was a treat for a pastor trying to hold a meeting in his own congregation. I laid it aside with larger visions and greater zeal for soul winning.

"J. R. PERKINS."

—There was an error in President Bell's article, not due to the writer. The figures given referred to the year 1902-3, when the deficit in the Bible college at Drake was over $4,000. But in 1903 4 it was about $3,000 and the belief is that this year it will not exceed $2,000. We have received a letter from Professor McGarvey taking exception to a statement in President Bell's article and this will appear next week.

—W. J. Wright, superintendent of evangelism is in Kansas City, Mo., engaged in an evangelistic campaign. The Protestant churches have arranged themselves in groups of 12 to 20 each, and these unite in a two weeks' union meeting and then the meetings will be continued by the individual churches. Brother Wright preaches in the union meeting for two weeks and then will preach for the First church, of which W. F. Richardson is pastor, for two weeks following.

—We very much regret to record the death of C. W. Huffer, some particulars of whose life will be found in our obituary columns. During the twenty years of his ministry he baptized more than 1,500 persons, and saw three members from among his congregations ordained as ministers of the gospel. These are C. E. Taylor, of Sebring News, O., Casper Stanley, of Salem, and Chester Sprague, of Bethany, W. Va. In Brother Huffer's death the church has lost an able minister, and the community a good citizen.

—The January number of the American Home Missionary is devoted to the recently organized evangelistic bureau of the A. C. M. S. If any one desires information regarding the plan and methods of this bureau, he should secure a copy of this magazine. By the way the December issue of this magazine is the Year Book, giving the list of all the preachers of the Christian church and is packed with information. The subscription price is only 25 cents per year, and it is a monthly magazine. This is really less than the cost of the magazine and we earnestly recommend it to every one who wants the newest and freshest things concerning the work of the Christian church. Secure the American Home Missionary for a year.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What To Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, and a book that tells all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing be sure to mention that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

—There is to be a great rally of the young people's societies of the Evangelical Protestant churches of St. Louis, in the new auditorium ofthe Third Baptist church, at Grand and Delmar Aves., on the evening of Jan. 31. The Baptist Young People's Union and the Epworth League people join with the Christian Endeavor societies in this rally. Two thousand young people are expected, and several leading ministers in the city will address the meeting.

—On the first of January T. H. Capp, of Plattsburg, assumed the duties of financial agent for Missouri Christian college, formerly the Female orphan school, and during the year will devote his whole time to the furtherance of the interests of that institution. For the past two years he has devoted a part of his time to this work and has succeeded in clearing part of the indebtedness of the school. The trustees, and especially President Barham, feel greatly strengthened in this addition to their working force.

—The international committee of Young Men's Christian Associations has sent us a copy of the call for the observance of the universal day of prayer for students, recently issued by the World's Student Christian Federation. The date fixed for this purpose is Feb. 12. The idea is to have the Christian people all over the world uniting in prayer on that day for the students in our colleges. We are sure that all who are interested in the subject of Christian education—and all ought to be—will make a note of this fact.

—The annual meeting of the Christian church at Mexico, Mo., was held January 4, with reports as follows: Present located membership 697. Total money raised during 1904 exclusive of balances and building fund, $4,479.07. Of this amount $998 50 was given to benevolences and missions at home and abroad. The ladies' aid society has $4,000 in its treasury for the new building which they hope to enter in August. The pastor, A. W. Kokendoffer, is nearing the close of his fourth year, and the work prospers.

—A conscientious brother objects to the advertisement of communion wafers in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He thinks these wafers "smack of Catholicism." Well, brother, it is just unleavened bread in cakes the size of an ordinary plate, which we are furnishing for the accommodation of the churches which have asked us for it. We do not manufacture it, but furnish it for the accommodation of the churches that prefer to use unleavened bread, and would rather buy it than bake it.

—"There is no more fruitful field than right here in conservative New England. If our people appreciated the need of workers here, and the ease with which results are achieved, they would put ten of our best men in the east, and establish churches in all the New England cities." So writes Brother Teagarden, who has just completed fifteen years of work in Danbury, Conn. His is a good example of the permanent pastorate. He has had over 800 additions to his church, and over $80,000 has been raised by it while he has been leading the work. That is a fine record.

—F. E. Udell and wife, of the Union avenue Christian church, St. Louis, left the city Jan. 14 for a long journey. They sail from San Francisco in a few days, dropping off at Honolulu for ten days, and their next stop will be at Auckland, New Zealand, whence they go to the chief cities of Australia. They will be gone four months. We wish them a prosperous journey and safe return. Brother Udell is chairman of the official board of the Union avenue church, and one of the elders. We commend him and his wife to the brethren on the opposite side of the world.

—S. C. Pierce, Lynchburg, O., writes: "Your education number is fine. It was the burden of my soul. I feel there is yet a great educational work to be done through our papers. I am learning to love the spirit of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST more and more." There is, indeed, "a great educational work to be done through our papers," and how we are straitened till this be accomplished! This work is the daily burden of our hearts. We editors, however, are dependent to a large degree upon the co-operation of our ministers in getting our papers into the hands of the people who need to read them.

—"I spent four weeks at Bay Minette, Ala., and effected a temporary orgauization with 13 members. The week just before Christmas I spent with Claude E. Hill and the good church in Mobile. There were two additions. They are getting ready to begin the erection of their new house of worship this month. The church is alive and delighted with their minister. On my way home from Mobile some one "swiped" my new suit case containing dress suit; all my wearing apparel, razor, two fine India paper revised Bibles, just bought; five MSS. on which I had done much work for many years and many other valuables. But no use to cry. I am making dates for meetings during 1905 and shall hope to make them the best efforts of my life." O. P. SPIEGEL, general evangelist.
Birmingham, Ala.

—F. C. Mallory has the distinction of holding the longest pastorate in Kansas. The First Christian church at Topeka was his first charge. He is the only regular minister the church has ever had, it having been organized by J. A. L. Romig in September, 1893. Brother Mallory writes: "For more than eleven years I have labored with this people. I love them and they love me. I have proven, to my own mind at least, that long pastorates, as a rule, are desirable." Brother Mallory has had his salary raised three times during the period of his pastorate. He recently refused a call to Boone, Iowa.

—The following churches have been recently reported as being self-supporting: Spokane, Wash., J. A. Allen, pastor; Newark, N. J., Miner L. Bates, pastor; Denton, Texas, S. K. Hallam, pastor; St. Paul, Minn., A. D. Harmon, pastor; Clarkston, Wash., W. L. McCullough, pastor; Portland, Ore., E. S. Muckley, pastor; Charlottetown, P. E. I., R. W. Stevenson, pastor; Southwest Washington, D. C., J. Murray Taylor, pastor; El Paso, Texas, E. M. Waite, pastor; Newkirk, Okla., F. D. Wharton, pastor.

—The Home Board has taken on new churches, so that there may be no diminution in the work. All of these churches report themselves as grateful for the help they have received from our brotherhood and realize the obligation they are under.

—We have received, just as we go to press, a program of the dedication services of the Juliette Fowler Christian home affiliated with the National Benevolent Association of the Christian church, and located near Dallas, Texas, which are to be held on Thursday, January 26, 1905. Addresses will be delivered by Mrs. H. M. Meier, president of the National Benevolent Association; G. H. Faris, editor of the Christian Courier, and J. H. Garrison, editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The dedication prayer will be offered by M. M. Davis, of Dallas.

—The Saginaw Evening News reports that the church of Christ of that city, of which Bro. J. S. Raum is pastor, launched a new financial scheme at the close of the service on Lord's day morning, Jan. 8. Bro. Andrew Scott, a former pastor of the church, but now pastor at Normal, Ill., preached the discourse, and afterwards a new plan of church finance was adopted, namely: "To support the work by free will and systematic giving on the part of the church and congregation, to the exclusion of the use of socials and entertainments as a source of revenue." If this means that the members are to give a definite per cent of their income—say not less than one-tenth—the plan is a good one. Indeed, any systematic plan which includes all the members, is better than the average plan now in use.

—R. H. Fife, pastor of the Hyde Park Christian church, Kansas City, Mo., sends us a picture of their completed church building, which was dedicated some time ago. The tower is now finished and the stone steps placed in front of each door, the sidewalks in, and front graded and sodded. Brother Fife writes: "We have just closed the best year in the history of the church. Had 63 additions, 33 being by primary obedience. The total receipts for the year for current expenses and missions were $2,591.46; for building purposes, $2,185.18; total, $4,776. 64. We have a sufficient balance on hand to pay up all outstanding bills for current expenses." The church is to be congratulated on this good record.

—An advance sheet from The Institute Tie contains a letter from R. A. Torrey, reporting a remarkable revival in progress in Liverpool, and at Cardiff, Wales. He says concerning the work in Liverpool: "There have been, up to the present, 3,841 who have definitely professed to accept Christ, but the tide is rising constantly. The last week has been by far the best." Cardiff sent down a chartered train, called "The Glory Special," 175 miles, to join in the meeting. Mr. Torrey writes: "Some of the churches of England, in their determination to get a blessing in their own church, get the men of their neighborhood together and march a long way over to the mission hall with a band." Evidently the wave of evangelism is not limited to America, but has reached even greater proportions in Great Britain.

—The First church of Augusta, Georgia, Howard T. Cree pastor, closed its year's work with annual business meeting, roll call and reception. The meeting was more largely attended than any previously held and reports read were most gratifying, especially as this congregation has had a preacher only six months in the year, Brother Cree beginning his ministry last spring, but spending three months in the universities during the summer. All bills were reported paid and a balance in the treasury. The resident membership is but two hundred, yet $3,857.57 was raised for all purposes, an average of $19.29 per member, $1,089.16 was given to missions, an average of $5.45 per member. In view of the fact that this church has the preacher's salary endowed, in part, the showing is a very creditable one. Fifty church papers are taken, two Bible classes are at work, one of fourteen members meeting once a week with the pastor, and one of eleven members studying an allotted portion of scripture at home each day. This year the church interior is to be improved at a cost of more than a thousand dollars, the individual communion service is to be installed and a memorial window is to be placed to the memory of the beloved A. B. Phillips.

—Bro. J. Murray Taylor, pastor of H street Christian church, Washington, D. C., who is now engaged in a meeting with Walter S. Hoye, pastor, in the Beaver Creek church, Md., writes: "There were five confessions last evening and one the evening before. I think we will have a good meeting. Brother Hoye has been with this congregation now for 21 years. It is one of the strongest churches in Maryland." Concerning his work in Washington for the past year, he says: "Our annual report for the year 1904 as minister of the H street Christian church, Washington, D. C., shows 208 sermons preached, or an average of four sermons per Lord's day. Besides this we made many other addresses—chiefly missionary; we represented the church at the district convention at Martinsburg, W. Va., and at the International at St. Louis, Mo. There was raised for all purposes by the H street church, $2,780.80. There were 152 accessions—92 by confession and baptism and 60 by letter and statement. We dedicated two churches, organized one, held four meetings and made calls too numerous to mention. We see evidences of the dawning of a brighter day, and 'all is quiet along the Potomac.'"

Another Valuable Tract.

We have just put into tract form a splendid series of articles by G. L. Wharton on "The Christian Use of the Tithe System." This tract of 24 pages, with a prefatory note by the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, contains three chapters: (1) "The Tithe Principle," (2) "The Practice of the Tithe System," (3) "Objections Answered." It is a tract for the times. It comes just when we are girding ourselves for new and larger tasks, and when we must have additional funds to carry out our larger plans. It suggests, explains, and urges a scriptural, practical, systematic and equitable plan of financing all our enterprises. Its adoption would at once give a new impetus to our religious movement, and quicken into new life all our educational, missionary and benevolent enterprises. We hope, therefore, this tract will be bought and circulated by the thousand and tens of thousands among our churches, and that this subject will be thoroughly investigated. It may be had on application to the Christian Publishing Company, at the following rates, prepaid:

$ .03 per single copy;
.25 per dozen;
1.50 per hundred.

One brother has already written for 500 copies. Every pastor ought to see that his members are supplied with a copy, with the recommendation that they read it, think over it, and act conscientiously.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Florida Notes.

The St. Petersburg work under the efficient charge of J. F. Montgomery is pushing forward splendidly. Their children's rally day exercises were well given and about $20 realized for home missions.

Two of the teachers of music in the state school located at St. Petersburg have taken membership with the congregation, and are a great help in the music. Tourists are thronging the town, and many of them are of our own people. Some brethren of means have decided to make this their home, and it is the confident hope of the congregation that it will be self supporting in a twelve-month.

Bro. B. F. Manire will begin a meeting at Valrico on January 8, and the prospects are favorable for the organization of a congregation there. If he succeeds in organizing he will give them one Sunday in each month. Brother Manire is still hale and hearty, and one of the best Bible scholars in the brotherhood.

At Tampa, while the new church building is still "in the air(?)" they are moving on in the old tabernacle. New pews will be placed in this tabernacle and it will be made comfortable if it can not be made sightly. This congregation is being materially strengthened, too, by the coming of many families from the north, who are attracted by the genial climate, and the business prospects for all who come, and as a consequence the members of the congregation are sanguine for the future. The pastor, J. P. Rowlison, entered upon his second year December 1, having a little more than doubled the membership since coming to Tampa. We need more like him.

At Palmetto, the home of Brother Manire, there is good prospect for the organization of a congregation soon, as numbers of families have moved to the town who are of the "Christians only" type, and we may trust Brother Manire to look carefully after their interests.

Two years ago Florida had only one evangelist, and the state board was able to give him only $25 per month to help him along. During 1902 two regular evangelists were put into the field, and July, 1904, a third was added.

F. J. Longdon, Jr., with headquarters in DeLand, looks after the east coast section. T. A. Cox, McIntosh, looks after the central and southern section, while S. J. White, Lake Butler, helps with the central part and works west. These are three good men and their efforts have been telling. Their principal effort is to look after and build up weak churches, but they have organized many new ones. As a sample of the work that is being done, Brother Cox held a meeting in McIntosh and secured enough members to organize, then he stayed with them until they built a church. He continued to help them along until they got a pastor of their own.

Brother Cox is now employed by Ocoee part of the time, and gives Bartow one Sunday in the month, so this makes room for another evangelist. This is the way we are trying to increase the number of ministers in the state. Our other evangelists have shown as good results as Brother Cox, possibly a little better. Their monthly reports are exceedingly good, and show that money can be wisely spent by keeping men in the field in Florida.

Brother Rayner, a young man, went to Kissimmee and found a membership of about 20. He got Brother Nichols to assist him in a meeting, and had 71 additions, with a good many since the meeting closed. Then the Kissimmee church kept him as their pastor. What Brother Rayner did at Kissimmee can be done in almost every place in Florida.

Illinois Notes.

Education day is the thing now uppermost in the minds of all who are interested in promoting Christian education. January 15 is the time, but any Sunday in January will answer. Any church in Illinois that failed to get literature for the day, should send at once to Eureka college for free supplies, and observe the day in genuine enthusiastic fashion. The college is the sure ally and cordial promoter, through its trained men, of every public enterprise among us. Education day may be made to serve a high and holy purpose in bringing this long neglected service to proper rank with other great movements among us for saving the world.

Miss Jane Jones, of Morgan county, Ill., has recently sent Eureka college $500 on the annuity plan. This is her second offering of this kind to Eureka college. We will gladly furnish information, upon inquiry, to any one who may be thinking of using money for the promotion of the kingdom of God and also get good interest during life. To educate and train men for the ministry is at the very foundation of the growth of the church.

The official board of the First Christian church, Springfield, Illinois, has just sent Eureka college $100, its personal offering of appreciation and interest in the work being done by the college. This splendid example should be followed by many church boards who appreciate a well trained and cultured ministry. Who will be next?

Mr. A. W. Jeffress, who heads our calendar fund for improvements in Eureka college, has recently sent his draft for $1,000. The calendar is nearly full and will mean, if filled, $6,000 to our improvements. It will be issued about Feb. 1. Brethren, if we would all work together and sacrifice a little, we would soon have Eureka college in good condition. This jubilee year is the time to do it, and send it off on another 50 years rejoicing in the good it can do. Let us do it.

We are sorry to lose H. G. Bennett from our state; he has gone from Carbondale to Missouri's capital, Jefferson City. What is our loss is your gain. Hope he will be as successful in his new field as in the old. We cordially commend him to the Missouri brethren.

The church at Princeton is still without a minister since the resignation of I. N. Grisso. They perhaps have about decided on a man. This is a good church, in good order, with nearly all departments in fine order. The C. W. B. M. is especially strong. How delightful to spend a day with those who have shown themselves tried and true by several years of trying acquaintance.

The Rutland church had arranged for Brother Kohl's successor before his time expired. This is most commendable, as much time and influence are often lost between pastorates. This is one of the best churches of its size in the state.

R. L. Beshers is just closing his first year with the El Paso church. It has been a very successful year's work and both pastor and people seem happy as they enter the new year.

Youngstown, though almost a hundred miles away, is ministered to by Brother Nichols while attending Eureka college. This is a good combination, a live man and a live church. The church showed, as all good churches do, commendable interest in Christian education.

Short calls at Lewiston and Canton found Brother Harmon doing good work at the former, and J. C. Lappin at the latter. Where the preachers and people work there are always results.

A Sunday at Watseka found good audiences present both morning and evening. The pastor, D. J. Elsea, was absent, but his year's work seems to have been successful and appreciated by the church. It is difficult to fill a field after a long, successful pastorate. B. S. Ferrall for many years had lived and labored in this church and is greatly loved by it. This church has great power, especially in the use of means which the Lord has generously given to it.

The two churches at Bloomington are pushing their Christian work with commendable zeal. The First church, for which W. R. Lloyd ministers, has recently added about 100 to its membership in a meeting and at regular services. Its prayer-meeting is especially large, which is one of the best indications of church life. The Second church, where J. H. Gilliland ministers, already finds its auditorium too small for the splendid audiences that meet to worship in it. Brethren who feel that sensationalism and progressive nonsense are necessary for live church work, ought to attend one of the Bloomington churches once and get his spiritual strength renewed by hearing a little solid gospel.

la grippe, preparing material for education day and seeing Eureka people about college interests. The college people will take about $200 in our semicentennial calendar and the town people something more than $1,000. Last year the people here gave some $1,500 to the college. I happened to hear the financial report of the church, showing all debts paid. During the year a debt of $1,200 on the church building had been paid off, $2,800 was raised for local expenses, $1,100 for missions besides the $1,500 for education. The various auxiliaries of the church raised about $600. So that this church of about 600 local members devoted last year to the Lord's work more than $7,000. This is not a rich church as the world calls riches, but it is rich in faith and in good works and the Lord blesses it. Bro. A. W. Taylor is our earnest minister, who lends wisdom and encouragement to every good work.

Nebraska Secretary's Letter.

J. R. Teagarden will supply at Ord for a while at least.——C. F. Martin has located with the Waco church, and secured the privilege of remaining in Cotner the next semester. Will move to that field in June.——F. S. White has reconsidered his resignation at Dorchester, and will remain there. He will hold a meeting for the state board at Kingston in Custer Co., beginning Jan. 15 or 17.——J. W. Sapp has arranged to remain at Brownville half time, and continuing at Nemaha the other half. Will probably move to Nemaha in the spring. The meeting held at Nemaha by Brother Sayles was very successful.

John T. Smith, one of our young veterans, has closed his work at Reserve, Kan., and has accepted a call to the home church at Nebraska City.——H. T. Sutton preaches regularly at Cook. One confession and baptism at last appointment.——J. E. Wilson has accepted a call to Indianola and Bartley, and is now in a promising meeting at Indianola.

A. G. Smith has been complimented with a three years' call from the Clay Center church at an increase of $150 per year in salary. He has accepted, and is preparing for a meeting with Simpson Ely. Clay Center church is growing in power.

Our good and true brother, A. C. Corbin, will shortly move to Oregon. He goes out with the love of the whole Nebraska brotherhood that have had an opportunity to know him at all, and that is the large percentage of the workers. We will miss his sage counsel, and kindly presence at our annual gatherings. Such men are all too few. Let us hope, if not pray, that he will get homesick and come back next year.

The committee on program for the state convention, Aug. 1-6, will have a meeting Jan. 16, and the plans for the program laid good and deep. Some new features are being thought out.

The state evangelist, R. F. Whiston, and wife have been having a large hearing at Bennett. The meeting has grown in intensity. It is hoped that the church will be on a much better footing when he finishes this week. The next meeting is to be at Kearney. Preparations are being pushed there for a great meeting.

The Grand Island meeting, Putman and Egbert evangelists, closed with a total of 97: 69 confessions, 12 by letter and statement, and 16 from denominations who had been baptized. This is the greatest meeting Grand Island has had in years. Brother Doward, the pastor, will have his hands full caring for this newly enlisted army. The ages of the additions run from 10 to 74 years.

The Aurora church will hold its annual meeting on Jan. 12. The new furnace is a success. All accounts paid up, and the church in good working order. E. Von Forell is the preacher.

Alma will hold an annual meeting Jan. 11, Oscar Sweeney preacher.

Bixby, of the state journal (Lincoln), says that Austin and McVey are stirring the town of Ulysses to the depths with their evangelistic campaign. He further hazards the opinion that they need it up there on account of their increase of property these late years.

Bro. Thos. Rawlings and Geo. Childs met recently with the Magnet church in business session. W. A. Baldwin.

Another Death on the Jamaica Field.

In Jamaica, on Dec. 5, there passed from labor to reward, our aged Bro. Charles McHardy, father of A. C. and Miss M. Isabel McHardy, two of our missionaries on that island. For over a quarter of a century Brother McHardy has devotedly labored with our Kingston church, where he was affectionately called "Elder" or "Father" McHardy. Thirty-five years ago he named his son Alexander Campbell. In the recent years in which I met him, he was never more happy than when telling of the goodness of God, the greatness of our plea, and the loveliness of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. When in my bereavement, I left Jamaica, Father McHardy's commending me to the Lord was precious. The King in his beauty will indeed be a glorious sight to this saint who had grown blind in the earthly journey, but could not be kept from the house of the Lord until completely overcome with physical weakness.

Besides Sister Maddox, of whose going I wrote you recently, and Brother McHardy, the Kingston church has suffered the loss by death of three others, including Mrs. Silvera, their efficient infant class teacher. Although disappointed for two years as to having any missionary from the states, "Mr. John," son of our senior missionary, C. E. Randall, breaks to these people the bread of life as best he can, while doing the demanding work that is his in government employ in city courts, and Bro. G. D. Purdy, of Oberlin district, assists. Mr. John's clean, enthusiastic young life is a perpetual sermon, so that there is no break between that and his Lord's day public ministration. Good seed sown by him, his father and other members of the family and their co-laborers, is bearing fruit. C. W. B. M. day was observed on Dec. 4 with an offering of $39.63. On the same day there were seven confessions, among them three Harris lads, grandnephews of the lamented Miss Maddox. In six weeks there were five deaths, but in about three weeks 13 additions, and there were others inquiring.

At the Christian Endeavor convention, that of the Jamaica union held in November at Montego Bay, our own Brother Purdy was selected as vice-president. This is equal to choosing him for president of the union next year. Bro. C. E. Randall organized the first Christian Endeavor society on the island, and was first president of the Jamaica union. His son John has been secretary by hearty choice year after year, as is also his daughter, Mrs. Herbert Clark, superintendent of Junior work for Jamaica in the same way.

PUTTING IT STRONG.

But Doesn't It Look Reasonable?

This may read as though we were putting it a little strong, because it is generally thought by the majority of people that Dyspepsia in its chronic form is incurable or practically so. But we have long since shown that Dyspepsia is curable, nor is it such a difficult matter as at first appears.

The trouble with Dyspeptics is that they are continually dieting, starving themselves or going to the opposite extreme or else deluging the already overburdened stomach with "bitters" "after dinner pills," etc., which invariably increase the difficulty even if in some cases they do give a slight temporary relief. Such treatment of the stomach simply makes matters worse. What the stomach wants is a rest. Now how can the stomach become rested, recuperated and at the same time the body nourished and sustained?

This is a great secret and this is also the secret of the uniform success of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. This is a comparatively new remedy but its success and popularity leave no doubt as to its merit.

The Tablets will digest the food anyway, regardless of condition of stomach. The sufferer from Dyspepsia, according to directions, is to eat an abundance of good, wholesome food and use the tablets before and after each meal and the result will be that the food will be digested no matter how bad your Dyspepsia may be, because, as before stated, the tablets will digest the food even if the stomach is wholly inactive. To illustrate our meaning plainly, if you take 1,800 grains of meat, eggs or ordinary food and place it in a temperature of 98 degrees, and put with it one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets it will digest the meat or eggs almost as perfectly as if the meat was enclosed within the stomach.

The stomach may be ever so weak yet these tablets will perform the work of digestion and the body and brain will be properly nourished and at the same time a radical, lasting cure of Dyspepsia will be made because the much abused stomach will be given, to some extent, a much needed rest. Your druggist will tell you that of all the many remedies advertised to cure Dyspepsia none of them have given so complete and general satisfaction as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not least in importance in these hard times is the fact that they are also the cheapest and give the most good for the least money.

The Chicago Evangelistic Campaign.

The campaign was inaugurated on Sunday, Jan. 8, and, we consider, in a most promising way. Fifteen churches are enlisted in the simultaneous meetings, and our entire force is co-operating in the noonday meetings in the down town district. Dr. Herbert L. Willett is addressing the noonday meeting this week. The audiences are growing steadily, and we hope that they will develop into a great campaign. Thirty-five additions are reported to the churches on the first day of the meeting. In the individual meetings, J. H. O. Smith, of Valparaiso, Ind., is preaching at the First church; H. A. Northcutt, of Kirksville, Mo., at the Austin church; Geo. T. Smith, of Chicago, at Jackson boulevard; P. J. Rice, of South Bend, Ind., at the Irving park church; J. J. Taylor, of Connersville, Ind., at the Ashland church; Geo. B. Stewart, Dayton, Ohio, at the South Chicago church; W. A. A. Harris, of Kentucky, at the south side colored church; I. W. Lowman, of De Land, Ill., at the Garfield boulevard church. The other meetings are being held by local pastors. I shall be glad to send you notices of these meetings from week to week. GUY HOOVER.

Ira C. Smith, 871 Adams street, Chicago, Ill., has had experience in preaching and will correspond with churches in need of a young minister.

Charles H. Altheide, singing evangelist, is open for engagements. Address, Bloomfield, Iowa.

C. H. DeVoe, Rochester, Ind., has some open dates.

I. N. Jett, New Douglas, Ill., can be had for a meeting May 1. He can lead the singing service if necessary and will go for free will offering.

The Martin family are open to engagements, and may be addressed General Delivery, New York City.

E. L. Frazier, 1404 Cornell avenue, Indianapolis, Ind., is ready to make dates for 1905. He prefers the free will offering plan, and asks a place to preach in, and entertainment.

Any church desiring the services of H. S. Saxton and wife for February, should address them at Redwood Falls, Minn., where they are now in charge of the music at the big meeting.

C. O. McFarland, King City, Mo., would like to locate several consecrated pastors in the Nodaway valley district. Those wishing good churches may correspond with him, stating experience, salary expected, etc.

On account of changing dates, C. E. Millard of Springfield, Ill., can engage in leading the singing in a meeting until the middle of February.

L. A. Chapman, Mechanicsburg, Ill., would like to hold a meeting for some struggling church in that state.

E. G. Manley, Columbus, Kan., can, by arrangement with his church, give time to weak churches, or new points within 40 or 50 miles of his location for revival services during the week. He will go for free will offerings. This does not apply to churches able to hire an evangelist.

The First Christian church of Muncie, Ind., desires to employ a competent Christian musician to direct choruses in prayer-meetings, Christian Endeavor society, Sunday-school and the regular Lord's day services. He will have the use of the church with a good new pipe organ to give private lessons. Address, Horace G. Murphy, 106½ East Main street, Muncie, Indiana.

Louisiana Notes.

The churches of Louisiana are in a flourishing condition and practically all of them have regular preaching. J. N. Darnell, of Waco, Texas, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Crowley, and is getting his work well in hand. Marcellus Ely, of Joplin, Mo., assumed charge of the young Soniat avenue Christian church in New Orleans Jan. 1. The brotherhood of the state is interested in the success of his work there, and he will have our encouragement and our prayers. Frank Lanehart has resigned at Leesville and will preach at two or three weak points in east Louisiana for awhile. Brother Lanehart is a godly and a fearless minister, and he delights to labor in the hard places and strengthen and encourage the weak brethren. T. B. Larrimore, known and beloved by all Disciples, is holding a meeting for the First church at New Orleans. We had roll call and reports of the work that had been done here at Baton Rouge, on the First Sunday. There is a membership of 55; the building committee has expended approximately $4,500, the ladies have made over $600, the Endeavor, over $300, the Sunday school, $250, making a grand total of $6,000, and that through the efforts of only half a hundred members. It is but fair to state that this magnificent showing was made possible by our various boards which have stood back of us with their funds and their words of encouragement. Without them we could have done nothing. W. O. STEPHENS.

California Notes.

Yes, "December is pleasant as May," so we used to sing, but it's not all poetry and song in California, but a true, realistic thing. And I imagine that, if that great convention could drop in to the golden state and camp by the Golden Gate, thousands of the good people would feel like they were on the mount of transfiguration, and would want to build their "booths" at once, and send for their loved ones.

We do not know why 1905 should not be a very prosperous year, even more so than the year we have just laid to rest. In fact the indications are all pointing to a general enlargement in the spiritual as well as in the commercial outlook of California in the coming year. Heavy early rains have pushed to the front every department of business, and the seed time of the year is "on" in all its earnestness. The churches have their watchers on the towers, and it is seed time and harvest in the church work, which is intensifying in every direction.

We no longer say there is an "open door" in California for aggressive work, for the "whole side of the house is open." True and faithful men must step in and give the message. The reflex influence of the great St. Louis convention has bounded over the Rockies, and the Pacific churches have felt its influence. And when you gather by thousands by the Golden Gate we expect to reach the "top of the mountain of the Lord's house," and every hill and valley shall echo as never before with the tidings of salvation.

We shall expect to meet many of the old friends of bygone days, and even our own brothers who have been longing to gather by the seaside. We are pleased to know that a number of Christian people are casting their lot in our happy land. As our own editor has said, "The Pacific coast, when all things are considered, is the greatest country in the world, and if all of the eastern people would learn its worth, it would become densely populated in a few years." They are learning gradually. A good many have come to California, and felt that they were so near heaven that they either forgot to bring their church letters or they keep them in their trunks, and hence thought they could go the rest of the way without the church. J. DURHAM.

Strange New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorder of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is now stated that Alkavis is a product of the well-known Kava-Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases just as quinine is for malaria.

Among the many testimonials received, the Hon. R. C. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks Alkavis cured him of Rheumatism and Kidney and bladder disease of ten years' standing, and Prof. Edward S. Fogg, the noted Evangelist, of Covington, Ky., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood.

The only importers of Alkavis so far are the Church Kidney Cure Company, of New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free sample of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis entirely free. Address Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 404 Fourth Avenue, New York

†Ladies' Aid and S. S. offering combined.

The above presents a report of our work in the churches of the city of St. Louis as presented by G. A. Hoffmann, secretary of the City Mission Board, for last year. It might be well for our churches to carefully study this report. It has some very strong points. One we mention is the amount of $7,328 10 given to missions and benevolence, being $1.85 per member. This does not include the amount given to Education or Ministerial Relief. A half dozen parties are known to have given as much as the above. Neither does it include the offerings to our C. W. B. M. One of our apparent weak points is the amount given to State and City Missions. When we consider the fact, however, that $2,400 was raised in our churches to take care of our National Convention, and about as much more for the pavilion and its support in connection with the World's Fair, we may be somewhat excused. Other features might be pointed out which are of sufficient importance for consideration, but the reader can easily discern them.

The Business Men's Association of the Christian Church.

materially increased the attendance at our regular services.

In the third place, where churches are laboring under heavy debts or unusually large expenses, this association of its male members could be of very great benefit in a financial way; that is, by helping the church to meet its heavy obligations and to plan for paying off the debts gradually or as soon as possible.

In the fourth place, we feel assured that each and all of our churches in which these local chapters are formed could and would do larger things for our cause in general; that is, that home missions, foreign missions, church extension, the benevolences, and our educational institutions would receive larger receipts from the churches having their men banded together for active, energetic, enthusiastic and consecrated work along these lines.

There are many other avenues of usefulness which anyone can discover with very little reflection; but the foregoing will suffice for the present. In the meantime, while this work is being pushed vigorously, we hope to hear reports from the churches throughout our brotherhood that they are enlisting their men in accordance with the plans set forth above.

St. Louis has led off in this matter by organizing local chapters in all of its churches, also a St. Louis district organization, which is to meet quarterly. We hope soon to hear that other large cities are doing likewise, and that in all places where we have churches they will speedily form a local chapter of the Business Men's Association of the Christian church, sending their names, addresses, and a free-will offering to the national organization in St. Louis to help prosecute the work it has undertaken.

The office of the association in St. Louis is 306 Carleton Building, where W. Daviess Pittman, as corresponding secretary, is in charge. If you are interested, and want more information concerning this matter, write to him and he will gladly give you all the information and assistance you need.

This is a great movement, brethren, and we admonish you to lose no time in joining its ranks!

A number of the St. Louis churches formed local chapters during the first week in the new year. At the annual missionary rally, the city union was inaugurated, with the following officers: W. H. McClain, president; J. A. Gardner, vice-president; W. D. Cree, secretary, and H. H. Hodgdon, treasurer. The name decided upon was, the St. Louis Union of the Business Men's Association of the Christian Churches, and the constitution was adopted. Compton Heights reported the first organization and the most numerous. John L. Brandt outlined some features of work which he thought the Association of Business Men could undertake. The great benefit, he said, of the organization, is that we can use all the men. He advocated having them divided up into working committees to look after (1) membership, (2) social duties, (3) finance, (4) publicity, (5) public worship. In addition to these, F. N. Calvin suggested that there might be a committee on the sick and one on the unemployed.

Annual Missionary Rally in the City of St. Louis.

"Let's go into partnership with God." This sentence of Dr. J. H. Garrison was the keynote of the annual meeting of the St. Louis city mission. Though not very largely attended the spirit of the meeting was admirable, and those present were fired with a determination to enter more vigorously than ever before into aggressive Christian work in the city. A tabulated statement of some of the work of the churches will be found at the top of this page. Oreon E. Scott, the retiring president, gave an address, and W. H. McClain discussed St. Louis as a mission field, the central thought of his argument being that churches and not mere missions should be established. One of the most interesting discussions was upon the theme: "How shall we raise the funds for city and state missions?" J. M. Philputt laid emphasis upon the preacher's part in that work, insisting that he must not be afraid to talk strongly and frequently, if necessary. But after all, the essential fact was to get to the hearts of the people, and the secret was to get them into fellowship with God. G. A. Hoffmann, in speaking upon new fields and methods, advocated getting property early and never surrendering a point once taken hold of. John L. Brandt suggested that they should work to establish four more churches, emphasizing particularly the value, at this juncture, of one near the corner of Vandeventer and Olive, and one for the two thousand Chinese who are resident in St. Louis. The committee on future work recommended appropriations to Carondelet and Maplewood, and the following officers were then elected to serve this year: G. A. Hoffmann, president; J. H. Allen, vice-president; Paul Moore, secretary; W. H. McClain, treasurer; Lee Grant, auditor. Following the business men's session there was an adjournment for supper, after which the subject of church mortgages was given some discussion, and Dr. J. H. Garrison made a brief address.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ALABAMA.

Point Clear.—I have been to assist at a meeting conducted by Brother Speigh, state evangelist. I expect to return after filling two appointments here.—J. H. Callahan.

CALIFORNIA.

Palo Alto, Jan. 9.—Six additions to Palo Alto church since last report—five by letter, one by statement. All departments of the work prospering.—Chas. L. Beal.

CONNECTICUT.

Danbury, Jan. 9.—The fifteenth year of my work here in Danbury has just closed. It has been the very best year of the fifteen in results. We have had 106 additions to the church. Extensive repairs that cost $1,500 have been made and funds provided to cover every dollar of the amount. The church has given $500 to missions. The Sunday-school had an average attendance of 164 and an average offering of $7.03. Of the $365.43 contributed by the Sunday-school, $85 was given to missions. There were 45 conversions from the Sunday-school during the year. Since Jan. 1 we have had seven additions to the church, with a good prospect of increased interest. The "Each one win one" plan is being worked here with good success. We aim to have at least 100 members sign the soul winner's pledge. During the 15 years of the present pastorate 806 have been added to the church; the membership has increased from 280 to over 800; the missionary offerings have been multiplied by five; the church has raised over $81,000 for all purposes, $6,500 of which was for missionary work.—E. Jay Teagarden.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Jan. 10.—First Christian church, two confessions last Sunday and four additions by letter, five additions by letter and one from the Baptists the first Sunday in January, and five additions by letter and one confession the last Sunday in December.—J. T. Boone.

IDAHO.

Nez Perce, Jan. 6.—I began the work as pastor of the church here last October, and it has been very pleasant. They had been without a preacher for a year, and the work had run down, but we have all the departments revived, and now have a prosperous outlook. We have had five additions. We are now in a meeting with Evangelist J. P. Condon, and the meeting begins with fine interest.—Morton H. Wood.

ILLINOIS.

Stanford, Jan. 11.—Fourteen confessions here last night. Will continue some time.—J. Bennett, evangelist, W. H. Porter, pastor.

Paris, Jan. 8.—Fifteen additions during the last three weeks at regular services. We will have Brother Scoville in February.—Finis Idleman.

Mechanicsburg, Jan. 11.—We closed a short meeting here recently with eight baptisms. We have just installed an acetylene plant in the church. I begin a meeting at Buffalo to-night.—L. A. Chapman.

Flanagan, Jan. 10.—Just beginning a meeting here with O. L. Smith, pastor, doing the preaching. This is a good church, good preacher, and a good field and prospect for a good meeting. We intend to push the soul winner's pledge. One young man made the good confession last night.—Guy B. Williamson and wife, song evangelists.

Flanagan, Jan. 6.—The church observed its annual meeting on Jan. 1. Reports of the past year's work were received, and election of deacons and clerk, treasurer, chorister, organist, and ushers was carried out. The reports showed a present membership of 155. There were 19 additions during the year. About $1,100 was raised for local work, and $759.87 was raised for all forms of missionary work. The new year opens with fine prospects.—O. L. Smith, pastor.

INDIANA.

Fort Wayne, Dec. 19.—Meeting closed Sunday night temporarily at west Creighton avenue with 55 additions, 45 by confession. Interest unabated till the last. All lines of work growing rapidly; about 50 per cent on an average; 72 additions in all since beginning the work here June 1. There have been in all about 175 additions to the cause here in this great Catholic center. Besides the two churches, the Jefferson St. has two mission points. One of the local papers credits our people with 900 communicants and rapidly increasing.—M. F. Rickoff.

Elwood, Jan. 10.—One hundred seventy-five to date (in the meeting I am holding at New Lancaster, near Elwood), nearly all baptisms. Meeting continues with a promising outlook for 200 soon. Six came last evening. Meeting has produced a profound impression for a radius of many miles.—L. C. Howe, evangelist.

Indianapolis, Jan. 12.—A short meeting at the Hillside Christian church resulted in 30 additions—22 of this number by obedience.—O. E. Tomes.

Danville, Jan. 7.—In connection with our C. W. B. M. work, a young ladies' mission circle has been organized under the efficient leadership of Mrs. A. J. Kinnaman. It now numbers 22, with more prospective. Other lines of church work are in good shape. The Sunday-school is especially prosperous. Prof. G. W. Dunlavy of the Central normal college, our recently elected superintendent, is proving himself a master organizer. There were three confessions last Sunday and one the Sunday before. A large delegation from here will attend the missionary rally at Indianapolis, Feb. 6.—E. E. Moorman.

Warsaw, Jan. 9.—The work is prospering. It is joyful to note the increased spiritual interest; the attendance at "breaking of bread" is larger than in years; finances are also increasing—a great improvement along this line. The people have a willing mind. Since Oct. 2, when I resumed my ministry here after an interim of seven years, many needed improvements have been made: new lights for the auditorium; the vestibule repaired and redecorated; new chairs for the primary department of the Bible-school. The C. E. Society paid for the decorating; the Sunday-school and Junior Endeavor for the chairs. We are preparing to re-decorate the entire interior. We began a meeting last night with home forces. We are fortunate in having a singing evangelist among us, and the pastor has had considerable evangelistic experience. We were blessed with six accessions yesterday; five by letter, one from the Methodists. On the first day of the year we received a sister from the church of God. We have received 12 all told since Oct. 2; nine by letter, three from the denominations.—Edward O. Tilburn, pastor.

Brazil, Jan. 10.—Entered upon our fourth year here Dec. 1, under very favorable conditions. The year's reports, read Jan. 1, showed $4,490.80 raised for all purposes. The principal of our debt was lowered $1,200 and all interest and local obligations paid up to date, and 123 more added to the church membership. Chas. B. Newman was with us the first week of the new year and delivered fine lectures on Bible study and two others of interest to personal workers and Sunday-school teachers. An institute of this kind is a splendid way to develop the latent talent of a church. We shall probably have one a year in the future.—E. L. Day.

IOWA.

Batavia, Jan. 9.—A meeting, begun Dec. 31, has yielded four additions. The audiences and the interest are growing. We were obliged to turn some away last night for lack of room.—T. F. Paris, pastor, America M. Sea, evangelist.

Atlantic, Jan. 5.—The year's report is a very gratifying one. To the membership there were 69 additions, of which 42 were by obedience. All debts have been paid. Within less than one year, the congregation has erected a beautiful new building, which is a monument to the excellent endeavors of our faithful minister and his wife, and the church's devotion to service. The ladies' aid society applied over $380, largely to the building fund and preacher's salary. The C. W. B. M. reported a small but live working society. Both the Junior and Senior Endeavor are in line with the other working forces of the church, and doing excellent work. The following resolution was signed by every member of the congregation present at the annual meeting: "This is an opportune time for us to express our thorough appreciation of Brother and Sister Crewdson, for whose coming and living among us, we praise God this day."—Anna E. Riggs, clerk.

Ames, Jan. 9.—One by letter. Our annual meeting showed marked progress in all departments of church work. I began my fourth year as pastor with bright prospects for a larger and better work. Our Sunday-school cantata netted enough to help place our Sunday-school financially, with a neat balance in the treasury.—F. D. Ferrall.

Osceola, Jan. 6.—Our meeting starts off with a full house and additions at every service. One of the prominent men connected with Drake university says, "Vanhorn is the best pastor in the state." B. F. Hall, pastor at Hamburg, leads the chorus of 75 voices.—R. A. Omer.

KANSAS.

Lincoln.—Two additions—one from the M. E. church, one by statement. A Junior society has been organized; a cradle roll is being arranged for in the Bible-school. At our annual business meeting the church board was reorganized and strengthened by adding several new members. The brethren here are preparing for a forward movement in all departments.—N. Ferd Engle.

Eureka, Jan. 10.—We have the largest congregations ever known at regular services here. The house is not large enough for Sunday evening congregations. Two additions since last report.—G. F. Bradford.

Clearwater, Jan. 10.—I am in a meeting here. Two adults came last night. Very large audiences and deep interest. Brother Blakeslee is the hustling pastor. I go to Beaver City, Neb., Feb. 13.—W. L. Harris, evangelist.

Caldwell, Jan. 9.—One added by confession yesterday morning.—Lee H. Barnum.

Moline, Jan. 11.—Closed a meeting of nine days' duration at Elk Falls, Kansas, with three confessions. One was baptized Jan. 8, and two are yet to be. The meeting was well attended and the interest good. Newton Hill, notwithstanding he is the manager of the Elk Falls lumber yard, is the active preacher for the church and is doing a good work. The church is growing under his ministry. Brother and sister Spellman, whom I baptized last spring, are active workers in the church, and are desirous of seeing the Master's cause built up. I go to Ponca City, Okla., Jan 12.—E. L. Poston.

Holton, Jan. 9.—Brother Northcutt began a meeting for the church here on Dec. 10, 1904, with Brother Dawdy as singer. The meeting lasted three weeks, with 20 additions. J. T. Purvis, our beloved pastor, continued the meeting one week, closing last night with 23 additions for the one week, making a total of 43. The work here moves grandly on.—J. B. Gardiner.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans.—At Soniat Ave. church Bro. M. L. Ely, pastor, at regular Sunday services, one addition, a young married lady, from the Baptists. At the First church Brother Lorimore's meeting is now in the second week, with two additions by statement.—R. M. Denholme.

MICHIGAN.

Paw Paw, Jan. 9.—Our meeting began here yesterday. C. M. Keene, the pastor, is doing the preaching.—Charles E. McVay, singing evangelist.

Traverse City, Jan. 7.—There is progress in all departments of the church. Brother Parker, of Eureka college, addressed us new year's evening, and on Thursday evening he was ordained to the ministry by L. P. Ullom, our pastor. Mr. Parker will remain here to assist in the revival for a short time. The church was never in so active a condition. We are enjoying our new house and expect great things from God and are willing to undertake great things in his name. Sunday evening three united with the church by letter, one made the good confession, and Thursday evening four were baptized.—F. A. Clapp, church clerk.

MINNESOTA.

Redwood Falls, Jan 12.—We have just begun the meeting here. Bro. C. R. Neel, of St. Paul, is preaching. It will be remembered that we are following the big Sunday union meeting. Lots of sectarian strife, but with all, we have 24 added by confession in three nights.—H. S. Saxton and wife.

MISSISSIPPI.

Hattiesburg, Jan. 10.—Two took membership with the church here last Sunday by letter and a considerable number were added to the Sunday-school. All are encouraged with the outlook.—J. A. Holton.

MISSOURI.

Carterville, Jan. 9.—Meeting one week old with 24 additions: 17 confessions, two from the Baptists and five by statement. Nine of the confessions are young men, one of whom will enter the ministry. The house is crowded every service.—R. S. Campbell, evangelist; Bentley, singer

Marceline, Jan. 9.—Our meeting at Lentner closed with 34 additions. There were 16 confessions and 18 otherwise. Lentner now has a membership of 60 and will have one-fourth time preaching this year.—A. Munyon, state evangelist.

Monett, Jan. 6.—All departments of church work doing finely. We drove over to Verona new year's afternoon and baptized a young man in Spring river. Verona is nine miles from here. At night we had two more additions. We had four additions two weeks ago. Expect others next Lord's day. God is blessing his people here. About 40 at prayer-meeting last night.—J P. Haner.

Butler, Jan. 11.—Our meeting beginning Jan. 1 has given 15 to date—13 baptized. Brother Ogle, of Paris, Tex., is assisting us. Better things to follow.—H. Jas. Crockett.

Triplett, Jan. 6.—I closed a two weeks' meeting at Mike, Chariton county, with five confessions. Organized a congregation with 16 members and raised $900 for a new church, which will be built this spring.—H. Eubank.

Purcell.—The meeting had to close on account of bad weather, as the house was incomplete. We organized with 15 members. The dedication was postponed until the first Lord's day in February.

Sedalia, Jan. 10.—Four additions this year—two at Fayettville first Sunday by confession and baptism, and two last Sunday at Deepwater.—J. I. Orrison.

OHIO.

McArthur, Jan. 4.—Owen Livengood has begun a meeting with the church here of which Homer C. Boblitt is pastor. Good audiences are in attendance, although the weather has not been the most favorable. Three additions last Lord's day at the regular services.

Canton, Jan. 6.—Eighty-four were added to the church at regular Sunday and Thursday night services; 57 came on Decision day, December 11. The Bible-school had an average attendance of 630 per Sunday the last six months of the year. A contest is now being carried on between Canton and Portsmouth Christian Bible-schools.—P. H. Welshimer.

Columbus.—At the annual meeting our treasurer, Orwell C. Riddle, was able to report the Central church out of debt. Most admirable reports were presented from all departments of the work, showing that $5,136 85 had been raised during 1904. Of this amount a little more than $1,300 had been paid to liquidate debts, including the mortgage of $700, which was burned last September, and $839.21 to our various missionary and benevolent enterprises. This splendid showing was made possible only by the unity, devotion and liberality of the congregation. The pastor reported 74 persons baptized (the largest number baptized in any one other year of his ministry), 115 added to the church, with a net gain of 78. Of the 74 baptized, 25 united to form our fifth congregation, in Linden Heights, and two united with other churches in the city. The annual meeting was largely attended, refreshments were served and the church presented the pastor with a handsome traveling bag, disclaiming, however, that it was a hint to him to travel from the church! We face the new year with increased zeal, hoping to accomplish yet greater things for the Master.—Walter Scott Priest.

Akron, Jan. 12.—The Third church of Christ has made great advance in the past eight months. When I came here, May 1, the church had trouble within and a bad name without. Now the trouble has been settled and there has been progress in every department. In all 46 have been added to the membership—23 by baptism. All current expenses, including $160 for repairs, have been paid, and $316 is now on hand to apply on the $1,300 debt. I can hold one meeting away from here, and will agree to raise the money to pay for same when on the ground.—A. F. Stahl.

OKLAHOMA.

Kingfisher.—The outlook is very promising. Our ladies' aid is one of the best in the territory.—Isom Roberts.

Ames.—The meeting led by Simpson Ely closed with 21 additions—14 by confession, four by commendation, one reclaimed, one from the Baptists and two from the Methodists.

OREGON.

Eugene, Jan. 2.—Just closed a one week's meeting with the church at Dallas, with three additions—two by primary obedience, one by letter. This makes a total of five added to the Dallas church since last report.—G. L. Lobdell.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

PENNSYLVANIA.

Wilkesbarre.—First church of Christ meetings are beginning with an earnest spirit. The minister, E. E. Cowperthwait, and the "Martin family" are friends of long standing and all are rejoicing over the good start of seven additions in the first week, four last Lord's day. The minister has carefully distributed 4,000 of "Our Position," and other helpful literature at each service. Brothers Nipp, Clymer, and Frick are each in attendance on the meetings.

TEXAS.

McKinney, Jan. 10.—The report of the First church here is as follows: Additions, 148; raised for local work, $2,237.15; for misssons, $619.15; for benevolences, $382.70; ladies' aid, $401.25; C. W. B. M., $257.52; Sunday-school, $193; present membership, 619. —C. L. Bush, minister.

WASHINGTON.

Everett, Jan. 7.—We spent the greater part of the month of December, 1904, in a meeting with the church here. The immediate results were four additions: two by confession, two by statement. Since my coming in April, 1904, the church has met all of her current expenses and has paid $300 on her debt. The present indebtedness is $500 on property valued at $5,000. The present membership is 155, twenty having been added since April. The work is extremely difficult. Everett is a city of 25,000 population and has not yet celebrated her thirteenth birthday. We have the wide open saloon and Sunday theatre to contend with. There is not another organization Christian only in the county.—O. W. McGaughey.

"Education in Religion and Morals." By George Albert Coe, Ph. D., Professor of moral and intellectual philosophy in Northwestern university. (Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, New York, Toronto. Pages 430. Price $1.50.)

Those who have read the author's previous works, "The Spiritual Life" and "The Religion of a Mature Mind," will be glad to read this third volume from his pen. There is no more vital subject for consideration to-day than that of moral and religious education, nor is there a more luminous writer on this topic than Professor Coe. There is a clearness of analysis, a directness and a perspicuity of style, which make it a delight to read his pages. The book is pre-eminently timely. It falls into line with the great aim of the Religious Education Association, and is, indeed, a reflection of the spirit and purpose of that movement. Every parent, every teacher of children, every preacher of the gospel, would be profited by the careful study of this volume. We have hitherto gone too much on the assumption that it is sufficient to proclaim the truth as we understand it, supposing that others hearing us would receive the same impressions from what we state as we ourselves have. We are coming to understand that we must know the minds of those we would teach, and their character and surroundings. We are coming to a better knowledge of child-nature, and our methods of teaching are being revolutionized. We believe that this better understanding of child, of youth, and of the mature mind, and the better methods of teaching religion and morals growing out of that knowledge, are to profoundly affect the religious life and methods of the churches in the future. We heartily commend this work as a most timely and able contribution to one of the most vital problems of our day.

The Apostles of Our Lord. By the Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M. A. (278 pages. $1.50. Armstrong & Son. New York.)

Mr. Greenhough is a cultured Baptist minister and a graduate of the University of London. But for this book he lays no claim to originality and makes no pretense to scholarship or research. Though not a collection of sermons the various chapters dealing with the individual apostles—which follow three chapters which show what typical men of the time the apostles were as well as the originality and uniqueness of their calling—partake more of the sermon in style than the essay. Part Four deals with "after studies," among other subjects presented being "the primacy of Peter." The book can hardly be expected to be a permanent contribution to the literature of its theme.

Pseudo-Criticism or the Higher Criticism and Its Counterfeit. By Sir Robert Anderson K. C. B., LL.D. (120 pages. 75c. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.)

The author is a London layman who has given much thought to Christian "word and work." He is best known among the followers of Mr. Moody and the readers of The Christian. He claims in this book that the average man is fully as competent to draw conclusions as the investigating scholar. Many will doubt such a proposition.

John Knox: His Ideas and Ideals. By James Stalker, D. D. (Pages 250. $1 00 net. A. & C. Armstrong & Son, New York.)

This year there will be celebrated the quatercentenary of the greatest of Scotsmen. It is as a contribution to this event that the preacher and historian of the United Free Church College, Aberdeen, has produced this volume. There are, of course, some admirable books on the great reformer already in circulation, Mr. Innes' perhaps being the best for popular use. But the scope of Dr. Stalker's work is different. He has sought to make Knox's own sentiments better known and he quotes many of his good things in the quaint phraseology in which they are expressed. But there is an adequate outline of the chief events in Knox's life preceding the account of his writings, religious convictions and political principles.

The Footsteps of the Flock. By G. H. Morrison, M. A. (Pages 382. Price $1.50. A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York.)

These sermonettes or scripture studies for every Sunday of the year, though orthodox in divisional treatment, are fresh in suggestion and always readable. Dr. Morrison is an expositor of keen discernment and possesses that happy gift of adapting his knowledge and his sympathy to the average home circle.

JESUS AND NICODEMUS.—John 3:1-15.

Memory verses 14, 15.

Golden Text.—For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life.—John 3:16.

The events from the first public appearance of Jesus at the time of his baptism until after the first miracle at Cana may be called the prelude to the public ministry. It began with the events connected with John's preaching and included the baptism and temptation, the call of the first group of disciples, then a return to his own neighborhood in Galilee and a sojourn of some time there in comparative retirement, toward the end of which occurred the miracle at Cana. Then after a brief stay at Capernaum with his family and friends he returns to Judea for the real beginning of his public ministry. Only the gospel of John tells this early Judean ministry which included the first cleansing of the temple, the interview with Nicodemus and a somewhat extended preaching tour through the country districts of Judea.

The meeting with Nicodemus was notable because it furnished an occasion for a declaration of Jesus's principles in relation to a concrete case. Here was a man, prominent, brilliant, earnest, seeking the way of life. We may safely presume that Nicodemus, like the rich young man who later came asking the conditions of salvation, had performed punctiliously the requirements of the Jewish law. He did not begin by asking how he might have eternal life, but Jesus either read some such question in his countenance, or else recognized him as one of those who, from the pinnacle of their legalistic self-righteousness, were disposed to give patronizing approval to the new teacher. It is not at all improbable that Nicodemus may even have submitted to John's baptism, but this, of course, is mere conjecture.

The first recorded words of Jesus in this interview, stating the necessity for a new birth, contain the leading idea of which the subsequent verses are the development. What this new birth is, why it is necessary, how it is obtained, and what relation he himself has to it —these were all treated in the course of the interview. But the great fact is that man needs some change so radical that it can be called a new birth before he can see the kingdom of God.

The Hebrew notion was, of course, that birth in the line of Abraham made one an heir of the promise, so nothing further was needed than to live a decent life under the law. As a high-caste Hebrew, Nicodemus doubtless shared this sense of the importance and sufficiency of Jewish birth. The prophets preached repentance and righteousness as essential to blessedness, and John not only repeated this common prophetic message but employed the rite of baptism as a sign of purification through repentance in preparation for the imminent coming of the kingdom in which righteousness should be the only criterion for entrance. But even John's baptism of repentance involved no new birth. It introduced no new motives, it gave us no new insights, it awakened no new enthusiasms, it did not transfigure the life with any new inspirations or fill it with any new power or grace. It stood for an improvement in morals—a much needed element, but not the whole of religion.

Jesus says now to Nicodemus: Whatever you have been putting your trust in is insufficient, whether it be your Abrahamic descent or your newly confirmed faith in the need of righteousness. The old life cannot be patched up. It does not need repair but renewal. Furthermore, to be born of water, to be baptized unto repentance, is not enough; you must also be born of the Spirit, so that there shall be a spiritual as well as an ethical renewing.

And that message of the new birth is something which is always timely. It has been abused and distorted, but let us not be afraid of it. Religion is something more than a moral life. The plucking out and casting away of sins, one by one, is a heroic task but it may leave a very empty and barren life when all is done—and death always comes before that task could be completed. In a straight fight between us and sin, our sins kill us before we can kill them. We need the fresh start, the new outlook on life, the new sense of the meaning of life and the nearness of God, and these, coming to us with that forgiveness of sins which comes through Christ, constitute a new birth.

THE KEY THAT UNLOCKS.

"When he had thus spoken, he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and anointed his eyes with the clay, and said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam (which is by interpretation, Sent). He went away, therefore, and washed, and came seeing."—John 9:6, 7.

The story of the healing of this blind man, and the discussion which followed, is one of the most interesting episodes in the life of Jesus. The simple, unsophisticated faith of the blind man is in striking contrast with the sectarian bias and skepticism of the Pharisees.

The Means Used. The clay made of spittle has never been recognized by oculists as a remedy for blindness. But Jesus used it in this instance as a means of accomplishing the end which he had in view. It would be a help to the man's faith to give him something to do, as an expression of his confidence in the Divine Healer. It was not a hardship imposed by Jesus to make it more difficult for the man to be healed, but it was an expedient intended to help the man put his faith into some concrete act of obedience. It was not the clay, of course, nor yet the water of Siloam, that opened the blind man's eyes. This the blind man knew very well. Jesus opened the blind eyes, but he chose to do it through the blind man's obedience to his simple command.

A Vital Distinction. It would have been fatal to the future welfare of the man whose eyes were opened, if he had attributed any efficacy either to the clay with which his eyes were anointed or to the water in which he washed them. But he distinguished clearly between the real Healer and the simple means which he employed.

Saved by Faith. "He went away, therefore, and washed, and came seeing." This was faith manifesting itself in obedience. His sight came to him through his obedience. This is the key that unlocks the door into larger spiritual vision. Obey and see. Do and understand. Every one, who in faith obeys any command of Jesus Christ, will come seeing. "He that doeth the will of my Father shall know of the doctrine."

Applying the Key. If anyone would be healed of sin and moral blindness, let him hear what Christ directs him to do, in order to salvation, and let him follow the directions as faithfully as did the blind man, and he will come seeing and rejoicing in the knowledge of sins forgiven.

Prayer: O, Thou, who openedst the eyes of the blind, and who had power on earth to forgive sins, incline the hearts of all who would have their spiritual vision restored and their sins forgiven to come unto Thee and submit themselves to Thy will, that they may receive their sight and be able to rejoice in the knowledge of Thy salvation! For Thy name's sake. Amen.

A Symphony in Gray.

In the 1905 calendar of N. W. Ayer & Son, the Philadelphia Advertising Agents, is worked out a color scheme in grays and whites so harmonious as to merit the above title.

On the background of gun metal gray cover paper is developed in lighter tones their well-known medal trade mark and motto, "Keeping Everlastingly at it Brings Success;" the latter being the predominant feature of the design.

The calendar is a large one, fourteen by twenty-eight inches, and designed for office or library. The figures are large and, being printed in white, stand out clearly across a large room.

Whether the popularity of Ayer & Son's calendars is due to the uniformly tasteful design, to their utility, or to the epigrams on advertising and business-building which fills the blanks left on the flaps, it is hard to say, but they have enjoyed a steady sale for years at twenty-five cents each; for this sum, which barely covers cost and postage, the 1905 edition may be had as long as it lasts.

HEROES OF FOREIGN MISSIONS: WHAT THEY TEACH US.—2 Cor. 11:21-28.

For the Leader.

The subject, "Heroes of Foreign Missions," brings up a study of those qualities of mind and heart that make men and women the most sacrificing, daring, and yet the most humble. Foreign missions is the designation for the work of carrying the gospel to the outlying parts of the earth; to the most benighted and sinful parts of the world; against the opposition of intellectual sloth, religious self-satisfaction, pride of past achievements; to there labor for years amid the unbelief and slowness of heart of those who would but for the law slay one, and who have, in far distant times, delighted in the shedding of the blood of the Lord's own missionaries. Foreign missionaries are the most heroic because foreign mission work calls for the fullest measure of all the gifts we may bring to God: in giving, in work, in privation, in anxiety for the cause of the King, in endangering of life for his sake. It is true that there are as brave men and women on the home field as ever went to the foreign field, but it is not true that the home work makes the demands upon one that the foreign work does. Those who went out like Paul burnt the bridges behind them, and we can but ever think that his march into Macedonia was the boldest and fartherest step he ever took. May the Lord raise him up of the young men and women of this society many who will say, "Send me."

For the Members.

1. Adoniram Judson is one of the heroes of the cross who has forever associated his name with those who are to wear white robes and royal diadems for the deeds they have done and the things they have suffered. His field was Burmah. Slow at first was his work. Indeed, it seemed as if he would never get the first fruits of the gospel, but at last, through prayer and labor and waiting, the word took hold of the Burman heart. Who will not agree that the heroism of heart and faith that waited with expectancy through years of seed sowing was equally heroic with the courage that braved the dangers of physical violence?

2. David Livingstone can not be mentioned without thinking of the great suffering he endured for Africa, of the faith he had in the power of the word to save, of the privations of a great soul, lost, as it were, in the heart of the darkest continent of the earth, and refusing to be rescued from its wilds. As we think of him dying at the place of prayer, his bedside, can we ever get away from the feeling that wells up within us and the something that fills us too full for utterance? And do we ever want to get away from this feeling? No, never! His work-worn and storm-beaten body, carried from the heart of Africa by two native sons of heathen darkness to the seacoast, and accompanied from there to England, dead—dead for Africa's sake—preaches to us more eloquently than ever a Greek orator pleaded with his auditors—preaches of heroism that never dies.

3. Our own Dr. Rijnhart lost his life in Tibet. His heroism and faith were unshaken to the last. Many of us have heard his heroic wife who escaped the knife and returned to this country to awaken the churches to the need of Tibet. Mrs. Dr. Rijnhart is now back upon the field in Tibet. The dangers of life do not, it would seem to the writer, require much greater heroism than many of the disagreeable features of life in some of the foreign fields. Especially is this true of Tibet. I think the following taken from the January number of The Missionary Intelligencer will illustrate this—it is from the pen of Mrs. Rijnhart:

"I wish I could present to you my Tibetan teacher, with whom my Chinese girl and I study every day. He is over sixty and is from the king's yamen. The first time Manyen, my girl's name, saw him catch and eat a louse, she was on the verge of hysterics almost. She has become accustomed to it now. But he cleans his handkerchief with a knife, a table knife. He uses snuff all the time and it is awfully hard to get used to. However, he is a Tibetan and that makes up for almost anything in my eyes."

4. Time and space would fail us to undertake to mention all the heroes and to relate the tale of their sufferings. Does not the writer of the Hebrew letter call the roll for a time, and then despair of mentioning the number of those who had wrought worthily for the Lord through the faith that was in them? Foreign missions calls for the greatest sacrifices and brings out in us the finest strain of character possible to humanity.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Should I give my life to the foreign work?

CHAPTER XVI.

DEATH INTRUDES ITSELF — AN ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.

"Doctor, do you think mother will recover?"

The faithful family physician knew that it would be only a few hours until the Randolph home would be wrapped in the sable curtains of death, and had so advised Mr. Randolph, but to tell Alma the worst was a task to which he did not feel adequate.

Evading her question, he said: "My dear child, your good mother is very ill; but we are doing all we can to reduce the fever, and if this can be accomplished, her recovery may be possible."

An hour later, Alma was summoned to the sick-chamber. She found her father on his knees by the bed, holding the hot hand of the one who had shared his joys and sorrows for twenty-eight years, and weeping. Going to the other side, she knelt and earnestly prayed that her precious mother might be spared, adding, as she felt she ought, "Thy will be done."

Arousing from the stupor in which she had lain for hours, the patient looked first into the anxious, love-lit face of her husband and then upon her weeping daughter, and whispered: "My precious ones, I am now ready to depart. The blessed Master waits to accompany me. Have my funeral in the church, and ask Mr. Baxendale to make a few remarks. God bless and keep you." Having said this, she fell asleep.

Saturday afternoon, at two o'clock, the capacity of the Poplar Square church was again taxed. Numerous relatives of the bereaved family, both in and out of the city, were there. The great church was well represented and, with the public, vied to gain admittance; some came to pay a tribute of respect to the deceased, some to sympathize with Mr. Randolph, others to hear Mr. Baxendale in his old pulpit again, and still others out of idle curiosity.

When Mr. Baxendale entered the pulpit, there was breathless silence. It had been predicted that he would be embarrassed, and a few had gone so far as to intimate that he would probably be broken up to such an extent that a failure might ensue. But the preacher was master of the occasion, as he had always been in the Poplar Square church.

Upon the text: "Her sun is gone down while it was yet day," he delivered a brief, impromptu discourse, his heart beating perceptibly in every word. Dwelling upon the simple, beautiful life of the deceased—that of a devoted wife, a loving mother, and a consistent Christian—he exhorted his hearers to emulate her many virtues, and then pronounced a tender benediction upon the sorrowing family and friends, and dismissed the audience.

At the close of the service, he stood in the aisle for a few moments, speaking words of comfort to Alma, while Ralph Cunningham, near by, looked on with jealous rage.

Returning from the cemetery at dusk, Mr. Baxendale discharged the driver at the door of a drug store, two squares from his home. After taking the medicine, which the druggist had prescribed for a nervous headache, and chatting a few moments with a friend, he walked slowly up the street, thinking of Alma and sharing her sorrow. While passing an alley, his heart went up in a silent prayer that she might be supported by "the everlasting arms"; and, at the same time, at the report of a revolver, he fell, clumsily, upon the ice-covered pavement. A crowd soon gathered about him, and an officer telephoned for the patrol. As the multitude increased, Ralph Cunningham appeared upon the outskirts, anxiously inquiring the nature of the trouble.

When it was found that the unfortunate man was Mr. Baxendale and that he lived only a few steps away, he was gently borne to his own room and physicians were hastily summoned.

The preliminary examination revealed that the ball, entering the left side, had grazed and been deflected by the spine—slighty injuring the vertebræ—and was imbedded at some remote spot from the point of penetration. Upon the application of restoratives, the patient returned to consciousness and asked a few questions concerning his condition. The physicians encouraged him by saying they did not consider the wound fatal, and ordered absolute quiet and rest.

The next morning the wound was reopened and the ball probed for without success. Nevertheless, normal conditions continued and speedy recovery seemed probable. However, on the following Friday the preacher was taken with a violent chill, which was immediately followed by a high fever and intense pain in the back, near the seat of the wound, and Saturday, at six o'clock, he again sank into unconsciousness. A consultation was speedily called, and it was discovered that inflammation had appeared, together with a septive condition of the wound. For a week he seemed to hover between life and death and grave anxiety prevailed among his friends. But on the following Sunday the inflammatory conditions subsided and the delirium passed off. With this, a localized inflammation appeared about six inches below the wound and resulted in an abscess, which, when opened, gave forth the ball.

In four or five weeks the wounds healed nicely, but owing to temporary paralysis, due to the shock received by the spine, Mr. Baxendale was confined to his apartments until the latter part of March, and he had to depend upon crutches and canes until about the middle of May.

How Their Sin Found Them Out.

By Alice Curtice Moyer.

"As miserable a period as I ever passed," said our venerable Elder Jones, "was two days once when I was a boy. It was this way: My father was one evening suddenly called to the city sixty miles away. Mother was absent on a visit. It was in the midst of the crop-making, and father said to my brother and me, aged respectively twelve and fourteen years, 'This sudden journey will delay our crop work somewhat, boys, but you can clean out the hill patch during my two days' absence, and if you are through in time, you may go fishing with the Green boys Wednesday afternoon. You are now quite old enough to assume some responsibility, and I can trust you, even though both your mother and I will be absent.'

"The next morning we boys were up 'bright and early,' and whistled and hallooed on the way to our work. The 'hill patch' was a piece of ground in the far field, where the corn had not grown well during the dry weather, but where the weeds had flourished. We had rather neglected it in our concern for the more favored tracts, waiting for an 'off time,' as father said, to cultivate this spot which was always doubtful as to productiveness. These two days he considered an 'off time,' 'And,' said we that morning upon reaching the place, 'if we do our very best, the corn will, with another rain, come out all right after all. By hard work we can finish it up in good shape in a day and a half, and that will give us a half day on the river.'

"We had scarcely begun when John Green came up and said: 'We've decided to go to the Big Springs instead of the river, and will start to-day at noon. Can't you come along?'

"To the Big Springs! Why we had dreamed of going there for more than a year. All the other neighborhood boys had been there, but we had always been too busy to spare the time it required, and now here was a chance. Father and mother were away and—but there was the weedy corn! The hill patch had never appeared so large as we looked it over, and then into the eyes of each other. We knew we ought to say at once that we could not go, but there was the longing in my brother's eyes, and I knew he could see it in mine. We told John we would see about it. If he heard the conch shell blow three blasts at noon, he could come by for us. Well, it blew three times, and we went. To outside appearances the 'hill patch' was left in fine condition, but—well—we weren't going to let the thought of it spoil our good time at the Big Springs, and we really thought but little about it, for the trip was full of fun and excitement. But there came a time when we did think about it; there always does.

"When we returned we found father already at home. We came by way of the river road, and he did not seem to suspect that we had been farther. 'The hill patch looks well,' he said. 'Its outward appearance is all one could ask. I am pleased with it, and hope you had a pleasant half day on the river.'

"And then for the first time we boys realized what cheats we were. We scarcely dared look at each other or at father. We retired early that evening, but hadn't a word to say, though we lay awake for some time. The next day we were miserable, and the following night was as bad as the first. The day following we felt even worse. Father seemed to suspect nothing, but that did not ease the conscience of either, and we resolved to tell him about it, and take the consequences whatever they might be. We felt we would perfer the most severe punishment to the daily living of a lie. It was torture.

"We were much surprised to find that father had known of our deception all the time and was simply waiting for us to find the courage to confess.

"'My boys,' he said, 'while it was bitterness to me to be deceived by my own sons, yet it might be well for you to learn now that there is no pleasure in deception. I have never known a man or woman who eventually gained anything by it. I have known people to flourish for a while upon fraudulent representations—outside appearances—but sooner or later they are found out. Many times they fail to deceive those whom they most desire to mislead and are simply despised for their pains. Almost always the deceiver makes misery for himself. I am sure you boys have been anything but happy since you hoed around the edges of the hillside patch and left the center full of weeds.'

"It was a lesson," said the elder, "that I never forgot, and when I see people living beyond their means in order to shine as, or a little beyond, their neighbors; when I see people living sham lives and sailing under false colors, I say to myself, those people are only hoeing around the edges. I believe three-fourths of the misery in this world is caused by the deception that people practice upon one another, and yet we keep right on. The wife deceives the husband, the husband deceives the wife and the home is wrecked. Children deceive the parents and parents deceive the children and misery is brought to all concerned. Pupils deceive teachers and teachers deceive their pupils. Business men deceive one another and the world at large in the competition that is cut-throat in its keenness. The servant deceives his master, the employe his employer and vice versa. The social life is full of shams. But appearances must be kept up. No matter what the care may be, the outside must be hoed around. Why have we not the courage to be ourselves?"

Perhaps the elder is right in his description of what is, but that does not mean that such a state must needs be. "Do unto others as you would have others do to you," is a doctrine contrary to deception.

What the Government Gives Away.

QUEER IDEAS SOME PEOPLE HAVE OF WHAT CONGRESSMEN CAN DO FOR THEM.

The original intent of the law which authorized the introduction of new and valuable varieties of plants, has been perverted, says Henry A. Castle, former auditor for the post office department. This year, 45,000,000 packets of garden and flower seeds will be sent out, few of them differing in any respect from those sold at retail stores, but public opinion seems to sustain the policy.

Representative Stevens of Minnesota forwarded, not long since, to one of his people at home a package of garden seeds. In a few days, a letter profuse with thanks was received, with this concluding paragraph: "Please send me a sack of oats, a sack of corn, and as many trees as you can get at the agricultural department."

A congressman from Boston, although representing a city district, declares that he has some constituents who thoroughly appreciate the benefits of the seed distribution.

"Some time ago, I thought I would send a few of my people some flower seeds to find out whether they cared anything for these perquisites. I received an answer from one of them. He thanked me for the flower seeds, which, he declared, it was his intention to plant in his back yard. Then he went on to request that I secure from the government for him a lawn-mower, a set of garden tools, and 100 feet of black hose."

Representative Cooper, of Wisconsin, had been sending very fine grass seed to one of his constituents for several years. At last, he received this letter: "Dear Mr. Cooper, I want to thank you very much for the seed you have been sending me. Please do not send me any more, as our canary died ten days ago. The bird did not seem to thrive on the seed you have been sending."

An application received by one of the representatives from a northwestern state read thus: "Please send to me, and to a number of relatives, names herein given, some garden seeds. I also want a gasoline engine of 18 horse-power, a wood-saw, and a barrel of gasoline. Please send them right away."

During the debate of the garden seed appropriation, one congressman read a letter from an intelligent voter applying for a "union suit of clothes, a coat, 38 size, pants, 33-34."

Children's Spending Money.

By Lily Rice Foxcroft.

Most thoughtful parents agree, nowadays, that it is best for children, even very young children, to have their spending money come to them regularly in the form of an "allowance." Papa or mamma may make a gift now and then, but the child is not encouraged to expect it, much less hint or ask for it. He must meet his own financial crises independently, by his own forethought and prudence, or one of the chief benefits of the system is lost. Even supplementing his little income by "earning" money of his own is not always so desirable as it sounds. To pay a child for small services about house and farm which are only his proper contribution to the general helpfulness, is absurd and unnatural—it would be far better to increase his allowance outright. To turn him loose on his neighbors, ding-donging at their bells with subscriptions and soap, is worse yet. If in the playtime that is fairly his own he can find real work that really needs to be done, and will do it on a real business basis—no fancy prices—that, of course, is legitimate enterprise. But opportunities of this sort are not so common in real life as they are in juvenile fiction.

Questions of income settled, there remain the more perplexing problems of outgo. It seems clear, as a first principle, that the child must be allowed to spend his nickels and dimes with the least possible parental interference, if experience, that excellent teacher, is to have her fair chance with him. A few restrictions in certain lines—eatables and explosives, for instance—may be made at the outset. But if the boy wants to put a week's money into a balloon that will burst in a day, he must be left to find out the folly of it himself, if it is a folly.

But though father and mother may not constrain, even by too obvious approval or disapproval, they may advise, and in the normal, sympathetic household their advice will be often asked and taken. Here, as at so many other points in the training of children, time for talk and discussion and the comparison of ideas, is of the greatest possible value. Not only lessons of practical utility, of wise discrimination in quality and durability, such as will stand the little shopper in good stead when he—she—is the head of a house, but lessons in the higher regions of art and ethics can be taught while the total in the tiny pocketbook is being matched against the bewildering possibilities of the store window.

Mrs. Frederic Harrison, writing in a recent number of The Cornhill Magazine on the household expenses of our grandmothers, comments on "the apparent ease and luxury of their family life with their small general expenditure," and ascribes it to "the general restraint in the small personal items which count for so much in the family budget of to-day." Her suggestion is one for parents to bear in mind in their guidance of their children. A day at the beach can be enjoyed even if the contents of the child's purse are not all emptied at the lemonade counter and the merry-go-round, and a sensible child will soon learn to understand that it is neither pleasant nor creditable to come home penniless. Account books play the same part with children as with older people in promoting this "restraint in small items," and the sooner the child can be taught to use one, the better. A small premium on accounts that balance, by the way, gives papa an excellent pretext for adding to the childish resources.

Children, like the rest of us, are helped to habits of prudence and self-denial by having some object in view for their savings. But the object must not be too large, or its remoteness may discourage the child. With children of the doggedly persevering type, on the other hand, there is the danger that the habit of hoarding may crowd out others more desirable. And it is not wise, either, to stimulate the childish ambition toward prizes too far beyond its natural reach—contentment is a better lesson for these strenuous days. Perhaps the ideal object for a child's savings is one that can be bought a little at a time, or added to from time to time, as a stamp collection, or an outfit of tools, or a set of books.

The delight of spending for others is one that most children appreciate early, and to teach them to save with that in view is not hard. Birthdays and Christmases should be planned for far enough in advance to get the benefit of the stimulus which they afford. It is easy to interest children in charities, too, if father or mother will take a little pains in presenting them. Work for other children, like that carried on by the Fresh Air funds, or the children's hospitals, appeals to them at once, and the literature sent out by such organizations, with its attractive illustrations, is often admirably adapted for reading aloud to them. If the child can have a glimpse of their practical working, or be allowed to take his own little subscription to the office and come home with his receipt in hand, it will be all the more real.

But if he is to have a fair idea of the claims of these charities upon him, he must understand that much larger sums than come out of his small bank are given from the parental purse in his behalf, just as food and clothing are provided for him, and that when he is old enough to assume the larger responsibility for himself, the larger obligation toward others will be waiting for him, too. Too many young people, it is to be feared, carry on into the period of independent self-support, the habit of giving by the old childish scale.—The Congregationalist.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE FIRST DAY.

One afternoon in August, three wagons heavily loaded with household furniture drew near a small village in northwest Missouri. The first two were driven by boys of seventeen and thirteen respectively, and the last by a man of middle age, the three drivers bearing a strong family likeness. Their hair was shocky, resembling, both in color and in absence of cultivation, tufts of dead prairie-grass; their noses were hooked and sheepish; their eyes, small and keen, roved continually; while their garments, which were few in number, presented the same general aspect of neglected age. In the last wagon, besides the uncouth driver, were to be seen the family to whom the furniture belonged. This consisted of a man, his wife and mother, and his daughter.

"That there is it," said the driver, pointing to the village which a turn in the road had disclosed. "But you can't see it—I forgot that," he added with a sudden glance at the head of the family, who sat beside him. For the man to whom the furniture belonged, was blind, and black spectacles concealed his eyes. "It must be mighty binding on a man to be blind," the driver continued sympathetically. "A man naturally likes to see where he is going. How long have you been that a-way, Mr. Woodney?"

Mr. Woodney's daughter, a girl of about sixteen, sat upon a pile of bedding beside her mother. The latter lay upon one elbow reading from a book—a pleasure which the continual jolting and jarring considerably modified. The daughter, who rested just behind her father, now said to him, "It is a real pretty little town, papa. There seems to be just one street to it, and there is a farm all around it. I mean a farm on both sides. We are on a hill and can look right down upon the houses. I think there must be about fifteen houses, altogether. It is quite a little town!"

"You're making yore pa see it," said the driver admiringly. "Well, if you have to be blind, it's nice to be told of things, anyway, Mr. Woodney. It ain't like being plumb out on a desert island."

The girl's eyes flashed impatiently. They were very dark eyes, darker than her hair, and they flashed pretty often. It was one object of her young life to be eyes to her father and to make him forget, as far as possible, his affliction; but it seemed to her that everybody was always reminding him—reminding him—that they would not for a moment let him forget. Why must they always be talking about what could not be helped? Angry words rose to her tongue, but at that moment she heard her grandmother say, "Mace!"

She looked over the reclining form of her mother at the gray haired lady who sat in a cane seat chair, as erect and stiff as the jolting would allow.

MRS. M. SUMMERS, BOX 183, NOTRE DAME, IND., U. S. A.

"What is it, grandmother?" she asked, though she knew the voice had come as a warning. Old Mrs. Woodney beckoned, and Mace climbed over the bedding to the rear of the wagon.

"I wouldn't say anything to that driver," said the grandmother as she gave Mace's hair a stately pressure, such as a queen might bestow upon a favored subject. "He means well, and we must keep up the family dignity, my child."

"Now, Mr. Woodney," the driver was persistent, "how long have it been that you went blind?"

"Three years," said Mr. Woodney with the utmost cheerfulness. "I was having a well blasted on my farm, and my eyes were put out."

"If I was blind," remarked the other, shaking his head, "I wouldn't want to live, I suppose."

"Well, it has been this way with me," said Mr. Woodney with a smile. "All my life I have been one of the busiest fellows you ever saw—I love to work—I just love it!"

"Hear that now!" murmured the other.

"Yes, I delight in work, in business. When I was a merchant, and when I ran the lumber yard, and when I farmed—in fact, when I was in any pursuit, my life was filled with activity and, indeed, we have always been very happy. But somehow or other, nothing ever paid that I was in. I had to sell out my stock of goods below cost, and I couldn't make anything on lumber, I don't know why, and my neighbors used to say they couldn't understand it, either. The last thing I tried was farming. I put all my money in 160 acres, but it didn't do any good. Nobody made anything out of it except the man who held the mortgage. Just to show you, now, how curious my luck has been: we needed a well on the farm, and we bored all around for it till I thought the ground would be too perforated to hold together. So at last I said, 'We'll stick to this spot till we strike water if it's boiling hot'—you know the center of the earth is highly heated. But my eyes were put out in the blasting and the mortgage overdue. And I say, perhaps, after all, it was a good thing, Mr. Tumbleton. I can't go into any business, so little as we have—I'm not likely to lose much more."

"Hear that now!" muttered Mr. Tumbleton.

"Mother," interposed Mace, "here we come to the town."

"Do we?" said Mrs. Woodney vaguely, looking up a moment, then resuming her book. She was interested.

"That there first building on my right is the saloon," the driver explained, "and that on the left is my shack. All them boys and gals you see in the road air my chillun. Next to the saloon, you see, air the blacksmith shop, and next to it the store. You foller my side of the road with yore eye. Next to me is Worth Acres, he's the blacksmith; and by him air the three Miss Days, all of 'em ole maids, pore things, and then comes the house you've rented."

"Then the Days are our neighbors," said Mace, intensely interested. "What kind of people are they?"

"Well, they hain't got much property," said Mr. Tumbleton. Then lifting his voice he called to the driver of the first wagon, "Drive up to the side gate, A." Then, addressing the second driver, "You git in on the left hand, D."

"Your children," observed Mr. Woodney, "are arranged alphabetically, are they?"

"That's what they air, sir," chuckled the other, stroking his straw-colored whiskers. "A was the first child. His whole name is Adam, of course. D, he's the fourth child."

"David?" inquired Mr. Woodney.

"Not much; no sir! His name is Do-over with the hyphen."

"Do-over with the hyphen?" repeated the other.

"Yes, sir. You see if you leave out the hyphen, the letters all runs together till they don't mean nothing. And there's more meaning in Do-over's name than in any of the others, unless I may say the baby's."

But Mr. Tumbleton did not reach the baby's name, for the wagons had all stopped before the empty cottage. Mrs. Woodney closed her book and looked about in surprise at being recalled to the real world. All descended from the wagon, and Mace, taking her father's hand, led him towards the front gate. Her grandmother followed, exhausted by a ten-mile ride from the nearest railroad station, but presenting a front of unyielding dignity to any one who might be watching from door or window. Mrs. Woodney brought up the rear, book in hand.

Business Notes.

The Topical Leaflet contains the Midweek Prayer Meeting Topics for 1905 and sells for 25 cents per 100.

More than 2,000 song books in one week is a good record, but we are supplied with the best of such books, hence the trade.

Adnah, a tale of the time of Christ, is having a good run, for it is one of J. Breckenridge Ellis' best, and was never before offered for the price, $1.

Do not order wafers until you hear from us further, as we are determined to have them arrive in good order, or not to send. Watch these notes.

"Praises to the Prince" is generally acceptable as an all purpose song book, with its 224 pages, and in such binding as other books of like character, is having fine sale.

Have you seen the new catalogue with the miscellaneous books? Well, order anything you want from this house, and if it is on the market you shall have it sure, and at just the price offered by others.

The "Removal Sale" is not interfering with the regular trade, as the orders and business indicate, but seems to be helpful, as the thought of one reminds one of something else, so both are ordered at once.

"The Christian Use of the Tithe System."

This tract appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the form of a serial, and in response to a quite general demand it has now been put in a convenient tract form for wide distribution. Those who believe in the principle it teaches should aid in giving it wide circulation. The adoption of this regulative principle of giving, among us, would solve more problems, cure more evils, and give a greater impetus to all our worthy enterprises than any other one thing of which we can think. It seems to be the next great forward step among us. Brother Wharton has rendered the cause of Christ great service in his treatment of this subject, and we heartily commend his tract to all who wish to honor God with their substance. J. H. GARRISON.

"The Christian Use of the Tithe System" is a tract of 24 pages, dealing in a clear, forcible, convincing manner with the subject of proportionate giving. Price, 3 cents each; 25 cents per dozen; $1.50 per hundred.

Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

Robert Gordon, a story of the Mexican war, is one of our attractive books of good fiction, and has never been offered until put in our hands this winter for less than $1.50, but we are postpaying it for $1.00.

The Normal Instructor, Part 2, "The Christ," is used by more schools this year in connection with our lessons in John than we had thought, and at the price, 15 cents, should be in the hands of all teachers and all senior pupils.

The Hoffmann Pocket Record and Memorandum, of which see advertisement, has gone to many of our ministers this week, all of whom save one compliment it highly, he wanting an encyclopedia in connection with the booklet.

One agent sends us regular orders for the Garrison books, "Alone with God," "Heavenward Way," and "Half Hour Studies at the Cross." More helpful or devotional books have not been written, and none sold at the price, 75 cents.

The Midweek Prayer-Meeting booklets, the Daily Readings and the Topical Hand-Books are finally in the hands of those ordering them, and we thank those who so patiently waited on us, though we could not help the delay. All orders can now be filled promptly.

More than half of our Sunday-School Libraries have been sold, and the others will go out this week if possible. We mean to sell them, hence the reduction from $12.00 to $2.50 for library of forty cloth bound books, on the subjects interesting and helpful to Bible-school pupils.

We have the best New Testament for use in your schools that can be had for seven cents per copy, it being revised, too, and we have the same book in better binding at 15 cents and in large primer type at 35 cents, all postpaid, but when these are gone, the supply cannot be renewed at such prices.

One enthusiastic friend writes us, "I had two other Lesson Commentaries given me Christmas, but yours is the best of all." Over 400 pages, selling for only $1.00, handsomely bound in cloth, no "limp" business done here when it comes to a book that is good for life, and should be retained in one's library for years to come.

The list in our "Removal Sale" is corrected each week, the books sold being taken out, and others substituted, so that we advise an examination of the list each week. This is a "bargain sale" of which our friends are taking advantage, as they should, and we are sending out hundreds of books under its advantageous offers.

The Midweeks, better known as the Midweek Prayer Meeting Topics, are also a little late this year, but if our customers will wait on us a few days now, we promise to have all the orders filled in good time, and if all will be careful in ordering to specify just what they want, no mistake will be made. The price of the Midweek is 25 cents per dozen, $1.50 per 100.

We are sending out the Normal Instructor, Part II, "The Christ," to many who are using them in connection with our lessons in the Bible school for the next six months, on the life of Jesus. The International Lessons are confined to the Gospel of John, but the Instructor takes up the life of the Christ systematically, and thus supplies for you what is lacking in John's testimony, but you will also need the part on The Land, Part IV, and the one discussing the People, Part VII. These are offered at the nominal price of 15 cents each, or $1.50 by the dozen, prepaid, or the set of seven for $1.00.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Ho! For San Francisco.

FREE ROUND TRIP

Christian = Evangelist Special to the Great Convention.

August 17-24, 1905.

Thousands of Disciples will be delighted to take advantage of the splendid opportunity of visiting the Pacific Coast during the year of 1905, and attend the American Christian Missionary Convention during the month of August. To all such, who will do just a little work for the paper,

We Offer a Free Round Trip on the "Christian-Evangelist Special."

Do not fail to write us for particulars at once. The "Christian-Evangelist Special" will have the lowest rates that can be secured for the Pacific Coast. It will have parties leave Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Louisville, Kansas City and Omaha. There will be a special train by the way of the National Park and Portland. This will give all an opportunity to see this wonderland and behold the great curiosities of the National Park. It is said by thousands that there is nothing on the face of the earth that equals this grand scenery and these marvels of nature. This train will also stop at Portland, where all may visit the Exposition of the Great Northwest. From the great states of Washington and Oregon, we go south to the city of the "Golden Gate" to take in the first National Convention that has ever met west of the Rocky Mountains. The city of San Francisco, on its magnificent harbor, will be a great attraction itself, and when taken in connection with one of our great conventions in the month of August, it will be the opportunity of a lifetime to enjoy in a day what would not otherwise come to us in a year.

For others, who cannot take this trip by the National Park and Portland and spend a week with their hearts and emotions reveling in these mountain scenes of nature and art, we will have a more direct trip by way of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad and Salt Lake City. On this trip the Switzerland of America will be seen; the great Weber Canon, the Salt Lake Temple and all that nature has done for the Mountain Land of Colorado.

If you pay you shall have the lowest rates, the best service, and the most congenial company. We would prefer, however, to take you without a cent of cost to you for your transportation. The Christian-Evangelist brought a number of persons to the National Convention and the World's Fair this year, and paid their railroad fare by just a little work. Here is what one of these persons states in regard to the work for which he received free transportation and $20 for expenses after arrival.

"It took me parts of five days to secure the fifty-seven subscribers to the Christian-Evangelist. It was an easy matter to secure them." This was what a young preacher did in order to attend the convention and World's Fair in 1904. You can do this in 1905 to go to San Francisco.

Another states: "I am employed by Uncle Sam, and could only devote about three evenings a week from 6 to 8 p. m., and at prayer-meeting to the work of securing subscribers. I sent in my first list Aug. 16, and my last Sept. 20, in all 70 new subsbribers." This brother is an employe of "Uncle Sam," and did not lose an hour from his daily work. He received round trip transportation to St. Louis from an eastern city, and $30 in cash to pay his bills while attending the great convention and the World's Fair.

If you wish to take the trip to San Francisco you can do as well. Write us for particulars at once if you wish to go at our expense.

Current Events.

Revolution! We go to press early this and next week in view of the removal to our new building. Hence we can deal but briefly with the revolution which has broken out at the Russian capital. A few days ago, Father Gopon, a priest who had become leader and spokesman for the workmen, made it known to the officials that on Sunday his followers would march peaceably to the Winter Palace Square and expect the Czar, in person, to listen to their demands. If he did so, there would be no trouble. Sunday came and St. Petersburg became a shambles. The soldiers permitted the workmen to assemble in large numbers and then fired upon and charged them. The Czar is reported to have fled to Peterhof, on the gulf of Finland. The priest-leader was shot. The outcome of this day's work no one can tell. It is the direct result of the injustice and blindness of a group of autocrats, whose folly has been so manifest in their conduct of the war with Japan, and the leader of the Russian church is one of the blind leaders of the blind.

A Humiliating Spectacle. When a political boss can interfere with the carrying out of the will of the people or of the legislature in the election of a United States Senator by carrying eight or ten members of the legislature in his vest pocket, so to speak, it is time for the people to think about a new method of electing United States senators. If there is any good reason why the people should not vote directly for their United States senators, we have not seen it. Of course this change in the method of election of senators involves a change of the constitution but we believe that such a change would be in perfect harmony with the spirit of our government and would make impossible such a humiliating spectacle as we have seen in the Missouri legislature during the past week, and as often occurs in the election of United States senators by state legislatures. Two political bosses in New York have just decided who is to be elected as United States senator and the legislature is expected to ratify their decision, and yet we think we believe in democracy and self-government!

Law Enforcement. Something of a sensation has been created in St. Louis among the saloons and gamblers and their patrons by the word which has come from Governor Folk that the law concerning these institutions is to be strictly enforced. That is something to which these men have not been accustomed. They have learned to disregard it and have little or no respect for those whose duty it has been to enforce the law. But evidently we are entering a new order of things. Governor Folk has made some first-class appointments on the police board for St. Louis and has given them to understand that he expects them to use the police for law enforcement and for preserving public order and not to serve the interest of any political party. All this is very refreshing to the good people of St. Louis, and we should not wonder if it would prove to be gratifying to the police themselves who, we imagine, would have more respect for themselves and for the law if they could serve the legitimate purpose for which they have been appointed and for which they are paid. Governor Folk will hear no word of apology from the police board and police officials to the effect that the law cannot be enforced. He purposes to see that it is enforced, not in a spasmodic effort, but continuously. This will be an object lesson, not only to the law breakers, but to all the people of the state, that will have a most wholesome effect.

Louise Michel. The disturbances in Russia to-day are somewhat of the same nature as those that made the name of Louise Michel famous, viz., a revolt against the existing order of things. Thirty-four years after that woman came into prominence by the fiery zeal with which she embraced the revolutionary cause in France she has passed away at a time that recalls the fierce struggles in the streets of gay Paris. Well educated—for her mother was servant of a noble family—Louise went to Paris when about 18 years old and taught in a school. Taking an interest in the political and social conditions of the time, she was no admirer of Louis Napoleon or his methods. While her intense patriotism was manifested in the inspiration she gave to the defenders of Paris, when the Prussians had the city in their grip, it was in the terrible time of the Commune that she became known far and wide as a woman of extraordinary fervor and bravery. Leading in the work of destruction, fighting in the ranks with the insurgents, when order was restored she had to answer for her acts, was tried by court-martial and sentenced to death. The sentence was commuted to transportation for life to New Caledonia, from which penal settlement she escaped and made her way to London. In 1880 she was permitted to return to France, where she continued her revolutionary work through her writings. Joining the Boulangist movement led to some loss of her popularity, but she will always be respected for the sincerity and disinterestedness of her convictions and her readiness to face the consequences. Though hating religion, because she knew nothing but a corrupt religion, and ready to apply the torch for the destruction of society, she was kind to children and animals and self-sacrificing in behalf of the poor.

What About Polygamy? Is it not a little bit out of date to use an argument of the "pot calling the kettle black" kind in such a matter as the case of Senator Smoot, who is being examined at Washington? The Senator has found a Presbyterian gentleman who was willing to certify that Mormons who have plural wives and take care of them and their families are nicer than other men who have plural families and do not take care of them. Of course. But that is not the point at issue. And we do not question that there have been and may be to-day men in our national legislature whose moral life, if known, might not be above reproach. The same excuse was urged at the time Congressman Roberts was expelled from the House. Whether one course of life may be less indecent than another may be a matter of consideration at times, for purposes of comparison. But it is not relevant to the Smoot inquiry. The case against the Mormons is that they do not call a spade a spade, but with bold effrontery put forward as a virtue what other people call a sin. The Independent thinks that while Mr. Smoot will be admitted to the Senate, Mormon polygamy is doomed. The advocacy by the Independent of Mr. Smoot will not help to doom Mormonism. It may be true that, while quite a number of the older men in the church are still living polygamously and some have taken new polygamous wives within a few years, the practice is dying out. We believe it must die out in this country. Already an "American party" has sprung up, with adherents among the younger Mormons as well as the Gentiles. Senator Cannon defines it as striving to take from one man in the Mormon church the political authority which should belong to the masses and give it back to all of them. While that is a laudable aim it touches only remotely the question of present polygamy, which is the main objection against a representative of the Mormon church sitting in the national parliament.

Railroads and Rebates.

The question of freight rates and rebates is at last in a fair way to be considered as seriously as it deserves to be. The President has declared his position that there must be legislation looking to the maintenance of uniform rates. If Congress does not solve the problem at its present session it will get a chance to do so in a special session. And it is not a problem to be solved by any sudden burst of virtue or enthusiasm, but by a carefully studied avoidance of unconstitutional measures on the one hand and of complicated procedure on the other. The attitude of the railroads is stated by the Railway World which says (as quoted by the Literary Digest):

> At present it can not be denied that the regulation attempted by the Commission is very far from being effective. The procedure of the Commission is familiar. A complaint is brought to that body, evidence on both sides is heard, the Commission makes a decision, and orders that a given rate is unreasonable and that the railroads change that rate. As a rule, the railway manager, naturally confident of his own wisdom, refuses to obey. The Commission then goes to the Circuit Court and requests an order upon the railroad to comply with these demands. The court may grant this order, but an appeal is usually taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals, and from this court the case may go to the Supreme Court. It may happen, therefore, that several years elapse between the decision of the Commission upon the reasonableness of a given rate and the final decision of the court of last resort as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the rate in question. By the time the case has been decided conditions may have entirely changed, and the necessity for regulation may have disappeared.
> Now it can not be denied that this method of procedure is ludicrously absurd. Regulation of interstate rates by a commission may not be necessary, but regulation which does not regulate is worse than unnecessary; it is ridiculous. We question if the average railroad official would uphold the present system on any other ground than because it enables him to avoid compliance with orders of a body, supposedly clothed with authority to enforce compliance with its decision. . . . .
> The problem is how to secure just and reasonable transportation charges—reasonable to the shipper and just to the stockholder. The railroads have been working upon it for the past fifty years or more. They admit that they have not solved the problem. We believe they would welcome with rejoicing any assured solution, even if it were governmental control.

Governmental Support for Catholic Schools.

It is a settled policy of our federal government to appropriate no public money for the maintenance of sectarian schools. In former years mission schools among the Indians were supported in large part by public money, but this policy was abandoned by the department, in spite of protests from the Catholic authorities, and an act of congress, approved June 7, 1897, declared it "the settled policy of the government to make hereafter no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school."

Attention is being called by the Indian Rights Association to recent operations which appear to be at variance with the spirit, if not with the letter, of this statute. The Department of the Interior has made contracts with certain mission schools (Catholic with one exception) by which the latter are to receive certain sums from the trust funds belonging to the Indians and held by the government. The following contracts are reported on the authority of the Indian Rights Association:

Name of School.	Denominations.	No. of Pupils.	Tribe.	Rate per Annum.	Total for Year.	Agency.
St. Joseph	Catholic	170	Menominee	$108	$18,360	Green Bay.
St. Louis	Catholic	75	Osage	125	9,375	Osage.
St. John's	Catholic	65	Osage	125	8,125	Osage.
Immaculate Conc.	Catholic	65	Sioux	108	7,020	Crow Creek.
Holy Rosary	Catholic	200	Sioux	108	21,600	Pine Ridge
St. Francis	Catholic	250	Sioux	108	27,000	Rosebud.
St Labre's	Catholic	60	N. Cheyenne	108	6,480	Tongue River
St Mary's	Catholic	10	Quapaw	50	500	Quapaw.
Zoas B'd'g. School	Lutheran	40	Menominee	108	4,320	Green Bay.
Totals		935			$102,780

A Manifest Injustice.

It is true that a contract for the payment of money out of Indian trust funds is not equivalent to making an appropriation out of the public treasury, and to that extent there is no infringement of the act of 1897. But the policy is nevertheless, in our judgment, a most unhappy one. Here are certain Indian tribes whose undivided wealth is held in trust by the government. The money is to be expended for their benefit and much discretion is left to the Secretary of the Interior as to the manner of the expenditure. A certain part of the income from these funds is available for education. The question whether part of this education fund shall be turned over to sectarian schools is the same question on an Indian reservation as it is in any one of our cities, for the sectarian schools are no longer the only ones on the reservations. Catholics generally claim that their parochial schools in the cities should receive a percentage of the public school fund, the division being made according to the ratio which the number of children in the parochial schools bears to the total school population. But no community has seen fit to make such a division of its school fund. Yet the federal government, in dealing with Indian trust funds, now goes far beyond what the Catholics usually ask, and appropriates funds to the sectarian schools without reference to the percentage of children in those schools and far in excess of the amount which such a percentage would call for. One need not stop to dispute the claim that some of the Catholic schools have done a good service in Indian education. It may be true. But the time is past, if it ever existed, when the United States government needs to go into partnership with any denomination in order to run an efficient school on an Indian reservation or anywhere else. It will save an immense amount of trouble if the department will adhere rigidly to the letter and spirit of the law and appropriate no public money to sectarian schools.

Simultaneous Explosions.

One Sunday morning two years ago a good-sized earthquake happened in Illinois. Next Sunday a still bigger one is looked for, and it is needed. This will not be one of nature's explosions, for the mines have been laid by men. The explosion is one of temperance sentiment and the purpose is to arouse voters to the importance of the local option issue. When one thousand Illinois preachers talked on the subject two years ago there followed an avalanche of letters to the legislators. This year it is expected that from twice as many pulpits there will utter no uncertain sound on the temperance question and that the explosion will be so powerful that the men who have to be forced to enact good and righteous legislation will see the advisability of voting for a local option law.

Special telegram to the Christian-Evangelist.

The historic First Christian church at Louisville, Ky., will not be sold. Some time ago the congregation was offered $160,000 for their building by a New York corporation. By a majority vote of eighty the congregation on Lord's day decided to retain its present property; this was made unanimous. A splendid feeling prevailed.

Special telegram to the Christian-Evangelist.

Terre Haute, Ind., Jan. 22.—Two thousand at woman's meeting this afternoon in coliseum. More at night. 138 additions to date. One hundred singers. Interest growing.—Wilson and Hackleman.

Some Additional Features of the New Evangelism.

The reader must bear in mind that in our meaning of the phrase, the New Evangelism is the New Testament evangelism, to which the church is gradually returning. As religious reformers seeking to restore the essential features of New Testament Christianity the Disciples of Christ have led the way in returning to the evangelism of the New Testament. We have mentioned in former articles some of the features they have restored. It would be too much, we think, to say that we have reached the goal for which we are striving. There are some things of vital importance which do not, in our judgment, receive sufficient emphasis, as a rule, in our evangelistic and other religious work. We beg leave to mention some of these things in this article.

1. The Use of Prayer. One has only to read carefully the Acts of the Apostles, which is our great authority in evangelistic work, to see how important a place prayer held in the early church. It will be remembered that the Acts of Apostles, after announcing the ascent of our Lord, opens with an account of a prayer-meeting held in an upper chamber in Jerusalem. The apostles were present, besides many others, and it is said of them (Acts 1:14): "These all with one accord continued steadfastly in prayer, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren." It is probable that the greater part of the ten days in which they were tarrying in Jerusalem, waiting for the enduement of power, was spent in prayer. It was this preparation in prayer that made possible the wonderful events recorded in the second chapter of the Acts. When three thousand had been converted and added unto the nucleus, it is said: "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread, and the prayers." It was at the "Hour of Prayer" in the temple while Peter and John were on their way there, that the lame man was healed at the Beautiful Gate of the temple. In the fourth chapter, after they had been brought before the council for preaching Christ, and had been released, they gathered into a prayer-meeting. "And when they had prayed, the place was shaken wherein they were gathered together, and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and they spoke the word of God with boldness" (Acts 4:31).

When the apostles gave directions to appoint the first deacons to look after the material needs of the members, it was that they might "continue steadfastly in prayer, and in the ministry of the word." Stephen prayed while he was being stoned (Acts 7:59). It was while Cornelius was praying that he saw a vision and received directions to send to Joppa for Simon Peter, who was to show him the way of life. It was while Peter was praying in the city of Joppa that he saw a vision which prepared him to go with the messengers which Cornelius had sent (Acts 19:39; 11:5). When Peter was thrust into prison, "prayer was made earnestly of the church unto God for him," and Peter was released (Acts 12:5). Paul and Barnabas were sent away on their first missionary tour after the church had "fasted and prayed" (Acts 13:3).

But why continue these citations? The whole book is a record of victories won through prayer and the preaching of the word. How could it be otherwise? The strength is not within ourselves, but in God. We have free access to him for wisdom and guidance; for grace and strength. It is only as the evangelist, the pastor, the church, keep in touch with God, that they can have power with men and win them from death unto life. We doubt if there is sufficient reliance upon God, and sufficient use of prayer in all our evangelistic and other religious work. If our evangelistic services were oftener preceded by a season of prayer, and if there were daily special meetings for prayer alone, or prayer and testimony, in which all the members should join, it would add vastly to the spiritual power and fervor of many of our meetings.

This is the very time to teach young converts to pray, and many church members who have been unaccustomed to praying in public will do so under the fervor of a protracted meeting.

2. Recognition of the Holy Spirit. The lack of such recognition is a weakness in much of our evangelism. We know that sometimes in popular revivals conducted by others the Holy Spirit is preached more than Christ. We have reacted from that extreme to another. Just now this query has come to our desk: "Do you believe, from the knowledge which you have of the preaching among us, that the office of the Holy Spirit is duly recognized? Is it not a fact that the great majority of the members know almost nothing of the abiding presence of the Spirit? H. H. Hubbell, Leon, Iowa."

We are compelled to answer the first question in the negative, but we do so with the knowledge that there are many exceptions. We are glad to add, too, that there is a growing recognition among both preachers and members of the essential and vital work of the Holy Spirit in conversion and sanctification. In answer to the second question we would be willing to say that we think that a great majority of our members give insufficient recognition to the Holy Spirit, and inadequate evidence of his abiding presence. We must make a distinction, as Brother Hubbell does in an appended note, between the actual influence of the Holy Spirit upon any human life, and the recognition of such influence as coming from the Spirit. Many, no doubt, experience the fruit of the Spirit in their lives, while failing to recognize the Holy Spirit as its author. It would be far better, however, if there were a clear and intelligent understanding of the fact that all the spiritual life which we have is communicated to us from Christ through the agency of the Holy Spirit. This would lead us to more direct and specific prayer for the Holy Spirit to enlighten, comfort, strengthen and otherwise equip us for Christian service.

Again we have only to refer the reader to the Acts of Apostles. From the first chapter to the end it is a record of the guidance and power of the Holy Spirit operating through consecrated men who sought his aid in constant prayer, and in the strength which he gave preached the word with conquering power.

We have read the Acts of Apostles to good purpose in finding out the conditions of salvation on the human side. We need to read the book again and study it anew to learn what are the conditions on the divine side, of a great and successful evangelism. We wrong ourselves and impoverish the church by limiting the illuminating and guiding presence of the Holy Spirit to the apostles and to the early church. He is as much present in the church to-day as he was in the first century, and we have only to open our minds and hearts to his incoming, preparing the way for him by putting away all known sin and offering ourselves to his service, to be "filled with the Spirit," and fitted for the work which he has for us to do.

The church will never send forth her greatest evangelists who will shake whole states and nations with the power of a great spiritual revival movement, until she recognizes, on the one hand, the power of prayer and the agency of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of sinners and in the sanctification of Christians, and on the other, returns to the apostolic method of directing inquiring penitents into the way of salvation. The world is waiting for a type of evangelists that combines these qualifications.

An agent of the Christian-Evangelist tells of a minister, of whom one of his members said: "To my knowledge, he has not said a word about religious papers, or about missionary work, during the three years he has been preaching for us." That is hard on the preacher, it is true, but what can be said of a congregation that will retain, as its pastor, for three years, a preacher who has no better understanding of his high calling than to utterly ignore the prime work of the church—spreading the gospel—and the claims of our religious journals, which are educating the churches on all these questions of general interest! It seems to be a case of "like priest, like people." Such churches need a sermon from the text: "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

A Mutual Need.

Every Man Needs Christ: Christ Needs Every Man.

In the above statement are the two facts which constitute the two unanswerable reasons why every man should be a Christian. If they be facts indeed, and not mere fancies, then every man who resists the claims of Christ does so not only against his best interests but against his own highest reason, and the public good. Let us look these facts honestly in the face until we recognize them as facts and perceive their meaning and their bearing on our lives. Suffer us to speak to you, directly.

1. You need Christ. Do you ask why? Because Christ possesses, and is able and willing to communicate to you, that which you lack in order to your wholeness or completeness. "In him ye are complete."

(1) You are ignorant concerning the profoundest questions of life until Christ instructs you. You do not know God until Christ reveals him to you. You cannot understand God's attitude toward the sinner, and what his purposes concerning man are until you learn them from Christ. You do not even know what man is as God intends him to be until you come to know Christ. You do not know how to be reconciled to God and be at peace with him except as Christ shows you. Without Christ you have no perfect ideal of life and no certain knowledge of life beyond the grave. You need Christ as Teacher to illumine your darkened understanding on all these great problems.

(2) You are sinful, and need One who can save you from sin, the wages of which is death. "There is no other name given under heaven or among men whereby you can be saved," but the name of Christ. He can save you from the love, the guilt, and the practice of sin. "He is able to save to the uttermost all that will come to God through him." There is no peace for you here or hereafter without this salvation in and through Christ. Nor can you possibly fulfill your mission in this life and realize the destiny for which God has created you, without Christ.

(3) You are weak, and need the strength which Christ gives to those who commit themselves to him. You need his power to uphold you in time of temptation and peril. You need his grace to comfort you in times of sorrow and bereavement. You need his strong right arm to uphold you when you pass through the valley and shadow of death. You need his omnipotence to clothe you with an immortal body and make you victor over death. If you need these things you need Christ through whom alone you can secure them.

(4) You need life, whereof our nerves are scant. Christ came that we "might have life, and that more abundantly." He will communicate to you fulness and richness of life—a life that knows no death, being one with the life of God. If you love life, why not accept it at Christ's hands?

2. Christ needs you. He has undertaken a stupendous enterprise—the redemption of this world from sin and death. He is seeking to extend the kingdom of God, which is the kingdom of righteousness, of joy in the Holy Spirit, and of peace, all over this earth. His plan is to do this work through human agency. For this purpose he calls men into fellowship with himself, equips them with his grace and truth, fills them with his Spirit, and sends them forth to serve him in their several spheres of life. No two persons are exactly alike. He has a work for each one. He has something for you to do which you alone can do. He needs you to help him minister to the manifold needs of the world. He is calling you, even now, to this service. There are the hungry to feed, the naked to clothe, the widow and the orphan to care for, the ignorant to instruct, the erring ones to reclaim, the sorrowing ones to comfort, the sick to be ministered unto, and the discouraged and downcast to be cheered and strengthened." Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these," said Jesus, "ye did it unto me."

Since you need Christ and he needs you, why not enter into fellowship with him, that he may save you, and you may serve him? Why not?

Questions and Answers.

Where in Luther's writing can I find the quotation, "Call yourselves not Lutherans but Christians. I am but a bag of dust"? B.

We cannot give the information. Perhaps some of our readers can, and will send the same to us that we may forward it to our querist.

What is the difference between the Missionary Baptists and the Disciples of Christ?
A Reader.

That is one of the hardest questions you could ask us, because there are Missionary Baptists and Missionary Baptists, and there are also Disciples of Christ and Disciples of Christ. We could pick out a large number from each body between whom there would be very little difference except the name. For a comparison of their positions see editorial in last week's Christian-Evangelist.

1. What kind of music is the most biblical?
2. What kind of choir is the more evangelical—quartette or chorus?
3. Should it be made up of the same church if it has them, or from other churches? M.

1. That which makes melody in the heart to the Lord.

2. A converted choir, we should say, whether quartette or chorus depends. The whole congregation is preferable.

3. Members of the same church, other things being equal, but a devout singer of any church is preferable to an irreverent, irreligious person, though he or she have the voice of a nightingale.

What is the meaning of the clause, "I make peace, and create evil," in Isaiah 45:7?
Saybrook, Ill. T. A. Lindenmeyer.

We take it that physical evil, and not moral evil, is referred to. The sufferings, trials, adversities and afflictions of life were called evils by the Old Testament writers. An example of this is found in Psalms 90:15:

"Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us,"
"And the years wherein we have seen evil."

Many similar passages might be quoted. The meaning of the passage is that we are not to attribute the good and the evil, the light and the darkness, to different creative sources, as the pagans were wont to do, but to recognize them all as coming through a system of universal law or providence, of which Jehovah is the source.

Editor's Easy Chair.

What interpretation does the average Christian give to the words of Jesus: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God"? Is it not generally regarded as a mere chronological order? But the words mean something vastly more than this. They mean that the kingdom of God is to be the controlling and dominating influence of our lives. They mean that the choice of our calling in life, and the daily choices between the less and the greater good, between our higher and lower needs, are to be made subservient to the interests of the kingdom of God. If this be the meaning of Jesus, its recognition as such by those who acknowledge him as Lord, and its practical observance, would work a revolution in our church life and in all social and moral reforms. We have given no little attention to the question of how to become citizens of the kingdom of God, but have we duly considered what is involved in such citizenship? We complain, and rightly, of the neglect of the duties of citizenship on the part of citizens of the state, who, enjoying the right of suffrage in a free government, often fail to exercise that right in the interest of such government. But is there not greater room for complaint on the part of King Jesus that those who call him Lord do not those things which he commands them, and neglect their duties and prerogatives as citizens of his kingdom? We lay this question upon the hearts of our readers. Especially would we lay it upon the hearts and consciences of preachers and teachers among us that they seek to impress upon the minds and hearts of their members the duties and obligations of citizenship in the kingdom of God.

We were reading this morning the words of Christ to the Jews, where he said: "Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you doeth the law." What an astounding statement this must have been to the Scribes and Pharisees! Did they not pride themselves on the fidelity with which they observed the Mosaic law? And Jesus himself bears witness to the fact that they were zealous in observing its external and ritualistic requirements. But this was not obedience to the law as Jesus viewed it. The law inculcated love to God and to one's neighbor, and required justice and mercy and humility before God. These were the weightier matters of the law which they neglected. They supposed this superficial observance of ritualistic details and external ordinances was all the righteousness that was required of them, but Jesus said to them, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of God." Their religion was too outward, too formal, too mechanical, too legalistic, to meet the demands of the kingdom of God. Is there not constant danger lest we substitute outward conformity to rules and ordinances for that vital godliness which alone can satisfy the demands of Christ? You have been baptized? That is well; but are you living then as one who has died to sin and has risen to walk in newness of life? You come weekly to the Lord's table? That is well; but do you show forth his death, and your gratitude therefor, in your daily walk and conversation? You sing and pray in the public worship? That is well; but does your heart join with your lips in these forms of public worship? If not, beloved, then all your conformity to the externals of religion is in vain, and ye are yet lacking in that which is vital to the religion of Christ.

About this season of the year the migratory instinct begins to assert itself, if not before, and its index finger points southward to sunny glades and Italian skies where bloom the orange and the pomelo, where is seen the glint of sun-lit waters, and where is heard the song of the mocking-bird. The birds felt this instinct long ago and have taken up their winter abodes with their southern kinsmen without the slightest feeling of sectionalism, except a partiality for the sunnier clime. No doubt many of us would have gone south with the birds if we had been as care-free as they, but we have been hindered by sundry tasks and obligations which have held us to the colder zone. Even now, in the case of the Easy Chair, there are opposing influences at work, but as we long since learned the art of carrying our editorial office in our grip, the migratory impulse is likely to have its way. Winter we like, and summer we like; but when they come on alternate days, as they often do in our clime, in February and March, we enjoy neither. Fickleness in weather is no more desirable than in love, politics or religion. During the civil war the "border states," as they were called, were the scenes of many tragedies and hardships caused by the possession of the country alternately by the opposing armies. There are "border states" in weather, also, where, at certain seasons of the year, winter and summer contend for the mastery, with most unpleasant results to the people. Hence this southerly instinct.

We shall try to take all our readers along with us on our southern trip in the only way that it is possible for us to do so. The Easy Chair cannot furnish transportation for its large circle of readers, but as far as possible it will be eyes and ears for them, and seek to describe and interpret whatever of interest may come within the range of its observation. That will save them the expense and weariness of travel, and we trust will carry some of the atmosphere of the southland into the snow and ice-bound regions where many of its readers abide. It has been our happy privilege for many years to have our readers accompany us, in this way, in our travels about the country hither and thither, and they have been kind enough to express their appreciation of these journeys with us, and their enjoyment at sharing in whatever scenes of beauty, or incidents of interest, we have witnessed in these travels. On our part, we carry with us this sense of comradeship with our readers whose welfare is seldom absent from our thoughts. For whether at home or abroad; on land or on sea; at rest or at work; in joy or in sorrow; in conflict or at peace, there is but one thing for which we have to live, and that is the advancement of the Messiah's kingdom, and especially in promoting the spiritual welfare of those with whom we have been providentially placed in the relationship of editor and reader. We have no higher ambition than to build up the kingdom of God in our readers, and assist in extending its dominion throughout the world. Every question, therefore, must be decided in the light of that supreme purpose.

Notes and Comments.

A Universalist friend writes:

> You give a glorious idea of the Supreme Being in your articles on the New Evangelism, but you leave us in doubt about his sovereignty; and as to whether he ever had any plans or purposes; and if his plan and purpose to save the race was conditional, you fail to give your readers any satisfaction that the fulfilling of his conditions might not be a failure after all.

There is no question about God's sovereignty nor about his gracious plans and purposes concerning men. Nor is there any doubt that his purpose to save men is necessarily conditioned on men's willingness to be saved. This grows out of the fact that he created man in his own image—a free, self-determining being—with the power to choose the right or the wrong. God's plans will not prove a failure. Some people prove a failure by failing to fall in with the purposes of God, but his purposes go right on to their sublime consummation.

Our correspondent continues:

> I know you take the ground that man is a free agent, and that God has given him freedom enough to incur a doom of eternal damnation on himself after he leaves this world, but robs him of all freedom to save himself as soon as he dies.

After the manner of those who call themselves "liberal" and advanced in their thought, our friend is striking a blow at outgrown and long-abandoned ideas. Men do not have to wait until they die to suffer condemnation on account of their sins, nor to enjoy salvation from sin. The doom of punishment does not wait until the sinner "leaves this world." Nor is it a question as to a man's "freedom to save himself" after death. It is then, as now—so we believe—a question of his willingness to repent and turn to God. Our friend and his class of thinkers ignore the tendency in man to fixedness in moral character. It is a fearful thing, and fraught with fearful consequences, to resist God and harden one's heart in wrongdoing. We may well believe that God's gracious desire to save men would cause him, at any time and in any world, to welcome a penitent who seeks his pardon and grace; but who can affirm with any kind of confidence that one who has resisted God here, and who has formed the habit of resistance, will, after death, repent and turn to God? That is just where Universalism breaks down. It is far better to urge men to repent now than to comfort them with a hope that may never be realized.

The Canadian Baptist quotes from The Outlook the following:

> "At present the only thing a person can be sure of in going to a Congregational church is that the order of service will be different from that of any other Congregational church he ever attended."

Commenting on this remark of The Outlook, the Canadian Baptist adds:

> "And we may add that in this regard the Congregationalists have some near relatives who are afflicted in a similar way. Perhaps the introduction of the new hymnal, which is doubtless to become the commonly used hymn book in the Baptist churches of Canada, will help us towards an order of service that may find a wide use among us."

Apropos to the above, we would remark that, when our new hymnal comes out and is adopted by the churches, with its excellent order of service, the effect, no doubt, will be to produce greater uniformity in worship among our churches, and to greatly enrich the service.

A Present Day Problem In Missions

By Edwin Munsell Bliss, D.D.,

Editor "Encyclopedia of Missions," etc.

Some years since, in conversation with a young Armenian in Constantinople, I urged upon him the advantage, the necessity, of reading, if he wished to develop a strong, well-rounded Christian character. He assented most cordially, and then said that he had read everything that came at all within his comprehension, as a clerk and not a student, that the board had published. Further investigation showed that the supply of such reading as would help such a man was miserably meagre. There were commentaries, Bible dictionaries, hymn books, Sunday-school lesson helps, all invaluable and essential, but of that type of book which has done so much for Americans, there was practically nothing. That the situation has not materially changed is evidenced by a recent most earnest appeal from a missionary in Asia Minor for just the kind of a book that this Constantinople clerk wanted.

Since that time I have become convinced that the trouble is not surface or accidental but fundamental. What is true of those missions of the American Board is true in a greater or less degree of other missions of that board and of every missionary board of whatever denomination or country. So far as I can learn there is not a single missionary society that begins to supply the need in this respect. Something is being done by the tract societies of England and America and the local organizations, especially in India, China and Japan. A few men, as Dr. John Murdock, of Madras, Dr. Timothy Richard, of China, have done noble service, but Dr. Richard's wish is less to meet this need than the call from awakening China just coming to a realization of the vast world of thought outside the line of Confucian ethics. Without derogating in the slightest from the meed of praise due to these leaders, it must still be said that they fail entirely to furnish a satisfactory solution for what is perhaps the most serious problem facing foreign missions to-day.

That problem is no longer the "open door." The doors are wide open on every hand. With the exception of Tibet, Afghanistan, and the Belgian Congo State there is not a country in which the delivery of the gospel message is not merely feasible but a constant fact. It is not the securing of an audience. It is, indeed, no more true to-day than it ever has been that the great masses of Asia and Africa are hungering and thirsting for Christianity. The millennium has not yet dawned. Yet nowhere is it difficult to gather a company of those willing to hear, while many, everywhere, are eager to know of Christ. The great problem of to-day on the mission field is the development of the native church, so that it shall become not merely a self-supporting and self-governing church, but an aggressive agency for the conversion of the millions who, as yet, have barely heard that there is a gospel message.

This phrase, however, "development of the native church," is often very greatly misunderstood, or perhaps better, is too limited in its scope. In the early history of every mission enterprise the chief effort in this line has been the raising up of leaders, including preachers, teachers, evangelists, who would devote themselves chiefly if not entirely to Christian work. The prime aim of schools was definitely stated to be the education of a Christian ministry. Every convert was looked upon as a possible candidate for some branch of this service. If promising, he was encouraged, if not, allowed to drop. As the years went by it became apparent that this policy was shortsighted and efforts were made to remedy the evil and provide for a wider training. It is always difficult, however, to alter a general policy, and in this case certain habits of expenditure had been formed which held the missions as in an iron grasp.

On the mission field, as elsewhere, it is often money that talks with the loudest and most strident tones. It may be that all, without exception, will agree that a certain action is wise, but if the wherewithal for acting is not to be had the act fails.

In the development of mission administration, certain things easily and inevitably acquired the "right of way." They must be provided for, whatever else failed. There were the rentals of chapels, schools, dwellings, etc.; the salaries of employes, whether foreign missionary or native pastor, teacher or colporteur; certain incidental expenses for traveling, and the general conduct of the increasingly complicated system of mission enterprise. To drop off or diminish any one of these meant disarrangement of other departments of work, and a loss greater in proportion than appeared on the surface. It became thus the custom to hold a certain portion of the appropriations as inalienable and to gather all the advisables, advantageous, useful, etc., into one class, to be provided for by the balance. Into this category came the provision of literature and as can easily be seen; it became a very uncertain quantity. Certain publications, like certain salaries, began to assume a right of way. Periodicals must appear on time; if there were to be ministers, there must be commentaries; Sunday-schools could not exist without lesson helps. So a process of selection went on and the simple reader, the one who had no claim beyond the needs of his own mind and heart, was shoved to the wall and left to develop as best he might.

The result has been that while there has been, as a rule, good leadership in the native church, there has not been equally good following. The lay element, which in this country has come to hold so prominent and efficient a place in church work, has largely been lacking. Not that there have been no instances of lay leadership and lay influence, but the chasm between the leaders and the led has not been lessened as it ought to be if the church as a whole is to be an aggressive power in the community or the nation. It is simply impossible to take a man out of a rut of thought and life and put him into the broader relations of Christianity and have him preserve his balance and grow in power unless his mind is fed. To expect men of acute perceptions, as Orientals always are, to get all the intellectual stimulus they need from a Sunday sermon or a mid-week prayer-meeting is nonsense. Let the reader of this article look over his own tables and book-shelves and imagine them denuded of every book, paper and periodical that ministers to the intellectual and spiritual life, and he will then be able to realize the condition of the great majority of Christians on the mission field. People complain of the slow progress of mission work. The complaint is not well founded. In truth it is rapid. But it might be much more rapid, and would be if the Christians at home would furnish the means for feeding the thought-life of these mission lands.

As a man thinketh in his heart so is he. It is not only the head, it is the heart as well that controls the life. Of all the movements of to-day none is more remarkable than that toward reading. The demand for books everywhere, in the old world as well as the new, is enormous. It is being supplied to-day very largely by unscrupulous publishers, some of them of our own land. If the Christian church does not awake to the opportunity and the need, it will find soon that the worst sort of thinking has found a lodgement in the hearts of those who have turned from the darkness of other religions, but are yet in the twilight of Christian faith. Never was there a time when the need was so urgent. From India, from China, from Japan, from Turkey, come the most earnest appeals. The supplies from the tract societies are pitiable in their meagerness. The appropriations by the missionary boards are ridiculously small in comparison with the need. What is needed is a broader vision, a more intelligent sympathy, a more generous giving. One thing more. We are too apt to gauge missionary success by tables of statistics; and one thing that has hindered progress in this line is the difficulty of tabulating its results. Hence, we need a more vigorous faith: giving for the need, not for our gratification and sight.

The City the Goal*

By Lloyd Darsie

II.

The history of our city work will show a remarkable and satisfactory growth wherever our brethren have organized and attempted in any proper and dignified sense "the conquest of the city." We have made a demonstration in these cities. We have demonstrated the wisdom, the sanity, the sagacity of organized effort in the cities. We have earned the confidence and respect of all sagacious and enterprising business men. Our efforts in the past fifteen years have been largely experimental. We are passing from that stage.

Our experience will warrant us in making larger investment. The measure of success attained in Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Chicago and Indianapolis should call out splendid city evangelization funds that would make possible continuous and successful enlargement. Here is a fertile field for cultivation. Here is a work that will yield vast returns. The city offers an inviting field for investment. The rural merchant sets his face toward the city because it offers him unlimited opportunities; he expects to grow with the growing city. His prosperity will be in proportion to the city's increase in population and material prosperity. Having gained a foothold, the city will eventually make him wealthy. The church will have an equal opportunity.

This is the history of great city churches. The great and influential churches of every city are the organizations with long years behind them. The Episcopal church in New York City enjoys a vast income. Its educational and benevolent institutions are almost unrivaled. It enjoys power and prestige and patronage. Why? Because long ago they made a heavy investment in the estate of Father Knickerbocker. "To him that hath shall be given," is a great metropolitan principle. The realty of the Episcopal church has quadrupled. Therefore they possess the land. The First M. E. church of Cleveland will enter this coming winter the finest auditorium in the Forest City. It will be paid for, at a cost of $200,000, and then the church will have an endowment fund of $300,000. Why? Because thirty years ago they purchased a lot for $10,000 and sold it last year for $500,000. Do you see the point? Do you appreciate the opportunity?

The Roman Catholic church enjoys a commanding position in every great American city. They have magnificent institutions, splendidly endowed. They tower over us and above us. Why? Because they believe in the city and appreciate its importance. They plan a campaign covering centuries. They enter a city and drive down their stakes in the strategic centers. They acquire large tracts of real estate. They make splendid investments. They have faith, and faith is always rewarded.

Brethren, is it not time for us to take a large view of the city? Shall we repeat in the west the mistakes of our fathers? As we look upon the small but swiftly growing cities of the great west, shall we not say, "Lord, increase our faith"? Help us to appreciate our opportunity! Give us a little common sense!! Do you know that $100 invested now, in any western city, will be worth $1,000 or $10,000 in the next decade? If we fail to see the point, if we fail to grasp the situation, we will forfeit our right to influence and dominate the imperial centers of the future. Other religious bodies will go before us in the conquest of the cities and we shall be only spectators, not participators. Do you business men see that? Do you believe it? Do you feel it? Here!! Where feeling amounts to something? Or have we reached that condition described by the apostle as "being past feeling"? If so, our history is written, our tale is already told. We count ourselves unworthy to carry on and complete the greatest religious movement of the nineteenth century.

Brethren! Do we believe in our plea? Have we a great mission to the religious world? Are we a chosen people? How are these questions to be answered? Vulgarly speaking, "money talks," and it doesn't talk very loudly. Gauged by our investment in the cities, our faith is not larger than a grain of mustard seed. It is wholly inadequate. It is almost insignificant in comparison with our material growth and prosperity. It is almost humiliating, when contrasted with the investments of other religions bodies.

Our splendid plea, our simple faith, our primitive order must be accompanied by primitive faith, by primitive liberality, by primitive sacrifice. In the face of great opportunities we must show business sense and sagacity. "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at its flood, leads on to fortune. Omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries. On such a full sea we are now afloat and we must take the current when it serves or lose our ventures." And if this does not describe our puny and half hearted efforts to take the cities I do not know what does.

The day of small things for the city is passing. We have divine authority and precedent for asking a campaign and an investment that will be proportionate to our opportunity. Why should city evangelization societies not be endowed? Why should the church extension society not develop local city evangelization funds after the named fund idea? Why should our wealthy members not bestow a portion of that wealth upon the community from which it came? Why should local interest and local pride not crystallize in gifts and bequests that will bestow upon cities where local fortunes have been made, a permanent and continuous blessing? Such an appeal would call out money that would not be given for any other purpose and would guarantee a sufficient annual income to insure a campaign commensurate with the opportunity. The Disciples of Christ need to-day "the vision that disturbs contentment." The vision of great and growing and imperial cities that will summon us to our greater conquests. The vision that filled the soul of Paul as he looked on imperial Rome. The eternal city was the goal of his ambition. Rome sat on her seven hills and ruled the world. To conquer Rome was to conquer the world. The invincible purpose of the apostle was to seize this strategic center, to pre-empt this zone of power, to occupy this focus of influence for the church of the Living God. Often baffled or "prevented," he persevered in his determination to win this coveted point. He was not disobedient to his heavenly vision. He entered Rome as an ambassador in chains. He stood before the Cæsars. He made his defense. He delivered his message. He was not ashamed of the gospel. The imperial city did not appall him. His faith anticipated victory. The story is soon told. The all-conquering short sword that won world-wide victories for the iron empire fell from nerveless fingers when it clashed with the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.

The banner of the cross was lifted above the golden eagles of the legions and the throne of the Cæsars became the throne of our Lord and his Christ. Thus the world's greatest city was conquered. Oh, for such a vision and such a victory in the imperial and regnant cities of our day! We need a new crusade; a new enthusiasm for the recovery of the city. To wrest it from the dominions of Satan. To redeem it from iniquity. To make it a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Such a quest should call out the zeal and fervor and sacrifice that made possible the ancient crusades for the recovery of Jerusalem from the infidel. Recall that historic scene when Urban, then on the throne of the universal church, addressed an assembly wherein were gathered the highest and most chivalrous sons of France. The plain speech of an old man shook Europe to the center, and flung hundreds of thousands of the world's best men across a continent into Asia, a crusade of flame and fire and martyrdom on a hundred fields of blood for the mere sepulchre of the Lord.

The President's Reception

By F. D. Power

Once a year at least I go to the other end of the avenue and pay my respects to the man in the White House. Usually I take advantage of the Annual Diplomatic reception, I suppose because he always invites me to that function. The President has his own way of sending these invitations. They never go by mail but by messenger. One came to me last week announcing that he wished to see me, his invitation is a command, and so I put on my best clothes and went. It was Thursday evening and that is the prayer-meeting evening in Washington, and I could not get off until nine o'clock, but these levees are from nine to ten thirty. Three of them are given each season—one to the Diplomats, another to the members of Congress, and the third in honor of the Army and Navy. Between two and three thousand invitations are sent out. The Diplomatic reception is supposed to be the most brilliant.

An old resident sees many changes. My first was in Grant's second administration. That is just thirty years ago. In the good old days there was something to eat; now that most excellent custom has passed into "inocuous desuetude." Three times during the McKinley administration I had the privilege of "breaking bread" with the Chief Magistrate, but those were special and not general receptions. I have never sampled Mrs. Roosevelt's cooking. The changes one notices, however, are marked in other respects. The first lady of the land no longer greets the guests. Mrs. Hayes, Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Cleveland were always warm and hearty in their greetings and shook hands with all the people. Now the President alone does the handshaking; the ladies hold bouquets and bow. It does not seem a bit cordial. Mrs. McKinley could not shake hands with her guests. She was always seated, but was presented, and bowed and smiled most graciously. Mrs. Roosevelt has her place next to the President, and on the right, the ladies of the cabinet, but as far as the visitor is concerned, a row of dummies would answer the same purpose. Then the old timer observes the changes in the procession. The leading characters that once figured here have passed on. Possibly he would say the new faces and forms are not so striking and impressive, and the Executive Mansion itself has been greatly altered. We no longer enter by the main door, but by the long wing that looks all the world like a railroad shed. It is an improvement, as the guests are under cover, and not exposed to the elements as they used to be, and the facilities for disposing of one's wraps are much better. Another thing is the unusual array of police officers and secret service men. Forty-five policemen is the regular detail for the White House now, and on these occasions the force is greatly increased. One passes under the scrutiny of these sleuths and bobbies every few feet of the toilsome way to the presence of Mr. Roosevelt. They stand on either side of the line and keep it moving, and are on the alert to note anything unusual in the visitor.

The first of the evening "drawing rooms" for 1905 was notable. With the diplomatic corps as the honored body, and the presence of so many persons whose names are synonymous with the greatest wealth in the country, and a liberal number whose brains have been their only weapon, and the quality for which they are most envied; with notabilities of all sorts and kinds, the show could not fail to be interesting. The foreigners were headed by the Russian Ambassador and Countess Cassini and members of the embassy staff, both father and daughter wearing recent jeweled decorations sent by the Czar. They were oriental in their magnificence, these diplomats. Their court dresses are gorgeous enough to turn Miles and Corbin green with envy. If there is any place left for a jewel or an order, or a button, or a bit of gold braid the average looker on in Venice could not find it; and such hats and feathers, and boots and even spurs! It is great.

Indeed here is the place to see good clothes. The clothed animal is there in his glory. Professor Teufelsdrockh could revel in his observations in this well-dressed assembly. "Society is founded upon cloth," as he declares. "In this one pregnant subject of clothes, rightly understood, is included all that men have thought, dreamed, done, and been; the whole external universe and what it holds is but clothing; and the essence of all science lies in the philosophy of clothes." Man's earthly interests "are all hooked and buttoned together and held up by clothes." I guess Thomas Carlyle is right about it, and here is evident the moral, political, and religious influence of clothes. Does not the world think so? Why, the first item in every newspaper report of this function is not the President, nor the Ambassadors of foreign powers, but Mrs. Roosevelt's "gown." It exemplified the return to last century's fashions. It was of soft yellow silk, skirt trimmed down the seams with streamers of dark brown and black velvet ribbon, to the ends of which above the hem were tied clusters of large flowers; and on the waist white lace was festooned gracefully. What next? Why Mrs. Shaw's gown of white lace and silk; and next, Mrs. Taft's gown of mauve crepe and lace; and next, Mrs. Morton's gown of white lace; and next Mrs. Wynne's gown, white crepe and lace with pink rosebuds down the seams; and then Mrs. Hitchcock's mauve chiffon velvet and point lace; and Mrs. Metcalf's white lace, etc., etc., etc., and then the jewels. To see them sparkle and blaze in the electric lights reminded one of some scenes on "the Pike." Here was Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, whose "hair and corsage fairly blazed with diamonds." Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. William R. Hearst, Mrs. George Vanderbilt, Mrs. Twombly, Mrs. Draper and the rest—one with superb pearls, "several long strings of them about her neck and a diamond tiara tipped with large pear-shaped pearls." Mrs. Dewey, with a triple-pointed necklace of large solitaires and a diamond flower aigrette; and Baroness von Tuyll with diamond and ruby necklace and coronet; and Mme. van Swinderen, the bride of the diplomatic circle, with beautiful tiara of diamonds. They are human chandeliers. They loom up like automobile headlights through a fog. Then comes a long list of the elect women whose principal attraction seemed to be their gowns. Three-fourths of the whole account is a story of the duds. Clotha Virumque Cano. The tailor or the jeweler after all, and not the strenuous man, seems first. The "simple life" is thrown to the winds. The "Dandiacal body" ranks all dignities. The sartorial artist on crossed legs is the world's hierophant and hierarch. The "Breeches-Maker to his Majesty" has a right to the motto, "Sic itur ad astra."

But what of the President? After a half hour's journey in the line where one has a delightful opportunity to enjoy the music and flowers and decorations, and to study his fellow mortals, passing through several halls and rooms, and up a long stairway, he finally reaches the state dining room and then the red room where "single file" is the order, and next he comes to the door of the blue room. An officer in full uniform asks, "Your name!" and then turns to the President and repeats it. "I am happy to receive you, Mr. Smith," is the next word as the President grasps vigorously your hand and you catch the gleam of his ivories. You are apt to think with Mr. Morley; when asked what were the two things which impressed him most in the states on his recent visit, he answered, "Niagara and the President. Both are great natural forces, and both give you the impression of going on forever." Then, in a moment, as if "shooting the chute," you pass the line of grand figures holding bouquets, and mingle among the hoi polloi in the gorgeous east room. Here you can see the world and his wife. If you are a plain Disciple with a big D, here are Judge and Mrs. Crumpacker; or the tall figure

Some Things About Christian Union

By N. J. Aylsworth

1. Why is Christian union a duty? The common answer is that disunion weakens our plea with the unconverted; wastes our resources and effort —in a word, interferes with the church's great work in converting the world. In other words, disunion is exceedingly bad policy. All this is true, wofully true, but there is a deeper reason. Christianity itself is union. It is in its very essence spiritual cohesion. It is love, and love means union just as hatred means disunion. To be a bird is to fly; to be a Christian is to be united to other Christians. Two drops of water in contact coalesce, not because it is good policy or duty to do so, but because they are water. Frozen into icicles, they do not unite; but —icicles are not water; and frozen Christians are not Christians. Disunion from lack of the union spirit is disunion from lack of Christianity; disunion from some misunderstanding is a misfortune, which, however, the union spirit will ultimately find a way to overcome. Christian union is a duty because Christianity is a duty.

2. How shall we preach union? Shall we wage war on denominationalism? Shall we fiercely denounce disunion? Shall we hold debates on points of difference? Shall we endeavor to conquer union? To do these things is to forget where we are. A pupil who is striving to learn does not need the ferule, nor even a scolding. The evangelical peoples about us desire union and are seeking its accomplishment. They are making repeated efforts looking to that end, and they have been the originators of such co-operative steps as union Sunday-school work, Y. M. C. A., Christian Endeavor, etc. They are the leaders in union work. A hostile or combative attitude toward them under such circumstances is not only misplaced, it is distinctly harmful and tends to retard the coming of Christian union. So long as we deal combatively with questions of difference, so long they will remain battle-grounds, and just so long there will be battle. Combat keeps these differences alive. Old battle wounds must be healed in a loving forgetfulness before Christian union is possible. Grass must grow over that age-long battlefield, baptism, before it will cease to present an insuperable barrier to union. It can hardly be mentioned now without raising a combative—that is, a divisive—spirit. Kind, loving, humble presentation of what we believe to be the truth will always be in place, and nothing else is now in place. Our brethren of other folds need help, not blows. Combat is wretchedly out of place; it is even fatuous at this o'clock of the union movement.

3. Let us be sure that we have the union spirit. How shall we know that we have this? By preaching much upon union? By making it prominent in our plea and earnestly desiring the success of that plea? If what we mean is that other peoples shall disband and join us, or that they shall come over to our position, this may come from a union spirit, but it may rise no higher than proselytism. Bloody Mary lit her fires that she might make all England one in religion. The tortures of the Inquisition were for the sake of religious unity. The most exclusive bigots desire that all shall come to their position, and work very zealously to bring it about, but they have nothing of the union spirit. If we love union we shall love whatever partakes of the nature of union. If complete union cannot be had at once, we shall be glad of all we can get, and shall seek to foster it. If we deplore the evil effects of division, we shall rejoice in all steps that mitigate them. If we love souls as the Master did, we shall co-operate with others, so far as possible, in saving them. The decisive test of the union spirit is a feeling of sympathy and good fellowship, together with a hearty joining, so far as possible, with other peoples in all measures partaking of the nature of union. A feeling of superiority (which is bigotry), a denunciatory tone, and an exclusive course are inconsistent with the union spirit. He who loves union more than religious conquest will be humble, brotherly, co-operant. Sectarianism is smallness of heart. It is easy to be small, even with a large plea. It is to be feared that there is not a little sectarianism among us. It takes a great big character to fit our plea, and some of us are not big. With a membership of a million and a quarter, all too large to be partisan, what a people we should be!—a race of spiritual giants. Let us know our need, and humbly pray for largeness and sweetness to fulfill our mission.

4. Any union spirit that comes into existence should immediately play out into union work, as a condition of its existence. Faith without works is dead, and a living faith that ceases to work will die. The talent hid in a napkin was lost. In order to thrive, the union spirit must immediately go about union work, and any increase of this spirit should, as a condition of its life, find embodiment in new and advanced forms of union work. Thus half-way union measures furnish the natural way by which Christian union is to come about—by which the union spirit is to be kept alive and made to grow. No measure of the union spirit which may arise at this stage of the movement can at once vault into full organic union, and any stifling of its outworking into half-way measures will violate the very law of its existence. Guidance and control may be necessary and useful, but repression will be fatal. Wherever you see sympathy, co-operation, know that that divine thing is there at work. That is Christian union—all we shall get at present—all we shall ever get if we slay that. Do not tread on God's young vines.

5. If the natural way for Christian union to come is through half-way measures—a gradation of steps, each approaching nearer to complete union than the preceding—it would seem that it is time that another step be taken. It is many years since the Christian Endeavor movement was inaugurated; is the Christian world not ready for another advance? It has been trying of late to make one in the form of federation, but alas, it has been unkindly received in some quarters where it should have had best welcome! Great is the pity, for it has the elements of a long stride towards complete union. If sporadic co-operation has some value in fostering and developing the union spirit, in dissipating misunderstandings, and removing difficulties, systematic and continuous co-operation would do vastly more in all these directions. It is the one condition urgently needed for the swift, healthy growing together of the religious peoples. Then, oh, my brethren, the cause of Christ, and even that of the national righteousness, is bleeding, bleeding, for lack of what this movement would largely do. How long must we wait, while souls are dying, for the people of God to come a little nearer together? A great and mighty voice is going up all over this land that something of the kind be done. If the program proposed does not quite suit, fix it over so it will, and then—march! No criticism of measures can excuse a standstill policy. The church can now enter into systematic, permanent co-operation, and take a grip on national evils and on the salvation of souls such as is possible in no other way, and she is guilty before God if she does not do it. Evil is swift, lightning winged; shall the church crawl through another century before she is ready to work?

6. Is there not danger that the union movement will halt at some intermediate stage, taking such stage as a substitute for union itself? The same powerful forces that have carried the movement to a certain stage, will continue to operate until all harmful division disappears; and, unless we are prepared to say that there may be a disunion that is not harmful, these forces will continue to operate till complete union is reached. But the question receives a practical answer in the recent union of Presbyterians in Scotland, the contemplated union of Presbyterians in this country and other efforts at union between nearly related bodies. In these cases, where obstacles to complete union are absent, no half-way measures are seized upon as sufficient. Plainly these do not satisfy the demands of the union sentiment, nor the practical needs of union, and can never be permanent. On the contrary, these very measures, by increasing the union spirit and gradually removing obstacles, will make directly toward their own replacement by something better. They are nature's own sovereign way of healing the spiritual wound of Christendom. They carry within them no danger; it is their absence that is dangerous, and bodes ill to the healing.

An Afterthought or Two

By Frank E. Janes

The evangelistic symposium in the recent issue of the Christian-Evangelist is before me, and while the good wine of that rare vintage is still warm within me, I want to emphasize a couple of thoughts that especially appeal to me out of the various excellent articles.

The first one was an expression in the "Notes and Comments" column, on the use of the tract in evangelistic campaigns. My own experience has been that this is, if judiciously used, a most excellent thing. I have in mind a meeting where a copy of Dungan's "On the Rock"—not exactly a tract, truly, but a good case in point just the same—was completely worn out through repeated readings, and it was avowed by people of serious mind who came into the fellowship during the meetings that they had been won more by the book than by the preaching. While this was probably not keenly appreciated by the evangelist—for we are just human, too—it carried the affairs of the Master's kingdom forward, and that is the important thing.

We have many brief, comprehensive and representative settings forth of our principles and pleas and it would seem that these and every other legitimate agency ought to be enlisted if by these we "might win the more."

I do not know J. M. Rudy. I don't recall, just at the moment, where he lives, but here is a handshake and greeting to him across the miles, because I am proud of his article on "Evangelists and Evangelism." It has a flavor that is rare and good because he cries for the dignifying and exalting of the messages of our preachers; but, pre-eminently, for the exalting of the Christ and his pleas.

A multitude will probably exclaim against this comprehension of his article and say, "Do any of us do otherwise?"

I do not know, I am sure, but it seems to me that I have heard sermons and series of sermons where something else was given the pre-eminence. Once it was a man, and again it was so-called "first principles," when any man knows that the only first principles there are are centered in the personal experience of the Master. All others are secondary principles, probably important enough in their place, but secondary.

The mighty need of this restless age is the Christ. Not the ethical Christ, nor the historical Christ, nor the psychological Christ I heard about the other day, but the full-orbed Christ of the Book who is all of these things and many things besides. The evangelism that wins this age will have to come large with him and fired hot with zeal for him. "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up," a psalmist sang. The man who does great things in this generation for the Nazarene will have to be aflame with zeal, not for people or a peculiar plea, but for him. The others can be attended to at a convenient season. There must be a bit less of Acts 2:38 and a world more of John 3:16-21. This is not a striking at the work of the giants gone before. It is a cry for the deeper and spiritual evangelism.

It is a slogan calling for a mighty step onward. It means progress, life and power. It is a voice crying for the putting aside of the tithing "of mint and anise and cummin" and for the vaster matters of the divine purpose and providence that are veritably appalling in their magnitude, power and beauty. It, this mighty thing, finds its expression of the One who "went through the land doing good," the unique, solitary and tragic One with heart so widely sympathetic toward the foolish, self-deceived and hungry souls of this tear dampened valley.

The evangelist who faces the people in this day should not stand as a jurist but as a prophet, and a prophet yet rapt with the vision of the Elder Wonder his eyes have beheld. Easy to say? The hard fields to be fought bring a man quickly to things mundane? Oh, brother of mine, the most practical, sure and forceful messenger for this age is one who in the foolishness of the vasts of God has lost sight in some measure of the wisdom of this world. It is not hard to have the prophet spirit if a man will keep away the veil that hides him from the Holy One.

No man can come from the secret of the presence of the Galilean and do a little thing. I read the other day of a man who was about to do some ignoble thing, and just as he reached forth to do it the face of a woman floated before his eyes and he withheld his hand. So, if a man will let the vision of the sinless One stand before his eyes as the Grail before the eyes of Galahad, it will transform and transfigure both the man who bears the message and those who shall hear it. No man with the sublime vision has ever gone out into the world in the service of his God and failed.

The world wants him, and it wants him as it wants nothing else. It is for us to walk much with him in Galilee and much with him in America, and much with him in the silent places of the higher hills, that our message may be filled and flooded with that for which the world is crying.

If there is a new evangelism, this must be the genius of it as well as of those forces which, in God's good time, shall bring that

> To which the whole creation moves."

THE TEST.

By Frank B. Thomas.

The worth of Christianity is found not in the mere statement of principles upon which it is based, but rather in the show of adaptability to humanity these principles display when brought face to face with an opportunity to prove the worthiness of Christianity to be called the religion.

If there are certain well-defined elements of the religion of Jesus Christ beyond the ability of one to receive, and then to disseminate, one has therefore a form of worship too abstract for comprehension and obedience. In other words, if Christianity cannot be lived, it certainly does no good for it to be merely expounded and preached. If it goes beyond the scope of man's wisdom and faculty to act, it becomes then a mere form of theoretical religion that might in some cases develop the intellect but never the soul.

To one who has had a personal encounter with Jesus Christ, it becomes readily apparent that his religion exercises the intellect and touches the soul to the proper degree. It proves, by contact, that it is not too abstract.

Jesus says that for obedience to his will, you will receive. You do this, and you will receive that. To every blessing promised, there was a command given. This gave to Christianity a regard for compensation. For obedience Jesus promised forgiveness.

The follower of Christ who is conscientious in his service, hunts for rather than hides from his commands. The desire becomes keen for a full knowledge of the way so a worthy journey may be ended.

The way of Jesus is around the world! It encompasses every artery of commerce, every road of progress, every trail over mountainside, every continent, every island, every nation, every river, every sea, where man is, no matter his condition of soul. Jesus has given the marching orders to every disciple beneath his cross, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

Since the gifts of the Master are worth receiving, his commands are worthy of obedience. Since we can receive what he gives, we can do what he asks. To ignore this greatest command of the Saviour, is a proof of selfishness in the heart of the church. It is worse than that. It convicts the church of disobedience to divine command and of betrayal to sacred trust; since on the principle that God employs men in the great work of human redemption, those who have been saved from the awful thraldom of sin are recreant to the sweetest privilege of their lives when they fail to assist in some way to bring salvation to those who are yet deep in trespasses and sin.

If the church could ever learn in the fullest sense that spiritual perfection is never attained by keeping, but always by giving, how soon would the heralds of the blessed King beshouting the welcomed message of love in every land and on every sea! If the church could ever learn to pay the debt it owes, rather than to give the pittance it offers for the service he has rendered to humanity, how quick and sure would come world-wide righteousness ushering in with glad hosannahs the millennial reign of the glorious Prince of Peace! If the church would wake up to the splendid opportunity of the age for the rapid dissemination of the principles of everlasting life, redeemed souls from every race and class and kind would make the old world resound with their lusty shouts of joyous acclaim as they rally around the Sign of the Cross!

"Zeal and duty are not slow; but on occasions forelock watchful wait."

The Method of Contact In Our Educational System

By C. C. Rowlison

The Bible chairs at Ann Arbor, Mich., Lawrence, Kan., and Charlottesville, Va., supported by the C. W. B. M.; the Bible seminaries at Eugene, Ore., Berkeley, Cal., and Columbia, Mo.; the divinity house at the University of Chicago; and with these, the now fixed tendency of ambitious students to seek the disciplines of the greatest universities, constitute what I have called "The Method of Contact in our Educational System."

There are three elements of strength in this method, and it is from these that the inspiration comes which is giving such sudden and impressive power to this phenomenon in our educational activities. The first of these is the missionary motive. This motive established the Bible chairs of the C. W. B. M., and has had more or less influence in establishing the Bible seminaries mentioned above. It has had but slight influence in sending men to the greater universities.

The second significant consideration is that of economy. The argument is, why pay vast sums to establish chairs of science, history and philosophy, when these chairs are already supported by the taxes we pay, and are usually filled by Christian gentlemen? And indeed the argument cannot be met.

And then, thirdly, there is a very strong belief among us that the truth we want is universal truth. Multitudes of our older men as well as of the younger believe that this truth can best be realized by entering into perfect fellowship with students and professors of every creed and of no creed, as they all diligently seek for the everlasting realities of life. It is held, that unless our position can stand the test of the most searching comparison with all other religious views, it is not final, and therefore must be abandoned or modified. The conviction is that if we are ever to be real leaders in the reorganization of the thought and methods of the religious world, that we are right must be demonstrated in the universities, whence for many centuries nearly all great forward movements have gone forth. And so teachers and students are, with much earnestness, submitting themselves to this new discipline. It is still too early to predict what the final outcome may be.

That the spirit of our people will receive a deep impression from this new educational tendency cannot be questioned. Will the effect of such contact be to destroy faith in our unique mission to the world, or will it cause us to become more deeply convinced of the essential correctness of our position, while at the same time making us more generous in our interpretation of the spirit and purposes of other peoples?

Whatever may be the ultimate effect of this new movement, we ought to bear in mind a few very potent facts. We ought to recognize this as a very forceable expression of the consciousness of our brotherhood that so far we have provided very inadequate educational facilities for students for the ministry, as well as for our other young people. It is also certain that this new way has come to stay. It is folly longer to raise cries of alarm against the tendency of our men, including very many ministers, to go to the universities. They are going in great numbers, and the percentage of such students is bound to be increasingly great. The only wise thing is to provide for the special necessities of our own men. The purpose of the divinity house at the University of Chicago is ideal, and the large number of men who have been assisted there is surprising. Already, with scarcely anything more than a name to work with, it has done more for our Chicago churches than any other influence. It is not improbable that we shall soon have five students to one who is there now. Shall we continue to ignore these men when most of them are at a crisis in their lives, or shall we have the wisdom and liberality to properly equip and endow the divinity house, and so permit the strongly equipped men who go from this great center to enter upon their work with the enthusiasm which a child always cherishes for the affectionate mother?

The argument for the divinity house at Chicago applies almost exactly to the seminaries in conjunction with the state universities. They are bound to be most potent factors in the affairs of our people a decade hence. Therefore let the church, as a cherishing mother, most lovingly nurture them.

In some respects, our most serious, as well as most hopeful problem, is presented by the increasing numbers of our men in the eastern universities. Besides many scientific and literary students, there were several ministerial students last year in Harvard, Columbia and Yale. Doubtless the same thing is true this year. And these are not renegade Disciples, but are from among our most earnest and promising men. In a land where their religious views are unknown, they have had the enthusiasm for our cause to organize Disciple clubs. From such clubs in time past have come some of our most conspicuous and useful men, and there is no probability that men of such discipline are to cease from leadership among us.

There is little that can be done directly by the church to help these university men, but it is certain that we ought to give to them our warmest sympathy and encouragement in their struggle for eternal truth. And it is most certain that we ought not to reprobate them.

of Champ Clark will greet your eye, "grand, gloomy and peculiar," with the plain legend on his wrinkled brow, "What a bore this is!" Or the genial A. R. Webber and his wife, the new member from Ohio, will smile upon you, or the new assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Willett M. Hays. The woods are full of them. Then you hear Santelmann's great aggregation strike up the "Star Spangled Banner," the President and his assistants file through the east room, and the reception is over.

Our Budget

—The time for the offering for foreign missions in all our churches is the first Sunday in March.

—The Foreign Society does work in India, China, Japan, Africa, England, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Tibet, Philippine Islands, Cuba, and the Hawaiian Islands. The world is the field.

—Seventeen new missionaries were sent out from America by our Foreign Society this year. This is the largest number ever sent out in any one year in the history of the society. The society hopes to send out at least ten more this year

—Last year the churches gave $89,545 for foreign missions. This year they are asked for $100,000.

—Fourteen new living link churches were enrolled last year, making a total of fifty. A living link church is one that supports a missionary on the foreign field.

—Last year the total receipts for world-wide missions amounted to $211,318. Our watchword this year is, A quarter of a million dollars for foreign missions.

—The whole number of the Foreign Society's missionaries in 143. The number of native evangelists and helpers is 295, making a total missionary force of 438.

—The total church membership on the foreign field is now 7,173. During the past year there have been 1,245 additions.

—W. A. Merrill has begun work at Decatur, Texas, giving half time to that and half to Bowie.

—Dr. J. C. Coggin, of Black Mountain, N. C., will give half his time to field evangelistic work.

—Brethren at Jom Ranch, Tex., have just completed a church building which will soon be dedicated by A. C. Parker.

—Cecil C. Carpenter has received a unanimous call to remain for the sixth year with the congregation at Thompson, Ill.

—The church at Poplar Bluff, Mo., has extended a unanimous call to Ellis Purlee, of Coffeyville, Kan., to become its pastor. He will probably accept.

—C. P. Adams, Arapahoe, Neb., one of our most faithful gospel preachers, is ready to engage in evangelistic work. He can do effective work for any church.

—Will correspondents be careful to write clearly the names of people and places? We can often make out the sense of a communication when we can not be sure about the proper names.

—Marion Stevenson, of Chicago, is delivering a series of Bible lectures for the First church at Quincy, Ill., which has just had a very prosperous year. Walter M. Jordan is the pastor.

—Melvin Menges, Matanzas, Cuba, reports nine baptisms at Cidra, an out-station, and two at Matanzas, making eleven for the month of December. Besides he reports eleven confessions.

—Dr B. T. Bitting, who has lately been at Rural Hall, N. C, is now at Spray, where, we believe, he will do a good work. The former field is being served by J. W. Wolff, who, though a busy merchant, interests himself in the Lord's work.

—E. L Frazier, 1404 Cornell avenue, Indianapolis, and H. H. Saunders, Noblesville, Ind., have formed a team for evangelistic work. They will go everywhere and are ready for dates. They prefer the free will offering plan, but will work on other plans.

—Nelson Gardner, of Cotner university, who is one of our strong evangelistic singers, has united in work with C. C. Atwood.

– During the month of December the Foreign Society received $9,400, a gain of $5,168 over the corresponding month last year.

—J. K. Ballou, of Iowa City, Ia., has accepted a call to the First church at Sioux City, Ia., and will enter upon his duties Feb. 1.

—There are signs that Lewis Goos is appreciated at Long Grove, Ia. He will enter upon another year's service with the church Feb. 1.

—H. King Pendleton, who has taken up the work at the First Christian church, Atlanta, Ga., is a son of the late W. K. Pendleton, long associated with Bethany college.

—"The Sedalia district" is holding a one day convention with the First church of Sedalia, Mo., to-day, and there are some excellent speakers on the program. A foreign missionary rally will be held Jan. 27 at the same place.

—G. F. Assiter reports a surprise party given him by members of his new charge at Parkersburg, W. Va. "It was no light task to sort out the good things," he writes. What is more to the point is that the work at Parkersburg advances.

—Nearly $25,000 was received last year for a Bible college at Jubbulpore, India. The Foreign Society is now raising funds to build a female Christian college in Tokio, Japan. This will require $20,000. Read the article by Dr. Bliss.

—We deeply regret to report that Bro. B. B. Sanders, one of our strong men in the southwest, has recently been bereft of his noble companion. For many years Sister Sanders had been a great sufferer and her death was not a surprise.

—C C. Hill, of Roswell, N. Mex., warns the brethren against one Julius Ebel, who claims Canton, O., as his home, and who has proven himself to be a "deadbeat," getting money under false pretenses and leaving town. Give him the cold shoulder.

—Claris Yeuell, of Shelbina, Mo., recently delivered his lecture on "The Summits of the Sunny South" at Manhattan, Kansas, and took up a collection for the benefit of the fund for re-erecting "The School of the Evangelists" at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn

—Mark Peckham, a graduate of Hiram college, who is now teaching at Kirksville, Ky., has recently been appointed a missionary to Havana, Cuba, and will go out next September. Mr. Peckham is the son of Professor Peckham, of Hiram college.

—Dr. Anson G. Chester, of Buffalo, in sending us an account of a missionary rally held there, states that among the speakers was a Free Baptist brother. We are hearing from other quarters of this union in work, preparatory, we hope, to a real union of the brotherhoods.

—Russell F. Thrapp's church at Jacksonville, Ill., reports the best year in its history. For current expenses and missions $7,400 were raised, and $12,000 were collected for the new church. The contract for this has been let. This is Brother Thrapp's fourth year with this people.

—The church at Princeton, Ind., is just now seeking a pastor, and is able to pay a salary of $700 to one who is properly recommended. Bro. T. J. Freed, the present pastor, closes his labors there in February. Address, Mrs. Emma D. McCurdy, church clerk, for particulars —In the welcome of E. J. Lampton to Louisiana, Mo., his old field, the Baptist minister adjourned his services and took his members to the Christian church. That shows a fine spirit. The report in our last issue from Brother Lampton, while written from Bowling Green, had reference to Troy, Mo.

The following March Offering supplies are furnished the churches, free of charge:

1. March Offering Envelopes.
2. Pastoral Letters. (For Preachers only.)
3. March Offering number of the Missionary Voice.
4. Subscription Books.
5. "Great Facts" from the last Annual Report.

Order to-day, giving the number of members in your church. Be careful to give the local name of the church, as Bethel, Mt. Pleasant, Sixth Street, etc., when different from the post-office.

Address,
F. M. RAINS, Cor. Sec.,
Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

—C. Manley Rice, who has removed from Lisbon, Ohio, to take up his duties as pastor of the Second Christian church, Wheeling Island, Va, was tendered a beautiful reception by the members of his new charge

—The Board of Church Extension has just received an annuity gift of $100 from a friend in Indiana and another of $500 from a friend in California. Remitttances should be made to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—Several hundred guests were present at a reception given by the industrial society of the church at Chillicothe, Mo., to J. N. Crutcher, the new pastor, and wife. Brother Crutcher is now on a tour of Missouri and Kansas churches in behalf of the Foreign Society.

—We regret that owing to the inclement weather the meeting at Des Moines, Ia., held by Brother Sharpe of the Columbia Bible college, had to be abandoned, but it is a source of joy that there were 43 additions to the church; 18 of them being by primary obedience.

—S. R. Cassius, our colored evangelist, writes from Tohu, Logan Co., Okla., that he has lost his house and its contents by fire, saving only his wife and children. He says they are in destitute circumstances, and appeals to those who know him to assist them in this hour of need.

—R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Ky., writes that he must be relieved from the heavy financial burden he is carrying on behalf of the Anti-Mormon movement or surrender in a large measure his tract and paper work. He calls for volunteer donations of one dollar per month for twelve months to help him.

—Prior to his removal from Woodbine on the occasion of his having accepted a call to Paris, Mo., a union meeting was arranged at the M. E. church, all of the ministers of Woodbine being present except one who could not, for good reasons, attend. The regret of people and preachers at Brother Wright's leaving their city was voiced, and Brother Wright spoke feelingly of the universal kindness that had been shown him in his work. The local paper says: "We know that we voice the sentiment of this community, and we recommend him and his to the highest confidence and esteem of his future congregation."

—Dr. Clarence B. Strouse, president of the Florida winter Bible conference, at Gainesville, Fla., announces the opening of the present winter's conference Feb. 5 and closing Feb. 16. This is intended to be an interdenominational Bible conference, and a number of able speakers are announced for its coming session.

—E. E. Crawford, the missionary at Albuquerque, reports that he finds this town a vast sanitarium needing more pastoral care than any place he has ever seen, and it represents splendid opportunities for Christian service. This is the special mission of the church at Winchester, of which Cecil J. Armstrong is the pastor.

—We regret to record the death of Mrs. J. H Latimer. She was a member of the Walnut street Christian church, Chattanooga, Tenn., and was in attendance upon a meeting of the C. W. B. M. when she was stricken with paralysis. She is survived by her husband, who is traveling passenger agent of the N. C. & St. L. R.R.

—The brethren at Griffin, Ga., have recently purchased a lot in the central part of the city, and hope to erect a new building before very long. The present church was built over 50 years ago, and the location has become somewhat outside of the town. A tent meeting is contemplated, and a larger field of usefulness, it is felt, will be the result.

—In speaking of the annual roll call of the church at Keokuk, Bro. J. W. Kilborn wrote, "Best church ever had," meaning it was the best roll call the church ever had. Our printers made him say, "It is the best church I ever had." It was not his purpose to pass on the comparative merits of the churches he had served. Moral. Do not abbreviate to obscurity.

—Subscriptions are being solicited for the purpose of building a colored Disciples ministerial school in the town of Greenville, N. C. There is already a lot, affording a most excellent site, which was purchased by the general assembly of the Disciples of Christ. Letters should be directed to Prof. H. F. Woodhouse, R. F. D. No. 4, Elizabeth City, N. C.

—Bro. Geo. E. Hicks has resigned as pastor of the First Christian church at La Porte, Ind., to take effect in April next. The local paper speaks highly of his services in the community, and hints that an effort will be made by the church to retain him. Brother Hicks graduated from Butler college in '94, and received the degree of A. M. in '95. He has made a good reputation both as preacher and lecturer.

—The friends of Bro. O. A. Bartholomew will be glad to learn that he is slowly recovering from the effects of his recent fall, though he is yet confined to his room, and to his bed. Some of the brethren of the Hammett Place church meet with him each Lord's day and join with him and his wife in partaking of the Lord's supper. Of course his previous affliction of paralysis remains, but his mind is as clear as it ever was.

—One of our most successful evangelists writes as follows: "The article of J. M. Rudy in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was an eye-opener. It had the right ring about it. If we have such a class of evangelists among us as Brother Rudy hints at, you ought by all means to keep on 'flaying them alive.'"

If we may express an opinion on the above, we should say that the period of the worst abuse of the evangelistic office is past, and that the tendency is decidedly upward. The churches are demanding a higher class of work, and methods that comport with the dignity of Christianity and with the spirit of our plea for unity. The evangelists are rising, and will be sure to continue to rise, to the demands of the churches.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Thousands of Men and Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

To Prove What the Great Kidney Remedy, Swamp-Root, Will Do for YOU, Every Reader of The Christian-Evangelist May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the great kidney remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys begin to get better they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Didn't Know I Had Kidney Trouble

I had tried so many remedies without their having benefited me that I was about discouraged, but in a few days after taking your wonderful Swamp-Root I began to feel better.

I was out of health and run down generally, had no appetite, was dizzy and suffered with headache most of the time. I did not know that my kidneys were the cause of my trouble, but somehow felt they might be, and I began taking Swamp-Root, as above stated. There is such a pleasant taste to Swamp-Root, and it goes right to the spot and drives disease out of the system. It has cured me, making me strong and better in every way, and I cheerfully recommend it to all sufferers.

Gratefully yours,
MRS. A. L. WALKER, 21 McDaniel St., Atlanta, Ga.

(Swamp-Root is pleasant to take.)

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for many kinds of diseases, and if permitted to continue much suffering and fatal results are sure to follow. Kidney trouble irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless and irritable. Makes you pass water often during the day and obliges you to get up many times during the night. Unhealthy kidneys cause rheumatism, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints and muscles; make your head ache and back ache, cause indigestion, stomach and liver trouble, you get a sallow, yellow complexion, make you feel as though you had heart trouble; you may have plenty of ambition, but no strength; get weak and waste away.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the world-famous kidney remedy. In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

How to Find Out

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—So successful is Swamp-Root in promptly curing even the most distressing cases, that to Prove its wonderful merits you may have a sample bottle and a book of valuable information, both sent absolutely free by mail. The book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured. The value and success of Swamp-Root is so well known that our readers are advised to send for a sample bottle.

In writing to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and you can purchase the regular fifty cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

—Colorado Springs seems to have been deeply stirred in the evangelistic work that was started there at the end of the old year, when J. Wilbur Chapman held a union meeting. Following this, Bro. Crayton Brooks started a meeting in his own church, and the latest news is that 76 additions have resulted, among them the pastor's only child, a girl of 10 years of age. Since Brother Brooks went there a few months ago there have been 96 additions to the church.

—E. C. Anderson, of Anniston, Ala., says: "The last few months seemed to be filled with appeals from weak and struggling congregations and from isolated churches for some one to come and preach the gospel." From many sources we hear of the great opportunities for advancing our cause in the south, if the money for the support of men could be forthcoming. Brother Anderson adds: "This turning of the people to me is a sign that the world wants Christ preached to them, and not some theory about Christ. It should greatly encourage us who are in this grand work; let us take courage and lose no opportunity to send or carry the gospel."

—The Central church of Indianapolis, A. B. Philputt pastor, furnishes the following summary for 1904. Total money raised for all purposes $8,581.85. Of this amount $2,125 00 was given to missions. There were 102 additions to the membership during the year. Losses by letter and death 47. The present nominal membership is 1,306.

—"Lawrence and Edward Wright are laying siege to Pana, Ill., in a tabernacle meeting which began on Jan. 7. We have no organization, and the state and fifth district boards are backing the enterprise, and it is believed that it will be successful. The prayers of the brethren everywhere are asked for the meeting and the evangelists.

"Edward O. Sharpe,
"Evangelist Fifth Ill. Dis."

—A subscriber in sending for some extra copies of the Christian-Evangelist, in order to get up a club for it, says. "If they read the Christian-Evangelist they will grow in grace, and be better men and women. My own life is richer and better for having read it fifteen years." That sort of testimony from people who have been steady readers of the paper for many years, we prize very highly. If the paper causes its readers to "grow in grace" and be "better men and women," what better reason could be offered for extending its circulation. And this is the testimony of all of our regular readers.

—Evangelist James Small, writing from Wilmington, Ohio, says:

The last two numbers of the Christian-Evangelist have pleased me greatly. Your editorials on the "New Evangelism" are fine. Surely you have been misunderstood in your advocacy of it. I had, myself, a very different idea of what the term meant until I read these two articles.

The New Testament Evangelism will remain the new evangelism until it is superseded by something better. The Old Testament did not become such until it was superseded by the New. It is not a question of age. The New Testament is older now than the Old Testament was when it was superseded by the New. No man is old as long as he keeps in touch with the times in which he lives and serves the people of his generation. The newest, freshest, and most vital thing in this world is the gospel of the Son of God.

—The Christian church at Palmyra, Mo., passed resolutions on Jan. 1 expressing its opinion of the liquor traffic and deprecating the conduct of members of the congregation who sign petitions asking the county court or city council to grant a saloon license. "We believe," says the resolution, "that such a member would be walking disorderly in the scriptural meaning of that term, and as such would require the consideration of the officers." W. Henry Jones, the pastor, in sending the resolution, says: "A man's name has no place on both a church record and a saloon petition. The recording angel has drawn a line through the name on the entry book above. Let the church clerk do the same, that the books may tally." Few of the readers will dissent from this view. No man can favor what the saloon stands for and what the church stands for at the same time. "Ye cannot serve two masters."

—We are not eager to receive reports of how many weddings or funerals or the number of sermons pastors officiate at or preach. These are parts of the minister's life, and we take it for granted that there will be an average of two or three addresses a week just as there are two or three meals a day. Nor can we print the many eulogistic words which the evangelist would like to say of the pastor and the pastor of the evangelist. When we cut out from our columns this kind of reports, it does not mean that we disagree with Bro. H. in his statement that Bro. W. is a fine preacher and a good fellow to work with, or with Bro. W. that Bro. H. is the greatest evangelist among us. We prefer to take all this for granted and to give the space in our columns to news that is more vital. If we were to print all the kind words we hear of ourselves and our brethren, we would have to leave out all the reports of victories or trials in the field, and many of our articles.

Ready For Union.

Editor Christian-Evangelist:—On Feb. 5, we (High St. church of Christ) will hold services with the Free Baptists in their church both morning and evening. Our pastor, W. C. Morro, will preach at both services. Both congregations are ready to unite when the national committees say unite.

Yours for Christian union,
F. E. Giles.

Evangelistic Campaign of Christian Churches of Chicago.

Dr. H. O. Breeden, of Des Moines, Ia., is with us this week. He is addressing the down town Monday meeting on the following themes: "The Pre-eminence of Christ," "The Gospel for this Age," "The Glory of the Cross," and "The Model for Character." It is a delight to have fellowship with this major general in evangelistic work. This central meeting is discovering many disconnected Disciples. Thus far 113 persons have been added to the various churches holding simultaneous meetings, that is during the first ten days of the campaign.

Guy Hoover, Sec.

"Man Preparing for Other Worlds."

Dear Brother Garrison: From nearly every standpoint of which I can think Brother W. T. Moore's book is, in my humble judgment, the greatest book ever published by the brotherhood. I have read it twice and several chapters in it three times over, and at every reading it has had a fresh charm for me.

The author has done what few men have ever been able to do, viz.: he has not only put his thoughts into the book, but he has put himself into it, with all the freshness and force of his great nature.

If this should catch the eye of any of my friends among the churches I say to them, send for the book, send for it now! now!! not by and by, and you will thank me for ten years to come. There is not a chapter in it that is not worth the $2 which you charge for the volume.

Columbus, Ind. James Small.

The Cleveland Campaign.

The simultaneous meetings in Cleveland are now in progress. They are doing much good. They are uniting and solidifying the churches as no other move has ever done. Reports are made each night at each meeting of the results the night before. One down town meeting is held each week at the Lyceum theater. H. L. Willett spoke Friday, Jan. 20. The preaching force is as announced in the last letter, except that G. W. Moore, of Akron, is assisting E. P. Wise at Cedar avenue and Devoe and Shields are the team with Pastor Ford at Madison avenue. The first eight days brought 92 additions to the nine churches in the movement. There is a very hopeful spirit expressed everywhere and a larger attendance reported. Better preparation would have brought much better results, but it will be a great benefit nevertheless. The idea is a good one and we will learn how to work it better as time goes on. Fuller reports will be given later.

Encouraging Increase.

The receipts of the Board of Ministerial Relief for the first quarter of the present year are nearly $1,000 in excess of the first quarter of last year. This is very gratifying indeed, for we need a large increase in the receipts over that of any previous year of our work. We have heard from a number of churches this year for the first time; but there are thousands of our strong churches that ought to send us from $25 to $100 each, that we earnestly hope to hear from yet, and we trust these will not delay their offerings until other interests come in and crowd this one out. Bethren, do not let this occur. You will thereby neglect a sacred duty. We expect you to give this work a place on your calendar of annual offerings, and that you will thus be true to the men who have been true to the cause of primitive Christianity.

We have no man in the field to eat up any part of your offerings. We are running this whole business on the office expense only. Very soon your attention will be called to foreign missions, and then what about the ministry? Will you neglect the "old guard"? They did a noble work. They fought faithfully and valiantly—some of them without money and without price. Though faithful and true, they are unable to fight longer. Some of them are homeless and helpless. Don't forget, neglect or pass them by. Their salaries are long past due. Their needs are now their burden. Let us hear from you. We eagerly await your financial coming.

Make all money payable to Board of Ministerial Relief. Send draft, postal or express order. Do not send personal cheques. Address, 120 E. Market street, Indianapolis, Ind.

Of Interest to Piano Purchasers.

We take pleasure in introducing to our readers a new advertiser in our pages, the O. K. Houck Piano Co., of St. Louis, Memphis, Little Rock and Nashville. They carry a good stock of some of the very best makes of pianos and organs, and readers of the Christian-Evangelist can feel assured of fair and courteous treatment at their hands.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY!

I have been doing so well in the egg business that I feel it my duty to let others know how they can succeed. I sent to the Beard Chemical Co., Dept. 3, Norfolk, Va., and obtained their Egg Preserver. I bought eggs at 8 to 10 cents per dozen and kept them until fall when I sold them for 25 to 30 cents and cleared $287. I reinvested this money each year for several years, when I had $3,872.50 as the result of my business. I have tried many ways of preserving eggs but this is the only way of keeping eggs perfectly fresh. The yolk won't stick and they look and taste just like new laid eggs. It costs only one cent a dozen to preserve them. My son made $10 to $15 a week selling the Preserver to families who want to keep a few dozen for their own use. This is a good chance for agents. Any person can get full information and free directions by writing the above firm. J. W.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

The St. Louis Letter.

Never has there been a greater interest in the Master's work in the city of St. Louis than now. The revival spirit seems to be in the air. The audiences at the different churches are good, and we are having additions at almost every service. At the Compton Heights church we have had 21 additions in the last three Sundays: ten by commendation, ten by confession and baptism, and one from the Baptist church. We had full houses at every service last Sunday, and the interest was never better. Brother Moore baptized 11 at the Hammett Place church last Sunday evening, and the other ministers report constant increase.

We had a union missionary meeting at the Union Ave. church Friday, Jan. 6, for the purpose of considering our city mission work. It was a very stormy day and there were not so many present as we hoped to see, but the interest was great, sometimes becoming intense. Stirring speeches were made by nearly all of the ministers of our churches in the city. Brother Garrison gave a general summary of all of the speeches at the evening session. We are hoping to open two or three new missions in the city at an early date, and not the least among them will be a church for the Chinese. There is now a large class of Chinese boys, or rather young men, being taught at the First church. Several have already accepted Christ. We think it is possible to organize a strong church among them in this city in the near future.

It is the general feeling, among those who know, that St. Louis was never more ready for aggressive missionary work than at the present time.

Several of our churches have already organized local chapters of the "Business Men's Association of the Christian Church." Compton Heights has the honor of the first organization. We have now perfected the organization of a city union of that association. It is our intention to give our men something to do in the church. We are specially fortunate in that we have several leading business men who love Christ and want to see his kingdom advanced, and they are ready to encourage and help any movement in that direction.

Bro. H. H. Hodgdon, the city president of the Endeavor union, is working up a mammoth union meeting of the Endeavorers, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union to be held Jan. 31. If the program that is being planned can be successfully carried out it will be a great day among the young people in our city.

The many friends of Bro. O. A. Bartholomew will regret to learn that he fell on the slippery walk a few weeks ago, and is so disabled that he cannot leave his bed. The Hammett Place brethren, where he holds his membership, hold communion service with him on Lord's days in the afternoon, and Brother Moore reports the occasion as very spiritual and helpful.

The men of the Compton Heights church had a banquet Thursday evening, Jan. 12. It was next to the worst night of the winter, coming just after the worst night, and the attendance was not so large as expected. But 45 men sat down at 8 o'clock to as fine a repast as they ever saw at a banquet. (The banquet was served by our Woman's Union.) Toasts were given by brethren: J. H. Allen, on "The Business Men's Association," J. H. Anderson and Dr. Geo. Gibson, on "What Men Can Do for the Church," Prof. Milton Frye, on "Young Men and the Church," Otto Miller, on "Personal Work in Saving Men," W. P. Shelton, on "Church Finance," H. H. Hodgdon, on "Tithing," Jas. Winterton and W. P. French, on "The Outlook for the Compton Heights Church." The pastor was toastmaster. Every one present seemed to have a good time, and if we are not mistaken the banquet will become an event of frequent occurrence in this church.

Our workers are busy now getting ready for the foreign missionary rally to be held in the First church Jan. 30. F. N. Calvin.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

A letter from Mrs. C. O. McFarland, the manager of the Nodaway district, brings news of a new auxiliary at Summit with 17 members, nine of whom take the Tidings. The officers are as follows: Mrs. S. A. Weaver, Mrs. Ida Lyons, Mrs. Hattie Spears and Miss Nettie Shultz. The officers of the auxiliary at Bigelow, whom we could not report earlier, are Mrs. Elmyra Joslyn, Mrs. Maud Borchers, Mrs. Hattie Chenning and Mrs. Rosa Dix. We are so glad to number these new auxiliaries in our state family, and trust they may help every other auxiliary in the state by their faithfulness, and that all the others may in turn encourage them.

The special leaflet will surely be in the hands of the executive committees before this letter reaches you. We have met many unavoidable delays in getting at the information necessary to the leaflet, but now the printer has it, and we only await his work. They will be mailed to the auxiliaries by the recording secretary, Mrs. H. A. Denton, who has most kindly done the work on them. A letter with the apportionment of each auxiliary will be sent from the corresponding secretary. We are asking all to get to work as though you really intended to pay what you are asked to pay toward this special work, and to have it all in by June, if possible, so that at the state convention the fund may be complete. Again, do not forget that this year the national convention follows the state rather closely, and convenes in August, three months earlier than usual. This is another reason for our efforts to complete our special work by June.

We have apportioned the auxiliaries, as nearly as possible to judge, according to their faith. Some, large in numbers, have not yet learned to give as much per capita as many of the smaller ones. And to such we have apportioned a smaller amount than to some of the smaller auxiliaries. If any find their apportionment too small, we shall be overjoyed to enlarge it. If any think theirs too large, write to the secretary and, although it will make her sad and sorry, she will change it for you. In looking over the reports of special gifts last year, we are grieved to note that many of the auxiliaries did not do anything toward paying their apportionment, according to their quarterly report cards. Will you not, my sisters, do something on them this year? If you can not, or do not wish to, please let us know at once, so we may ask the dear faithful ones to bear your share, by increasing their amount. Please do this; it will help us to know just where we are going to stand at the close of the missionary year. On the other hand, how we did and do rejoice at the many who did make their offering all that was asked, and some who sent more. Such faithfulness and generosity encourage us and give us hope that some day all will do as well.

Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Washington State Notes.

I write from Pomeroy, where I am helping the pastor, Harry Benton, in a meeting with packed house and confessions last night. Brother Benton and wife are graduates from the Eugene divinity school and both are good preachers. They are beloved by all in this community and, I have no doubt, will do a great work here.

It was my privilege and pleasure to be in the Dorris-Gregory meeting at Walla Walla one night when on my way to Pomeroy. They were just closing a great meeting of six weeks' duration with about 75 added. Brother Dorris is now at Pendleton, Ore.

B. B. Burton has begun a meeting with the Central church, Spokane. B. E. Utz is pastor. D. Y. Donaldson has gone from Colfax, Wash., to Kansas to engage in evangelistic work and S. G. Griffith succeeds him in Colfax.

Pullman church, Ralph Sargent pastor, will soon occupy the basement of their $15,000 church building. Many of the students of the State agricultural college attend the services.

No more delightful winter climate could be found than this great inland empire enjoys. The people seem prosperous and happy under the rule of King Wheat. Some, however, are willing to admit the sovereignty of King Jesus and I believe that he assures his subjects greater happiness and more lasting prosperity than is given by that which is their wealth producer here. This is a great country. Days warm and clear. The air pure, sparkling spring water piped to supply the town. No wonder the people are happy.

We are enjoying an era of prosperity in the churches of Washington this year, quite in keeping with the general prosperity of the state. Morton L. Rose.

The Christmas Angel.

Dedicated to the parents of Clementine Long, who was translated Dec. 21, 1904.

Let not your thoughts to loss and sorrow turn,
 But rather dwell upon this sweet surprise—
That she who was your little daughter here
 Is now your Christmas angel in the skies!

Good News for Asthma Sufferers.

We are glad to announce that the Kola Plant, recently discovered on the Congo River, West Africa, has proved itself a sure cure for Asthma, as claimed at the time. We have received the testimony of ministers of the gospel, doctors, business men and farmers, all speaking of the marvelous curative power of this new discovery.

Mrs. L. D. York, of Henderson, Me., writes, thanks be to my God and the Kola Compound I am now completely cured of Asthma after many years of suffering. Hon. L. C. Clute, of Manchester, Iowa, writes, was permanently cured of Asthma after eighteen years severe suffering and want other sufferers to know that the Kola Compound did it. Mr. E. B Hume, 1345 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., a widely known traveler writes, was cured after physicians and everything else failed and I tried all so-called remedies known. Mrs. Sadie Montgomery, Lapel, Ind., writes, I could not lie down or walk fast for several years, but the Kola Compound cured me, although every other remedy failed.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the Christian-Evangelist who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Texas.

The next state convention is to be held at Waco, beginning Monday, May 15, at 8 P. M., and continuing until Friday night, May 19. An excellent program has been arranged, giving the C. W. B. M. Monday at 8 P. M., and Tuesday morning and afternoon; Texas missions, Tuesday night and all of Wednesday, taking in the Home Board representatives Wednesday night; educational interests have Thursday, and the Foreign Board will be asked to arrange a program for a "rally" Friday afternoon and night. Among the names on the program I note the following: Prof. Wallace C. Payne, of Kansas university, Dr. Addison Clark, president Jarvis college; Benjamin L. Smith, G. W. Muckley, Harry G. Hill, Dr. E. V. Zollars, Dr. E. L. Powell, and Bro. S. K. Hallam, president, who with his church has recently entered the splendid new church building at Denton.

This convention already promises to be the largest ever held in Texas. The old reliable Christian-Evangelist should have a representative present.

Hereford college, with a fine property worth fully $25,000, has been affiliated with Texas Christian university. It is situated in the Panhandle country, which is fast becoming populous with an excellent class of people. Jesse B. Haston is to preside over its sessions. T. E. Shirley, the Texas apostle of education, is engaged in raising the money to meet a $5,000 debt now against the property.

Our Texas churches are more nearly supplied with ministers than ever before. We have recently captured Kilby Ferguson, L. N. Early, S. B. Culp, W. H Trainum, H. M. Bandy (returned home), J. W. Smith of Kentucky university, W. H. Matheson, of New Zealand, F. F. Grimm and others, whose names I do not now recall. The first six months of our missionary year, our Texas missionaries have baptized 504, added otherwise 152, besides receiving 385 by commendation, net gain 656; planted 14 churches, seven Sunday-schools, built five church houses; raised cash, $13,001.95. J. C. Mason.

Kentucky University Letter.

Several new students have entered the university since the holidays. A great many more are expected about Feb. 1, just after the close of the first term. There are only two terms in the year now, instead of three as heretofore.

A joint debate between the Peridean and the Cecropian literary societies on the evening of Dec. 16, was the occasion of a great deal of interest and enthusiasm. This was the first joint debate between the two societies for several years. After this year, however, the debates will be held annually. The Bible college societies will also meet in joint debate, and then the winners will meet. Cecropia won the first debate from Peridea.

Prof. Chas. L. Loos celebrated his eighty-first birthday, Dec. 22. Professor Loos is still teaching, and enjoys the best of health.

M. J. Ross, of the College of the Bible, has accepted work with the churches at Sulphur and Campbellsburg for this year.

J. Stuart Mill, one of the Australian students of the College of the Bible, was married Dec 28 to Miss Luella Mingua, of Augusta, Ky. Miss Mingua was a popular teacher in the Augusta public schools. Brother Mill will not be in school again until next fall.

Prof. I. B. Grubbs, of the College of the Bible, had another operation performed on one of his eyes just before Christmas. Since then he has been unable to meet his classes, though he is expected to return to his work as soon as he has nearly recovered. His work was divided and carried on by Professors Calhoun and Deweese.

President Jenkins delivered an address to the students of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, on Sunday, Jan. 8.

Efforts are being made to make old Kentucky university a "living link." It is thought that the efforts will be successful. The students' volunteer band has pledged $200. Ten other students have pledged $10 each. It is believed that the other $300 can be made up. If the $600 is raised, Miss Stella Lewis, of near Stanford, Ky., who is now in the College of the Bible preparing for work on the foreign field, will be sent to Japan or India next fall.

J. W. Smith, familiarly called "Senator" by the boys, after finishing in the College of the Bible, has gone to Texas Christian university for his A. B. E. B. B.

From Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.

Since I last reported we held the Christmas service of our Bible-school at Waynesboro, on Dec 23. A peculiar feature for such an entertainment was the baptism of two young men at the close of the program, but why should it not be thus at the celebration of the Savior's birth? Another young man was baptized on Christmas day, and the school took an offering for boys' and girls' rally day for America.

J. Murray Taylor is helping W. S. Hoye in a meeting at Beaver Creek, Md. These two were in a fine meeting at Downsville, Md., before Christmas with 45 additions. We hope there will be as great blessing at Beaver Creek.

The writer preached four nights at Fairfield, Pa., beginning Dec. 27. Elected trustees and appointed committees which were approved by the church, forming a temporary organization. This band of 14 members give for foreign missions and home and state missions and preaching at home, while they have a debt of $1,500 on their church. They deserve help.

I am now helping H. F. Lutz in a meeting at Harrisburg (leading the song service) and preaching on Lord's day at Waynesboro. Bad weather has hindered here. Brother Lutz spent Tuesday night in Philadelphia attending the foreign missionary rally.

We expect the new chapel in southeast Washington, D. C., will be dedicated on Jan. 22; also Brother Ainslie's new house of worship in Baltimore this month. We are now entering upon strenuous efforts to secure a fine lot in Waynesboro for a new house there. Recently organized a ladies' aid and C. W. B. M., putting the sisters to work.

Clerical Types—The Itinerant.

"My year's work closes with the H——— church Dec. 31. Will be open to a call at that time. A Kentucky field would suit me better. Address A. B., H———, W. Va."

Is that ring familiar? We have observed the same little essay, bearing the same little signature, appearing annually for the past six years.

Why "my year's work"? Why can it not be written "my five, ten, twenty years' work"? Why does the earth in her circuit about the sun whirl this good brother out of the pastorate with every revolution? Why this ministerial vagrancy? Why this heavenly hoboing? Why are the West Virginia hills enticing this year, repelling next? Why is Kentucky bluegrass so bewitching to-day and Georgia watermelons to-morrow? Is it the climate which changes? Is it the wife's health which gives away? Is it a famine in the land? Is it a pestilence that wasteth at noonday? Is it a lion in the way? Is it a mole-hill assuming mountainous proportions? Is it the head of Diotrephes projecting? Is it a contracting of the currency?

Is it an awakening by sounds at the bottom of the sermon keg? Is it an arctic current coming up the church aisles? Is it a study of pew making while the harangue is being handed out in space? Or, is it, mirabile visu, the mirage of a magic city, green fields, pleasant pastures, still waters?

Why this alarming ministerial moving, this pastoral peregrinating, this circulation of clergymen, this skeddadling of sky-pilots? Brethren, don't all speak at once.—The Defender.

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all he beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs, and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

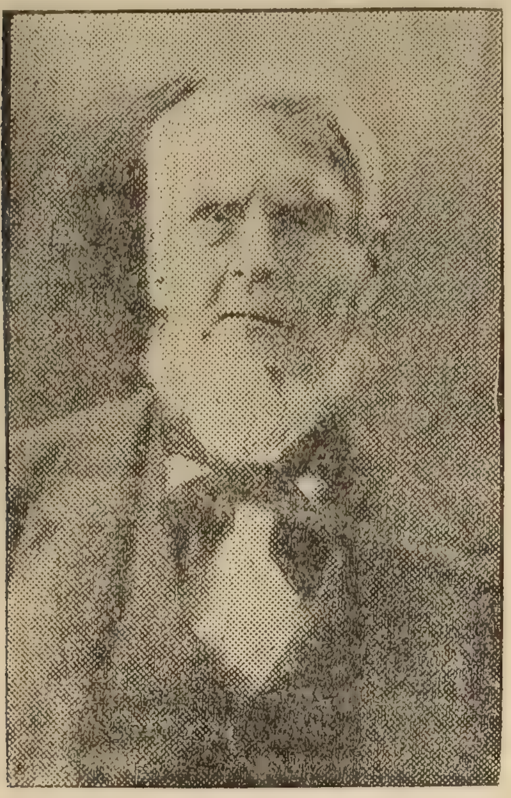
They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for hat reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

Our Oldest Preacher.

Bro. Thomas Abrams, together with five generations of his direct descendants, on Jan. 4 celebrated his ninety-ninth birthday anniversary and started into his centennial year feeble in body but with his unusually bright mental faculties practically unimpaired. He was born in Madison county, Jan. 4, 1806. While a young man he removed to Greenup county, Ky., and for many years was prominent in public affairs. He was long a magistrate of the c[illegible] and also served seven years as one of the county court judges, from which service he obtained his title. In 1857 he moved to Missouri and settled in Chariton county, where he was actively engaged in farming and merchandising until 1873, when he retired from active life. For a quarter of a century he was a magistrate in this county, but very few suits were ever tried before him, from the fact that he had the faculty of getting the disputants together and settling matters out of court. For the past thirty years he has lived a quiet life, save occasionally acting as an attorney in a justice's court, or preaching an occasional sermon, he having been for a great many years an elder in the Christian church.



JUDGE THOMAS ABRAMS.

When the undersigned went to Cunningham, Mo., in 1883, to hold a meeting and organize the church Judge Abrams was a great help and did everything in his power to build up the cause. He is a man of vigorous intellect and has always manifested a broad, liberal spirit in his dealing toward others. Brother Abrams has for many years been a preaching elder and often spoke very acceptably to the brethren. He is doubtless the oldest preacher in the brotherhood. May the Lord give him a clear intellect till his end shall come. And when, in the ripe old age of a century or more, he is called to move up higher, may he be gathered like a ripe sheaf into the garner of God

The Dungan Bible Chair.

Some time ago I noticed the announcement in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of the preliminary steps that had been taken toward endowing a chair in the Bible department of Christian university in honor of D. R. Dungan. The matter impressed me as one of the most appropriate steps taken in a forward movement in recent years. Why not? Brother Dungan is widely known for his heroic and constant work for more than a quarter of a century. He was one of the giants in the pioneer days of this middle western work of our brethren. He stood for the faith against infidelity, universalism, adventism, and every other danger of the churches in an early day. He wrote "On the Rock" when the battle was just beginning this side the Mississippi. Perhaps no other book has brought so many to see the plea for the rightful place of the New Testament scriptures as the only rule of faith and practice. Thousands have gotten their first glimpse of the light through the arguments set forth in this work. It has been loaned and re-read until one copy has done the work of a dozen. Then, Brother Dungan has not diminished in stature as the world has moved on. He is in his usual commanding position to-day as of old. He has been painstaking, careful, earnest, studious, profound, and yet he has kept himself close to the great world of study, toil, and strife. While as old and as dignified as a patriarch, he is as young and as companionable as a Scotch lad in his teens. What more tender service could those who have shared the results of this life given to the Lord's work, and what more noble tribute could be laid at the end of a long and faithful service, than the endowment of the Bible college of Christian university in memory of D. R. Dungan? In all parts of this and other lands live those who have sat under his preaching, or have received instruction under him in Drake, or Cotner, or Canton, or have been led to a better appreciation of the riches of the grace of God through his trenchant pen. If this finds a response in your heart as you read it, let the world hear from you through some one of our church papers, and, what is also necessary, if God has prospered you, let your money talk. Here is three cheers for the Sage of Canton and for the endowment movement!

Maryville, Mo. H. A. DENTON.

Improvements at Huntsville.

The first Sunday of the new year, T. A. Abbott re-dedicated our recently remodeled church building at Huntsville. Two thousand four hundred dollars worth of improvements were made. A lecture room with a seating capacity of 150 is the main feature of the new work. The pulpit is equidistant from the rear of both the old and the new buildings and hearing from any part of the house is easy. The entire seating capacity is now 480. The work on the main building as well as the new makes the church modern without great cost. The amount of indebtedness was raised by Brother Abbott and the people rejoice in the victory. I am now in a meeting ably assisted by a chorus of thirty voices. There have been five additions and the congregation is working, confident that there will be a large ingathering.

Christian University Notes.

The new year has brought a slight increase in attendance.——President Johann recently made a trip to Chicago in the interest of Christian university.——Col. G. W. Waters and Charles Lacock are now in the field as agents of Christian university. They are working for increased endowment and soliciting new students.

About the middle of February A. P. Cobb will hold a meeting for the Canton church. The students are looking forward to hearing Brother Cobb with much pleasure and the church anticipates large results.

E. M. Carr and D. G. Dungan, two students, recently closed a meeting at Marceline, Ill., with 14 additions. During the meeting they dedicated the new church building at that place.

Prof. H. D. Williams, who preaches regularly at Loraine and Ursa, Ill., recently baptized seven young people at the former place and added three others to the church by letter.

Wednesday evening, Jan. 11, J. E. Rains, L. Hulser, C. F. Pierce and C. V. Pierce were ordained to the ministry at the church in this city.

Recently J. Carroll Starke visited Christian university. His grandchildren, son and daughter of Dr. Pease, of Hamilton, Ill., are students here. During his stay he spoke one evening at the church on "Reminiscences of Our Pioneer Preachers."

Tuesday, Jan. 31, there will be a foreign missionary rally here led by Pres. A. McLean. The following day President McLean will lead a rally at the Quincy church. These rallies will be worth attending by all brethren within 50 miles.

Cancer below the Eye—Cured with Soothing, Balmy Oils.

Claypool, Ind., June 30, 1904.

Dr D M Bye Co., Indianapolis Ind

GENTLEMEN I will endeavor to write what the treatment of the Combination Oil Cure has done for my cancer. It was December when I first corresponded with you, and how hard it was to convince me, even after the literature had been sent, that cancer could be cured I had been taught from my youth up that cancers could not be cured by man. I was induced to send for a month's treatment At the time I begun treatment the cancer, which was located beneath my left eye, protruded to such an extent that I could not wear my glasses and the sight of my left eye was impaired It had been growing for about six years, beginning when I was 72 years old; am now 78. My father before me had a cancer that caused his death. After using your treatment as you instructed, my cancer was entirely eradicated and today there is hardly a scar left and the sight of the eye is nearly as strong as the other one praise the Lord My neighbors say that this cure is marvelous I hope that your name will never die and that your souls will forever find rest in Him. Your unworthy servant healed and saved to the uttermost JOSIAH REED.

Ohio Letter.

C. W. Huffer went home with the passing of the old year. The Ohio brotherhood mourns the departure of the sainted man. No man ever gave himself more unselfishly to the ministry of the word. He was a very successful pastor-evangelist and baptized hundreds of people. His only ambition was to serve. He loved his Lord with a consuming passion. He was unselfish to a fault. Surely his will be a well-starred crown. May God bless his memory to us and comfort the wife and children.

J. O. Shelburne of Toledo Central is preaching in a meeting at Bowling Green where Clyde Darsie ministers.

J. V. Updike is preaching for a meeting at Ada where J. H. Miller has done efficient work for two years. Updike is a good man for that college town. Uhrichsville has shown good judgment in selecting a successor to C. P. Allison in the person of Chas. Darsie, of Paulding. As bishop of Paulding county Brother Darsie has an enviable record. Uhrichsville will give him plenty to do but a devoted force to help do it. Paulding already has a man on the hook, so don't write to ask for Brother Darsie's place

Walter S. Willis, of Kentucky, is welcomed by the church at Ironton and the Ohio Disciples as a new man among our preaching force. Kentucky was loath to give him up but we are glad to get him.

H. Newton Miller, of Newark, is preaching for W. A. Roush this month at Mt. Vernon. Grant Spear will assist Brother Miller in the Newark meeting beginning Feb. 5.——W. W. Harris is telling the way of life to the sinners at Big Springs where Will Harris preaches half time.——W. S. Priest reports a very successful year at the Central in Columbus. Brother Priest has demonstrated that the only thing that will make the "down town" church go is constant and persistent hard work.——John E. Pounds has been spending the month of January in a meeting at Rudolph in Wood county.

There are some things now and then that indicate that the "world do move." 1904 has the fewest lynchings of any year since 1885—86 last year. It is also a remarkable fact that there was no lynching in the United States in the month of November, the first month without lynchings for 20 years. Ohio has one to her discredit for 1904 and Springfield gets the dishonor for this. There was also a decrease in homicides in the past year. Fewer men were legally executed the past year than for the past five years. The only successful remedy for all these is the gospel of our Lord. The city of Cleveland was greatly shocked Sunday, Jan. 15, by the death of Judge H. C. White. He had been probate jude of Cuyahoga county since 1887. He was a very prominent figure in the history of the Disciples in northeastern Ohio. He was a faithful Christian man and his daily deeds of charity will be sorely missed by many. He was loyal to the Sunday-school and his quarterly reviews of the lessons illustrated by the stereopticon have attracted wide attention by the Sunday-school workers and also always drew a full house. He will be sorely missed by the Euclid avenue church.

The Fourth avenue church in Columbus will be formally set apart to the service of God Sunday, February 19. F. M. Rains will take the offering.

Virginia.

C. N. Williams and the young church at Newlands are to erect a house of worship in the near future. This congregation was organized by J. T. T. Hendley, of Norfolk, and is the only one of our people in the county.

The brethren at Ephesus under the leadership of C. N. Williams are planning for a new house this coming summer.

S. W. Glascock, who just closed a two years' pastorate with a group of churches in the Tidewater district, will probably locate in the Valley of Virginia, at Winchester, and preach for a group of churches near.

H. C. Combs will hold a short meeting at East Radford, beginning on the fourth Sunday of January. S. L. Jackson ministers here.

The Norfolk church, under the capable leadership of J. T. T. Hendley, is making rapid strides forward. The house is full at every service, and on Wednesday night the Sunday-school room is taxed to accommodate those who attend the midweek prayer service. A mission, or perhaps two of them, will be established by this congregation in the near future. Brother Hendley has organized a class for Bible study. There are about 25 enrolled and everybody seems enthusiastic.

E. B. Kemm, our Blacksburg man, is doing a good work. With a membership of 44 or 45 the attendance at prayer-meeting in November averaged 40; in December 44. If the attendance at prayer-meeting is the thermometer which indicates the spirituality of the church, the Blacksburg congregation would send the mercury very close to 100.

W. G. Johnston has recently held a successful meeting with the Danville church, where J. A. Spencer is the much loved preacher.

J. J. Haley has just moved into his own house in Richmond. He evidently believes a preacher should have a "local habitation" as well as a name, and intends to remain in Richmond. Three Richmond preachers, J. J. Haley, H. P. Atkins and B. H. Melton, now own their homes.

The "one win one" plan, with the card system as inaugurated by B. H. Melton, had at the end of the week brought the names of 40 persons to the preachers, which means that these 40 are now the objects of special prayer and work by B. H. Melton and his church.

Some Education Day Thoughts.

In one of our journals, recently, a brother grounds an appeal for the observance of Education Day (the third Sunday in January) on the general policy of "church schools for church people." I heartily endorse the growing sentiment among us as a people to endow our educational institutions and equip them for their great religious mission, for there is no complete education that does not recognize the value of the religious impulse. The thoughtful educators of America are practically a unit on the proposition that complete education must transmit the religious heritage of the race as well as the "scientific, literary, esthetic and institutional." In a word, education is "a gradual adjustment to the spiritual possessions of the race," says Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university.

But I must just as heartily protest against the ground of the appeal, and the manifest fear of state schools as dangerous to faith, as I have heartily favored the appeal itself. I too am an alumnus of Drake and would gladly see this splendid school endowed beyond all chance of decline, and raised to meet the demands of modern instruction. However, I do not think "church schools for church people" a worthy policy for such an institution, and certainly not worthy for a people whose distinctive plea is the union of all Christians. "Church schools for church people" is a divisive principle, and its application has not contributed anything toward Christian union, but rather toward the establishment of denominationalism on a permanent basis. The natural corollary of such a principle is Presbyterian schools for Presbyterians, Methodist schools for Methodists, Congregational schools for Congregationalists, Catholic schools for Catholics, and, worst corollary of all, state universities for the unbelievers and indifferent. Yet all Christians of every denomination are contributing to the already great endowment of these state institutions. The future of these schools is no longer in question. Millions are flowing into their treasuries. Moreover, over fifty per cent of the students in them are avowedly members of the various churches. If the policy here opposed could find rigid application the percentage of church members in attendance at state universities would decrease to the point that the most securely endowed institutions in the land would be left in the hands of the religiously indifferent and nonreligious elements in the great commonwealths of our republic, and the regents and faculties of these church-forsaken universities, if they were so disposed, might then treat with completest indifference the whole question of religious education, leaning securely back in the two great comfortable arm-chairs which the national and all state constitutions have provided for indifferent people, and which the denominations by their attitude have excellently upholstered in leather. I refer on the one hand, to the doctrine of the separation of church and state; on the other hand, to the prohibition clause in the organic act of every state university and I think logically also in that of every agricultural college and normal school, by which all sectarian instruction is forever excluded and forbidden.

If the dream of all those who would rejoice to see every church member of college age housed and taught in church schools could be realized—and I confess that with sufficient zeal and generosity to place all church schools or a representative few in each state on a competitive basis, coupled with parental urging and authority, it might be realized—we would present to the world the strange spectacle, certainly unchristian, of educational division doubly divided. All Christians of every faith would be gathered into one party standing over against the state schools of higher learning filled with the sons and daughters of the non-church party of the nation, while each church would house its own sons and daughters zealously in its own colleges and universities. And by the advocacy of such an educational policy zealous Christians expect to bring about the union of Christ's followers and to evangelize the nation! WILLIAM HOLLAND MATLOCK.

Is It Respectable?

I have read with much interest the articles on education in the issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for Jan. 12. In the first of these, written by Brother Hill M. Bell, I see a paragraph which gives a very humiliating account of our Bible colleges, terminating in these words: "There is not a single Bible college that has the necessary buildings or equipment, the endowment or the faculty, that can command the respect even of ourselves."

I don't know how this may strike the presidents and professors in these colleges generally, but as respects the one over which I have the honor of presiding, I cannot gain my own consent to let this judgment pass unchallenged. I therefore solicit space in which to briefly set forth the facts respecting it, and leave the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to judge for themselves whether it is worthy of respect. In doing so I will follow the specifications given in the sentence just quoted.

First, as to buildings and equipment. Our main college edifice is an admirably built and imposing structure, regarded generally as an ornament to our city. It is ample for the accommodation of three hundred students and six professors. It contains, besides six large lecture rooms, two large and elegant society halls, a chapel with seats for three hundred persons, a library and reading room the same size as the chapel, and a well selected library of about three thousand volumes. The library has an endowment of $5,000. We have three brick dormitories containing 46 rooms besides the kitchen and dining room. The inmates are organizing as a boarding club, and they feed about 160 students at an expense each of from $1.50 to $1.75 per week. We have also the free use of a well equipped gymnasium belonging to Kentucky university, the cost of which was about $12,000 and the work in it is conducted under the constant oversight of a competent physical director.

Second, as to endowment. Of this we have nothing to boast of. Our present cash endowment is $88,000 against which there is a small indebtedness which we hope soon to remove. But we are now actively engaged in soliciting an addition to this of $100,000, of which about $80,000 has been secured in cash and solvent notes, and it is confidently believed that the rest will be secured by the close of the present session. We shall then have the ownership or free use of real estate worth about $50,000, and a cash endowment of $188,000; and with this equipment we shall consider ourselves at least respectable.

Third, as to faculty. Our professors, besides myself, are four in number; namely, I. B. Grubbs, A. M., B. C. Deweese, A. M., S. M. Jefferson, A. M., LL. D., and Hall L. Calhoun, Ph. D. I am bold to say of these four men that in their respective departments they have no superiors; and as to the number of them, they are sufficient to give instruction in all the courses peculiar to our college. In addition to these, we have the services, as freely as if they belonged to us, of the whole faculty of the College of Liberal Arts of Kentucky university; and I can say of these that they will bear favorable comparison as scholars and instructors with teachers of undergraduates anywhere to be found.

There is another element of respectability of which Brother Bell says nothing, but which is the best and final test. It is the kind of preachers that go forth from us. More than five hundred of these have graduated, and more than 2,000 have gone out with sufficient training to become effective preachers. Among them there are great preachers, teachers, authors, college presidents and professors, editors and a host who go everywhere preaching the word. When our college respectability is called in question we can afford to point to these and say nothing. We now have in attendance about 180 more whom we hope to soon add to the preceding.

In view of these facts, so briefly stated, we do enjoy the "respect of ourselves," and we hope by stating them to secure the respect of even Bro. Hill M. Bell.

FREE TO EVERYONE.

Priceless Book Sent Free for the Asking.

"There be books and books;" some edifying, others entertaining, and still others instructive. The average man is so busily engaged in the labor of money making, that he has little time and less inclination for books which instruct; hence, when he feels out of sorts, either he gives no heed to Nature's warning, or he consults a physician, at an expense which a little knowledge would have enabled him to avoid.

There is probably no complaint upon which the public is so little informed, as hemorrhoids, or piles; this small book tells all about their causes and cure; it treats of the different forms of blind, bleeding, itching and protruding piles; describes their symptoms, and points the way to a cure so simple and inexpensive, that anyone can understand and apply.

All affections of the rectum are treated in simple, plain language, so that all may understand, and learn how the cause may be removed. Many people suffer from piles, because after trying the numerous lotions, ointments and salves that are on the market, without relief, they come to the conclusion that a surgical operation is the only thing left to try, and rather than submit to the shock and risk to life of an operation, prefer to suffer on.

This little book tells how this may be avoided, and a cure be effected without pain, inconvenience or detention from business. Write your name and address plainly on a postal card, mail to the Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., and you will receive the book promptly.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ALABAMA.

Moline, Jan. 12.—There were five additions to the church here during the month of December, and at the morning service last Sunday, there were eight. In the past 18 months 94 persons have united with the church and all at regular services. We hope to begin our new church within a few weeks.—Claude E. Hill.

CALIFORNIA.

Monrovia, Jan. 16.—I began here Jan. 1. This is a new field for our people. A town of about 2,500 on electric and steam railroad 15 miles northeast of Los Angeles. We have enlisted 21 thus far. Expect to about double this number. We will buy a lot, call a minister, and organize all departments of church work before we leave. Yesterday had our first Sunday-shool. We had set our mark at 50, and 51 were present. Prof. J. A. Carroll is our singer. The south California board has called Prof. J. Walter Wilson, of Indiana, to be with me after this meeting. Indifference is great, hearing small and work hard.—Sumner T. Martin.

COLORADO.

Canon City, Jan. 16.—Another addition Lord's day, making two not previously reported, both of them heads of families. We are preparing for a great union meeting under the leadership of "Billy" Sunday.—I. H. Teel.

ILLINOIS.

Lawrenceville, Jan. 17.—Meeting in progress with 20 additions to date and large audiences. Home forces exclusively.—L. H. Stine.

Belle Plains, Jan. 6.—I am in a good meeting here with the pastor, R. E. Orahood, with five confessions to date.—J. P. Davis.

Chicago Heights, Jan. 16.—We had another addition at evening service, from the Presbyterians. I will preach in the union mission, Jan. 28.—Harry E. Tucker.

Windsor, Jan. 17.—Meeting at Janesville, with 13 additions: nine by confession, four by commendation. I will preach for them the coming year once a month. I have accepted the work another year at Hindsboro for half time and at Etna once a month. I had one baptism at Etna the first Lord's day in January. These churches are all in good condition.—A. H. Harrell.

Arcola, Jan. 17.—The annual meeting of the Arcola church, for the year 1904, was held Jan. 11. The reports showed that $3,046.09 was collected and expended during the year: $425.96 for missions and benevolence; $2,620.13 for local work including the expense of two meetings. There were 197 added to the church—50 of these have not been reported before. Forty were received during a meeting that closed Dec. 16, when C. R. Scoville and DeLoss Smith helped us a few nights. I began my fifth year with this congregation Jan. 1. We had a membership of 150 four years ago, 305 have been added and 51 lost by death, letter and otherwise; leaving a present membership of 407.—L. T. Faulders.

Old Berea, Jan. 16.—The church here has been reorganized. C. E. French held a meeting with 16 additions; four more since. We have employed Brother French for half time; he preaches the other half at Ashland.—Rinda Harris.

Quincy.—The First church, where Walter M. Jordan and wife have for one year been located, is just closing a prosperous year under their able direction. The total membership is 655, a net gain of 47 with no protracted meeting during the year. There were 79 additions. The total receipts for the year were $3,048, of which $895 was pledged for steam heat apparatus. We issue a weekly bulletin of announcements and order of exercises. All departments of the church have advanced, and are doing good work, and we look forward to greater things in the Master's name during 1905.—Julius J. Williams, clerk.

Ludlow, Jan. 18.—Our meeting at Eagleville, Mo., closed with 10 additions, two societies organized, Christian Endeavor and a Junior. Our seventh discussion with Mormons closed Jan. 8, at Hatfield, Mo. Large crowds all the time. Beginning Dec. 1, 1904, I made 56 speeches and sermons in 39 days.—Thomas H. Popplewell.

INDIANA.

Evansville, Jan. 12.—Began meeting here with home forces last Lord's day. Packed house and one addition first day.—Allen T. Shaw, pastor Bethany church.

Markle, Jan. 17.—We began a gospel campaign here last Sunday. This is my third meeting at this place. Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Stevens, of Gas City, are helping with the singing. Prospects are bright.—M. G. Long, minister.

New Castle, Jan. 15.—In the great meeting in progress at New Lancaster, near Elwood, there have been 186 additions up to last Friday evening—nearly all baptisms. Whole families have come into Christ. A strong new church will be one of the direct results of the meeting. A few evenings ago a capable corps of officers was selected and things set in order for permanent service and worship. The meeting has been a great source of spiritual blessing to the entire community. Brothers Redgrave, Cooper and Foster have paid us kindly visits during the revival. Bro. J. W. Wittcamper, of Elwood, will tide the revival over until I return Monday; and on that evening I will resume it. I am nearly worn out with the long evangelistic siege, doing all the preaching and baptizing myself. Will close the meeting next Wednesday eve to take my new pastorate here. Outlook is bright in New Castle for a glorious work. I find here a most gracious and hospitable people, and a good solid church. More anon.—L. C. Howe, evangelist.

Huntington.—We are in a fine meeting with the Brooks Brothers, with nearly 100 added to the church. Thirty were baptized yesterday, and fourteen made the confession today. Numbers are turned away at every service, and the largest audience ever preached to in Huntington was at the afternoon service held in the new opera house when W. T. Brooks spoke to 1,500 people on "The New Citizen," and hundreds were turned away. The meeting will continue this week.—Cephas Shelburne.

Rochester.—We are in a very interesting meeting with the West Madison avenue church, Cleveland, O., with three confessions to date. Our meeting is a part of a co-operative city campaign of all our Cleveland churches. We are all hoping for a great service.—C. H. DeVoe and H. R. Shields, evangelists.

IOWA.

Keokuk, Jan. 14.—One confessed Christ here last night, two last Sunday. To-day I go to Atlanta, Ill., to help S. S. Lappin in a meeting.—J. W. Kilborn.

Udell, Jan. 14.—We are in a fine meeting here. In six days five have been added. Large crowds and the town stirred. We have a large chorus of young voices that greatly assist in the music. We hope to help locate a pastor. We are arranging for spring and summer dates. Our permanent address is Topeka, Kas.—C. C. Atwood, Nelson Gardner, general evangelists.

Des Moines, Jan. 14.—In an hour of sacred fellowship our short meeting under the leadership of Bro. Chas. M. Sharpe came to its close last evening. There were 43 additions to the church, 18 by primary obedience.—Chas. S. Medbury.

Brooklyn.—The report for year ending Dec. 31, 1904, shows receipts: The church, $3 509 94, ladies' aid, $189, Sunday-school, $85.53, total $3,784.47. Additions 15. Losses seven. Present membership 56. L. W. Spayd, for the past 11 months minister of the church, begins his second year Feb. 1. The $2,600 church debt, on which but $1,329.50 in cash and pledges was secured on dedication day a year ago, is now all paid but $1,140, and this is covered in good pledges except $190. Though so few in numbers, the church has not failed for a single week to pay the minister in full his weekly dues on Monday morning. In this they have broken a record in their minister's 25 years of service for the churches. Though not yet two and a half years old, the church begins its fourth series of evangelistic meetings on Jan. 29. J. H. Stark, of Montezuma, is to be the evangelist. They find it hard to get a good foothold in their town of 1,200 population with five churches for years in the field before they began. However, as a little fish in the pool, it hopes by vigilance to keep from being swallowed up by those bigger ones, and itself to grow big enough to swallow some of them, if that ever seems the proper thing to do.—L. W. Spayd.

KANSAS.

Hutchinson, Jan. 17.—D. Y. Donaldson is helping us in a meeting at Nickerson; there are ten accessions to date.—C. W. Van Dolah.

Lyons, Jan. 18.—Meeting ten days old with 25 added. Geo. E. Lyons is the pastor. There is a deep interest.—O. E. Hamilton, evangelist, F. A. Wilkinson, singer.

Downs, Jan. 15.—The members of the church of Christ worshiping at Downs, held their annual church meeting January 8. At the close of the evening sermon two made the good confession, three were added by statement and one that had been baptized new year's day. I. N. Aldrich has been preaching for us since June 1. The Lord is blessing our labors. Since August 15 we have had 35 additions, 27 by obedience, one from the Baptists, one from the Adventists and seven by commendation. Sister E. W. House has been of much service in the way of personal work, especially among the young people, and in leading our song services. We have just put in a new organ and a good bell. The Bible-school, prayer-meeting, Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor are doing good work.—Ira Weaver, elder.

Lyons, Jan. 16.—Meeting eight days old with 23 additions. Crowded houses nightly.—Geo. E. Lyons, pastor, Hamilton and Wilkinson, evangelists.

Stafford, Jan. 17.—We have just closed a four weeks' meeting at Iuka with 22 additions: 16 by confession and baptism and six otherwise. The church board was strengthened by adding two deacons and a clerk, and we organized a Christian Endeavor Society with 25 active members. The church is greatly encouraged. We will have a pastor soon.—G. C. Ardrey, evangelist.

Lawrence, Jan. 12.—The North Lawrence church recently held their annual business meeting when the church was found to be in the best condition it had been in for years. All lines of the work have improved, with the exception of the C. W. B. M., which will be reorganized soon. The church is warmly supporting the pastor, W. T. Clarkson. The following is taken from his report of four months: Number of additions to the church, 35, or about 50 per cent increase; average attendance at midweek prayer-meeting, 20. The Bible school has increased from average attendance of 18 to 55. The pastor organized a Christian Endeavor society in October with 18 charter members, which has increased to 32 with an average attendance of 53; six of the associate members have become active by conversion. The church is greatly encouraged over the work and has entered the campaign for "each one win one."

MICHIGAN.

Paw Paw, Jan. 16.—Our meeting here is going well. The pastor, C. M. Keene, is arousing the people as no other evangelist has ever done in this community. Eight additions to date. One was a Baptist minister who will now go out to preach the word only. My popular song recital, given for the benefit of the meeting here, was well attended, and was a success financially.—CHARLES E. MCVAY, singing evangelist.

MINNESOTA.

Minneapolis, Jan 16.—At the annual business meeting of the Portland Ave. church, held as usual on the evening of Dec. 30, the pastor reported 36 confessions and baptisms, 49 received by letter and statement, 10 baptized persons from other churches, a total of 95. Mr. Abberley also had preached 26 sermons at Bloomington, Indiana, where he had been instrumental in adding 172 to that church. The treasurer reported total receipts, $4,220.47, with a deficit of $250 in current expense account. The church missionary offerings were $762. Unpaid pledges to the current expense fund of $600 should cover the deficit. The Sunday-school had an average attendance of 135; offerings, $333 44. The woman's aid society collected $721.54, and paid to the organ fund $685. The mission band, numbering 22, raised $35 for missions. The auxiliary has 79 active and 47 associate members, and the offerings were $436.20. Missionary offerings from the S. S. and C. E. combined amounted to $136. Total missionary offerings from all sources amounted to $1,369. Mr. Abberley thinks that if material evidences indicate anything they should inspire us to begin the new year of 1905 with renewed hope and zeal for doing good work in the kingdom of God. Surely if the church members can be induced to work as hard as their pastor has done the church will take on new life. At present we are holding all our services in the lecture room, as the workmen monopolize the use of the auditorium in putting in a new pipe organ, which will cost us about $3,300. The Sunday-school has put an elegant new piano into the auditorium, and is paying for it promptly in monthly installments. A new plan has just been adopted in the prayer-meetings. A different member of the church is appointed to lead each evening; and the last half hour of every meeting is devoted to a study of the life of Christ, conducted by the pastor. This proves exceedingly interesting, the first evening of the study doubling the attendance at the meeting.—A. M. CHOATE.

MISSOURI.

Bolivar, Jan. 16.—Two by statement and one from the church of God since last report.—J. H. JONES.

St. Louis, Jan. 9.—There were two additions by primary obedience to the Fourth church, yesterday.—E. T. MCFARLAND.

Golden City, Jan. 23.—R. B. Havener, Bible-school evangelist, has just closed a meeting of 15 days resulting in 16 additions: seven by confession and obedience, the others from the different religious bodies. The church was uplifted and strengthened and encouraged to move forward.—MRS. ANN GARNER.

NEW JERSEY.

Plainfield, Jan. 14.—Two confessions during week of prayer in preparation for revival meeting to begin Jan. 15, with Bro. George T. Smith, of Chicago. Good interest prevails.—PHIL. A. PARSONS, pastor.

OHIO.

Mansfield, Jan. 16.—I am in a meeting here at home with 42 additions, 39 confessions, first two weeks. Our audiences pack our great building. Prof. Theo. Fitz, of New York, is leading the music. The work here moves on beyond all our hopes. We have secured over 250 weekly pledges to current expenses.—BRUCE BROWN.

[What church can beat that number of weekly pledges? We would like to know what proportion this number bears to the total membership.—EDITOR.]

Wilmington, Jan. 16.—We have added 38 here in two weeks. This promises to be a great meeting. Bro. E. J. Meacham, the pastor, is held in high esteem as a pure, consecrated man of God. This is more than half the battle in a good meeting.—JAMES SMALL.

Carthage.—At the annual meeting of the Christian church the reports from the various departments of work showed the best results for years. The treasury of every organization showed all obligations met and a cash balance on hand. Over $2,000 was raised for different purposes. The Sunday-school especially is in a flourishing condition, having an enrollment of 175, an average attendance of 123, and raised $617.54. Plans were set on foot to make 1905 even better than the past year. Chas. M. Fillmore is pastor.

McArthur.—Owen Livengood just closed a nine days' meeting, with one baptism. The congregation was greatly strengthened, and full-time preaching is being considered. His lecture at the close of the series, "Through the Holy Land on Horseback," was well received. An effort was made to place a Christian paper in each home; it was largely successful.

Athens, Jan. 16.—Three added in the last week or two: one young woman from the Baptists and two young men, one by letter, the other by baptism.—T. L. LOWE.

Marion, Jan. 16.—Two added by letter at the Central church yesterday. Revival begins Jan. 23. Brother Maple, our pastor, will hold it.—MRS. FOSTER, clerk.

OREGON.

Portland, Jan. 13.—I began my second year's work for the First church January 1, 1905, the church having extended a unanimous call for a second year while I was at the St. Louis convention. 1904 was a prosperous year for us. There were 72 additions, 48 of which were by letter. On new year's day we raised more than $2,000 on our $9,000 debt. We expect 1905 to be still a more prosperous year. —E. S. MUCKLEY.

Albany, Jan. 11.—W. E. Harlow and Leroy St. John began with us January 1. Ten have been added to the church so far. Our hopes are high for the coming days.—CLARK BOWER, minister.

TEXAS.

Austin, Jan. 12.—Recently 12 persons more have been added to the church at our regular meetings: five by confession and baptism, one from another religious body, and the rest by letter and commendation.—J. W. LOWBER.

WASHINGTON.

Spokane, Jan. 16.—Began the third week yesterday. Thirty added to date with a rising tide. Evangelist Burton is at the helm.—B. E. UTZ.

Walla Walla, Jan. 15.—We have had seven confessions and one from denominations since Jan. 1. Will try to report regularly in future. —MORTON GREGORY.

JACOB AT JACOB'S WELL.—John 4:5-14.

Memory verses 13, 14.

Golden Text.—Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.—Rev. 22:17.

The incidents between the former lesson and the present one are too important to be omitted. After the opening of the Judean ministry at Jerusalem, with the cleansing of the temple and the conversation with Nicodemus, Jesus went with his three or four disciples through some of the country districts of Judea. John the Baptist was still baptizing in Ænon ("because there was much water there") and Jesus and his disciples also began baptizing. We have no specific record of the preaching which accompanied this baptism or of the meaning which was put into it. Certainly it was not identical in significance with Christian baptism after the death and resurrection of Christ. Probably it carried with it much the same meaning as John's baptism, namely: (1) personal repentance; (2) allegiance to that new regime which was being proclaimed under the name, the kingdom of God, in which righteousness, and not ritual or race, was to be the principle of selection.

At any rate, it is not recorded that the preaching and baptizing of Jesus produced any different effect from that of John's similar activities, except that Jesus gained more followers. On the basis of this fact, an attempt was made to stir up jealousy between them. John's answer was a free and glad admission that Jesus was the real and great teacher whose star should wax while his should wane.

But Jesus was as generous as John. He was unwilling to put John in the position of a prophet whose cry had lost its power and he did not wish to allow the least ground for suspicion that they were rivals. So he departed for Galilee (John 4:1-3). Matthew and Mark add that this withdrawal to Galilee occurred when Jesus heard that John was cast into prison, which certainly defines the time of the event and probably furnishes an additional motive. Jesus was as cautious as he was brave, and he had no wish to encounter fatal opposition before his time.

The journey to Galilee was made through Samaria—the direct route but unusual for a Jew—and it was broken by a stop at Sychar where Jesus first declared his Messiahship to the woman at Jacob's well. (The whole incident should be studied, through verse 42.) The episode and the discourse connected with it contain many points which invite comment. The following deserve special thought:

1. Jesus, though a Jew, did not share the narrow particularism of his people. While he limited his direct teaching in the main to the Jews, it is clear from such incidents as this that he did not feel the Jewish antipathy to Gentiles.

2. The terms "meat" and "drink" as applied to spiritual truth (verses 14 and 32) show the true relation of man to the eternal verities. They are not something extra which may be added to life; they do not form an appendix or a supplement to the present human life; they are a part of it, as necessary and natural as the food which sustains the body. This is so because of the nature of man and his relation to God.

3. Jesus was not to be turned aside from the main issue by irrelevant questions, nor was he to be forced to adopt one of two alternatives offered by the contending partisans of his day. "In this mountain or in Jerusalem?" He was a Jew, but he would ally himself with neither faction on this point. He turned from the question as to the place of worship to speak of the spirit of it.

4. The faith which began in the acceptance of testimony ended in a personal experience (verse 42). We need not be afraid of "religious experience," however much the term has been abused and the thing perverted.

A PARABLE OF HOPE.

"And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed upon the earth; and should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should spring up and grow, he knoweth not how. The earth beareth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear. But when the fruit is ripe, straightway he putteth forth the sickle, because the harvest is come" (Mark 4:26-29).

This is one of a series of parables used by our Lord to explain different phases and principles of his kingdom. He draws a likeness between his kingdom and something that is well known, in order that the known may explain the unknown.

The seed and the soil. Agriculture is as old as the life of man on the earth. Seed-sowing and harvesting are among the most common experiences of life. The seed sown must be alive, and the earth upon which it is sown must possess some degree of fertility, if any harvest is to result. Dead seed sown upon lifeless soil would be labor in vain. "So is the kingdom of God." Its seed is the word of God (Luke 8:11). It is "living, and active" (Hebrew 4:12). The soil is the human heart, or in other words, the hearers of the word (Matthew 13:19). The casting of seed upon the earth is the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom.

The growing seed. The man that sows good seed in good soil can "sleep and rise night and day," and the seed will "spring up and grow." He may not understand the mysterious process of vegetable life and growth, but the seed will spring up all the same. It is so with the preached word. We can never tell what the results will be, but we can rest assured that if the truth be spoken, it will find a lodgment somewhere in good soil, and will spring up and grow and bear fruit. We may not be able to understand how a simple truth may revolutionize a life, but we know it often does it. Here is encouragement to sow beside all waters. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good" (Eccles. 11:6).

Christian life a development. It is a wrong idea that Christian life comes to its maturity at birth. This is no more true in the spiritual than it is in the physical world. The divine law of progress is, "first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear" (Mark 4:28). Evangelists must not be discouraged if outward results do not follow as soon as they could hope. Neither should pastors be discouraged if young converts do not come to maturity as speedily as they could wish. It is good for us to remember this law of progressive development in the kingdom of God.

Encouraging. This parable ought to encourage Christian workers. The seed of the kingdom is vital and life-producing. The human heart to which it appeals, is adapted to this gospel and will respond to it as the earth responds to the seed that is sown in it (Mark 4:28). And then the harvest follows with certainty (Mark 4.29). What seed are we sowing, and what shall be the harvest of our lives?

Prayer. O, Thou, Lord of the harvest, who hast called us to be co-laborers with Thee in saving man, we thank Thee for the hope held out to us in this parable. We thank Thee for the living Word which Thou art, and which Thou hast given to us, and we thank Thee that Thou hast so made the human heart that nothing but Thyself can satisfy its deepest longings. May we preach and teach Thy word faithfully, broadcasting it in the hearts of men, and wilt Thou be pleased to give it the increase, and grant us a bountiful and joyful harvest. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

Christian Endeavor.

By H. A. Denton.

February 5, 1905.

WHAT I OWE TO CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR. Ezek. 47:1-12: Ps. 36:8.

(Christian Endeavor Day.)

For the Leader.

This is Christian Endeavor Day. It has not been long since the Endeavor movement had its origin in that little Congregational church under the leadership of Francis E. Clark as pastor. It brought such new life to this church that other churches began to hear of it and to ask about the methods of organization and work. As you know, when this first society of Christian Endeavor was organized there was no thought of the great world-wide and interdenominational movement with which we are now identified. But this desire to enlist and pledge and put to work was touched off at Williston church, and the results showed that the whole church of the Lord was ready for something of the kind. Societies began to be organized in all parts of the country and in almost all the churches. It was the beginning of a young people's movement for better things in the church. Great was its enthusiasm at the beginning, but it was no greater than the splendid, deeply spiritual, and wisely directed enthusiasm of the movement to-day. Let us consider what this organization of the young people has meant and is meaning to the kingdom of our Lord.

For the Members.

1. Ezekiel's river has been likened unto Christian Endeavor: rising in the house of God, and getting its power from this source of all power; growing slowly but steadily deeper and wider until it reaches every land and people; wakening everything on either side of it into life, bringing the cheer, the vigor, the growth of youth back to the church. Has our local society been conducted so that it fits into this imagery? It is our work to see that it is so conducted.

2. The mechanical features of Christian Endeavor are not ends in themselves; that is, they are not for the simple sake of having committees, a pledge, written reports, officers, socials, public meetings—not this, but in order that we may, through these means, do the work our Lord would have us do. Now if we never carry any part of our Endeavor work beyond the mechanical, we will just so long fail in the realization of the gratifying results that are reported from week to week in Christian Endeavor papers. The key word of Christian Endeavor is "Whatever he would have me do."

3. But let us avoid the mistake of some who see the abuse of the means, the mechanical features of Christian Endeavor, and begin to dispense with means and organization altogether. They fail to locate the trouble. It is not in having committees, and reports, and all the machinery of the movement, but in failing to use them properly. That is all. Then the remedy is not to quit work, but to get at it in the right way and to the fullest extent. How much improved would be the condition of a society that would become dissatisfied with what it styles "mechanical work" and go back to practically no work—to quit any special effort, to oppose progress in methods, cut out the increase campaign, and so drum along as time and chance would take it? It would certainly be no better off than if it had all its machinery at work in a purely mechanical way. Maybe, not so good.

4. But why have either? There is no profit in a work to which we bring no heart, no effort, no careful planning. That is what some societies are doing. They are drifting along like that. Is it any wonder they think Christian Endeavor has reached a crisis? Yet the truth is they have reached a crisis, not Christian Endeavor. And there is no profit—or but little—to do the Lord's work as a machine, to do it "mechanically," as some put it. The Lord has no pleasure in wheels for the sake of having wheels. It is to no purpose that we have all the splendid organization of Endeavor and lack the spirit and heroism to electrify it, to warm it into a living, throbbing thing of power. If we were shut up to one of these courses, then would we of all departments of the Lord's work be the most miserable. But if we use Christian Endeavor as we should, we will find in time that we owe most of our spiritual life in the church as workers to the development we have made through its many branches of Christian work.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Oh, Lord, teach me to know that whatever in Christian Endeavor has helped me is of Christ through the means of the consecrated and sensible efforts of his young people.

A Wonderful Shrub—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

New evidence shows that Alkavis, the new botanical product of the Kava-Kava Shrub, is indeed a true specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disorders of the Kidneys and Urinary organs.

A remarkable case is that of James Thomas, Esq., of the Board of Review, Bureau of Pensions, Washington, D. C., as told in the New York World of recent date. He was cured by Alkavis after many physicians had failed, and he had given up all hope of recovery.

Similar testimony of extraordinary cures of Rheumatism and Kidney and Bladder diseases of long standing, comes from many other sufferers, and 1,200 hospital cures are recorded in 30 days. So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, New York, are the only importers of Alkavis, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free sample of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis entirely free. Address Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 404 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Union college, and filled our pulpits at Mogadore, New Garden, Kensington, Fort Liverpool, Toledo and finally Lebring. He was a tireless worker and accomplished much of which a man might be proud. It was at Toledo where his health gave way under the strain and he suffered a stroke of paralysis during one of the services. He married twice and leaves three surviving children and his second wife, who was Miss Anna Sheldon. The funeral services were in charge of C. E. Taylor, pastor of the Lebright church, and John G. "The Christian Use of the Tithe System."

This tract appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the form of a serial, and in response to a quite general demand it has now been put in a convenient tract form for wide distribution. Those who believe in the principle it teaches should aid in giving it wide circulation. The adoption of this regulative principle of giving, among us, would solve more problems, cure more evils, and give a greater impetus to all our worthy enterprises than any other one thing of which we can think. It seems to be the next great forward step among us. Brother Wharton has rendered the cause of Christ great service in his treatment of this subject, and we heartily commend his tract to all who wish to honor God with their substance.' J. H. GARRISON.

The sense of comradeship which now we feel,
Grew slowly, as an oak does; and as strong.
For now to one another we belong,
In all that makes a man and woman leal;
Our lives are linked as firm as welded steel,
And in our thoughts sweet harmonies do throng
Like half remembered echoes of a song,
As days and nights above our pathway wheel.
So does the perfume and the joy of days
Live with us; and the season's sway dispute;
Spring, summer, autumn, they may go their ways,
And bring nor bud nor blossom an' it suit;
Yet what reck we, beside the wintry fire,
Sitting alone, I and my Heart's Desire.

LLOYD BAXENDALE.

By G. P. RUTLEDGE.

Author of "Pledge in Sermon."

CHAPTER XVII.

EVENTS OF THE WINTER.

During Mr. Baxendale's long illness, many things of interest transpired, but only brief mention can be made of a few.

He was constantly cheered by the thoughtful attention of his many friends. Nothing, however, afforded him so much genuine pleasure as the choice cut flowers, sent fresh each morning. The name of the sender was never revealed. Nevertheless, as the patient sufferer feasted his eyes upon the charming bouquets, he invariably beheld, in the midst of their delicate pelals, an imaginary card, bearing a name of four letters, which spoke sympathy and rest to his soul.

Mr. Randolph was a daily visitor, and many other officers and members of the Poplar Square church were likewise sympathetic and attentive.

During the critical periods of his illness, Mr. Baxendale was the pre-eminent subject of conversation in the city. From early morning until late at night the streets in front of the bulletin boards were blocked; while many special editions of the paper were run off, that the public might be kept informed as to his condition.

For weeks and months after the attempted assassination, the detective bureaus exerted themselves to apprehend the would-be assassin. Various theories gained currency and suspicion rested, from time to time, upon six or eight different men. But in each case the evidence was lacking, and to this day the crime has not been legally punished. The writer uses the word "legally," because he has reasons for believing that the culprit suffered untold agony and was finally tried before an exceptionally sympathetic judge and acquitted.

A few days after Mr. Baxendale was shot, Ralph Cunningham was stricken with typhoid fever, which proved to be a very aggravated case; he was confined to his rooms until far into the spring. Several times his life was despaired of; and after the disease had spent its force it was discovered that his reason would be permanently affected.

Owing to the frightful nature of his delirium, the nurses were discharged and he was cared for by the members of his own family; and for weeks after his convalescence became known, his most intimate friends were not permitted to see him.

When, at last, he emerged from the inexplicable seclusion in which he had been kept, his appearance resembled that of a cowed maniac rather than the bright, well-groomed Ralph Cunningham of a few months previous. He was care worn, grey and morose. His friends were told that the fever had settled in his brain. Consequently, he was universally pitied; and as is always the case, in a measure, was forgotten by his former associates.

After Mrs. Randolph's decease, Alma insisted upon superintending the home. She had dearly loved her mother, and, when she realized that she would never look into the beautiful face again on earth, a terrible sadness laid its heavy hand upon her heart. But she was not the kind of girl to grieve irreconcilably over the inevitable. She knew that her sainted mother had gone to reside in a mansion more spacious and luxurious than the one she had left, and to enjoy a life of love, comfort and pleasure, of which her happy sojourn in the society of a loving husband and a devoted daughter had been only a foretaste. She also felt that it was not her mother's desire that grief should cling, like a drooping vine, to her late home, but that the windows of hope should be kept open to let in the glad sunlight of joy, and that the flowers of devotion to duty might continue to bloom and emit sweet fragrance.

It had long been a settled question in the Randolph home that the custom of wearing mourning, which is of heathen origin, was depressing in its influence upon the community, and likewise uselessly expensive and therefore a millstone around the necks of the poor. Consequently, the principle was adhered to and a noble example set by a family which could have indulged in an extremely elaborate exhibition of this popular folly.

Mr. Randolph and his daughter often talked of "mother," and frequently referred to her as being with Jesus, waiting for them. They rejoiced together exceedingly in the hope of again meeting and living with her "beyond the shadows." Alma spent the winter and spring very busily directing home affairs, painting her mother's portrait, and praying constantly for Mr. Baxendale's recovery.

The Only Solution.

George is four years old, and has just arrived at the dignity of his first knickerbockers—with suspenders just like papa wears. They were the pride of his heart, and at night he would take them off his trousers and clasp them tight in his arms when he went to bed. His mother found them there the other night, and as they seemed to be making the little chap uncomfortable, she took them away and laid them on a chair by his bed.

The next morning he had a long interview with his mother.

"Didn't you tell me, mamma," he said, "that angels watched everything I did?"

"Yes, George."

"Are they watching me when I sleep?"

"Yes, my son, they watch over you always, whatever you are doing."

"Do they come right into my room at night?"

"Yes, dear, the good angels are everywhere, always."

"Then," said George meditatively, "I bet they've been monkeyin' with my 'spenders."—Portland Oregonian.

Martyrdom of an Uncle.

These suffering young bachelor uncles! Grace S. Richmond, in the January McClure's, gets lots of fun out of one of them, who finds a fourteen-months' old nephew on his hands for one eventful evening. "Billy's Orgy" (Billy is the nephew), in which the uncle aids and abets, includes such forbidden pleasures as jam pie and staying up till 12:30 A. M. The wrath of the returning parents may be imagined. The uncle doesn't mind, however, having been much consoled for his martyrdom by a young lady caller. It's all told in this little story.

Celery and Rheumatism.

Ho, all ye rheumatics! Celery never was finer than that which you find in the market just now. Chop up the stalks in pieces an inch and a half in length, boil them in water until soft, then drink the water. Or stew them in milk and butter, thicken with a little flour and eat warm with toast or potatoes. Rheumatism is impossible, it is said, if the vegetable be cooked and freely eaten. Besides, there is no greater delicacy than stewed celery. The value of the plant lies in the apiol, or parsley-camphor, it contains. This dilates the blood vessels and has few equals as a diaphoretic and diuretic. Anything that produces a profuse perspiration is good for the rheumatic patient. All the world knows that celery is the best absorbent a drinking man can take, and its action on the kidneys and viscera is most healthful.—New York Press.

Golden Maxims.

In the pocket of Hon. Stephen Allan, who was drowned on the "Henry Clay," was found a printed slip, apparently cut from a newspaper, from which the following is copied. It is worthy to be engraved on the heart of everyone.

"Keep good company or none.

"Never be idle; if your hands cannot be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind.

"Always speak the truth.

"If anyone speak evil of you, let your life be such that none will believe him.

"Drink no kind of intoxicating drinks.

"When you retire to bed, think over what you have done through the day.

"Avoid temptation through fear you may not withstand it.

"Earn money before you spend it.

"Do not put off till to morrow that which should be done to-day.

"Never speak evil of anyone.

"Keep pure if you would be happy.

"Save when you are young to spend when you are old."

"Read the above maxims at least once a week."

Don't Stop My Paper.

Don't stop my paper, printer;
  Don't strike my name off yet;
You know the times are stringent
  And dollars hard to get;
But tug a little harder
  Is what I mean to do
And scrape the dimes together—
  Enough for me and you.

I can't afford to drop it,
  And I find it doesn't pay
To do without a paper.
  However others may,
I hate to ask my neighbors
  To give me theirs to loan;
They don't just say, but mean it,
  "Why don't you have your own?"

You can't tell how we miss it,
  If it, by any fate,
Should happen not to reach us,
  Or come a little late;
Then all is in a hubbub
  And things go all awry:
And, printer, if you're married,
  You'll know the reason why.

The children want those stories,
  And wife is anxious, too,
At first to glance it over
  And then to read it through;
And I read the editorials
  And scan the local items,
And read the correspondence
  And every bit of news.

How Weather Predictions Are Made.

In the January World's Work there is a very clear description of the methods and principles involved in making the weather forecasts issued daily by the United States government.

Not the least valuable assistance the government renders mariners and farmers is furnished in its weather forecasts, four-fifths of which turn out to be correct. Indeed the record of the weather bureau for the past five years has been that no serious storm has occurred that has not been predicted sufficiently long in advance for all people whose interests are affected by the weather to take due precautions. Daily at eight o'clock in the morning and at eight o'clock in the evening by eastern time, observers at more than two hundred stations in the United States, Northern Mexico, Southern Canada, and the West Indies telegraph to map-making stations observations on every detail of the weather, such as temperature, humidity, the kind and the direction of clouds, and so on. At each of these stations charts made from the information in the reports are prepared for free distribution over the adjoining district. In many places in the west the weather forecast is telephoned from central telephone stations to all the farmers in the neighborhood.

The approximate accuracy of the forecasts results from the fact that the government observers know how the weather conditions move. Seven-tenths of our storms, for example, begin in the northwest, move southeast and then curve north again over the Great Lakes and disappear to the east down the St. Lawrence valley, though the West India hurricanes move first west and then northeast. The storms are located by low barometric readings and by the direction of the winds—which whirl about a storm-centre in the opposite direction to that of moving clock hands, some times spinning around a circle a thousand miles in diameter. To the east of the storm blow southerly moist winds which bring rain. To the west of the storm come winds from the west or northwest bringing colder weather. So by experience the weather observers, receiving reports of the conditions at storm-centers, can predict from the rapidity of the movement from west to east how far a storm will advance in twelve to twenty-four hours and what kind of weather will result in every quarter of it. Predictions can thus be made two or three days in advance. And now the government is building on Mount Weather, Va., an observatory for weather research. Efforts will be made there to establish forecasts of the whole seasons.

The Capture of Dewey.

Admiral Dewey's peace of mind has been greatly disturbed lately by "sight-seeing automobiles," each carrying thirty or forty people, which stop in front of his home three times a day, in the effort to get a glimpse of the admiral or Mrs. Dewey. Even more annoying than the stare of forty pairs of eyes is the witticism of the guide who shouts through the megaphone in a voice that can be heard a block away: "The red house to your right—given by the American people to Admiral Dewey, who destroyed the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay and came to Washington to be captured by a woman."—Saturday Evening Post.

The Wickedness of Growing Old.

Here, then, are the three deadly symptoms of old age:

Selfishness—Stagnation—Intolerance.

If we find them in ourselves, we may know we are growing old—even if we are on the merry side of thirty. But, happily, we have three defences, which are invulnerable; if we use them we shall die young if we live to be a hundred. They are:

Sympathy—Progress—Tolerance.

The first is the hardest to most of us, because our own little prison of the Actual is so immensely important to us. There is no denying the fact that when you have a toothache yourself, it is hard to have to consider other people's aches. But it can be done, though it generally involves physical effort, for we must bestir ourselves, and act; the mere feeling of sympathy expressed by action is a poor, useless thing: but the Soul, determined not to grow old, can force the Body to such physical effort; though there is no denying that it is hard work!—Harper's Bazar.

Shall He Be a Pleasure or a Torment?

Two propositions confront the parents of a child; shall he be a pleasure to you and bring joy and happines into your lives and into your homes, or shall he be a discord to mar all of the harmony which might otherwise fill your lives?

It is needless to say that no one likes a spoiled child. If he is pert, every one but his parents calls it by another name, nor excuses his ill manners. While he may inherit some traits of character which are objectionable, many of them are often the result of a careless or too indulgent bringing up. Parents are equally responsible for the rearing of the child, but in almost every household the mother's decision is the supreme tribunal. The father is generally too absorbed in business to take upon himself the government of the child, usually limiting himself to this suggestion:

"My dear, you should punish that boy; he is getting unbearable."

The wife looks at him reproachfully and answers, "Why don't you punish him? You leave all of the disagreeable things to me."

This is a danger signal, and if the man is wise he will say no more. What man ever did gain anything by arguing such a point with his wife? He must either retreat gallantly or stand his ground in a war of words.

It is not so difficult a thing to make a boy a household pleasure, but from the number of failures in the world, one would think it an Herculean task. President Roosevelt said in an object lesson to his own sons, to prevent their assuming airs because of his own exalted position, that he knew of but four kinds of boys—"tall boys and short boys, good boys and bad boys."

If this is true, the president's knowledge of boys is limited. Scarcely any two boys, even in the same family, are alike in disposition, and being so va-

DEFORMITIES CURED!

ALL PERSONS CRIPPLED OR DEFORMED, LAME OR PARALYZED, SHOULD INVESTIGATE AND SEE WHAT IS BEING ACCOMPLISHED AT THIS INSTITUTION FOR THESE CASES.

CROOKED OR CLUB FEET of any variety, and at any reasonable age, can be made straight, natural and useful. The methods used are mild; no cutting, no plaster paris, no severe or painful treatment of any kind, and the result is guaranteed.

POTTS DISEASE, when treated in time at this institution, will result in no deformity; paralysis will always be prevented; the health and strength of the patient is at once improved; the growth not interfered with. Plaster paris is never used.

SPINAL CURVATURE, even in long standing cases can be perfectly corrected by the new and improved methods in use here; plaster paris, felt or leather jackets are never employed. Names of patients recently cured, after all ordinary methods and doctors had failed to afford relief, will be furnished on application.

HIP DISEASE can be cured without surgical operations or confining the patient to bed. Abscesses, shortening deformity and loss of motion can always be prevented, and, if already present, can be cured. The methods used here in the cure of Hip Disease in all its stages are radically different and more successful than those generally employed. Write for information.

PARALYSIS and RESULTING DEFORMITIES. For no class of afflictions has greater preparation for successful treatment been made. Deformities of the limbs, joints or feet, resulting from Paralysis, can always be corrected without surgical operations or severe treatment. Paralysis should never be neglected; children never outgrow it; it is not incurable.

CROOKED AND DISEASED KNEES, Hips, Hands, Limbs and deformities resulting from Rheumatism are successfully treated without pain.

This is the only thoroughly equipped institution devoted to the cure and correction of deformities. Examination and consultation by mail or in person, free of all charge. References furnished on application. Pamphlets sent on request.

ried the manner of their bringing up cannot be the same.

While the world has advanced in almost every line of thought, we still cling to some of the old-fashioned ideas, one of which is the necessity of sometimes punishing a child. Some parents even find it necessary to use a switch, claiming that nothing else is so effective when a particular degree of obstinacy has been reached by the child, while others consider it brutal and cowardly for grown men and women to administer a whipping to a defenseless child. They claim, too, that such punishment only angers the child and makes him resentful.

No one who has ever read David Copperfield can forget the feelings of that sensitive child, when he was punished by his step-father, a man whose nature was so entirely foreign to David's that there could never have been anything but antagonism between them. There are other little David Copperfields in the world who are compelled to submit to just such unmerited punishment, either by their own parents or those placed in authority over them, and many natures have been warped from an inborn sweetness by undue harshness.—Maud Murray Miller, in The Pilgrim for January.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

“The new neighbors have come,” said Miss Polly Day, age 50, to Miss Susie Day, age 48, as they slyly peeped from their curtained window. “See that child leading her father by the hand. Poor man! He must be blind. What a bright face both of them have!”

“But you would hardly call the girl pretty,” said Miss Susie; “at least not so pretty as our Lizzie. By the way, where is Lizzie?”

There came an excited footstep from the hall, and then Miss Lizzie, age 38, entered whispering, “Girls, they've come!” She hurried to the window. “Do you reckon that's the mother, holding her novel at the place where she left off?”

“One thing's certain,” said Miss Polly with a sigh of satisfaction, “they have one member of the family older than any of us! And look how stiff and dignified!” she added, watching Mr. Woodney's mother. “How can she ever step down into the yard without jarring to pieces? I know she would never bend those knees.”

“The girl helps her blind father down,” commented Miss Susie, “and now he is going to lift down his mother. Do you see how her arms go about his neck? Just as if she thought him—”

“We are pleased with our new neighbors,” said Miss Lizzie softly.

The road dipped in front of the Woodneys' new home, and the sidewalk, keeping on a level, was as a bridge spanning the little valley. It was at least a foot higher than the yard. “It is such a nice sidewalk,” Mace said to her father. “It is up so high from the ground that they had to put trestles under it. You could stand under it—isn't that fun? If a person fell off of it into the road, he might really get hurt! It's dangerous, unless you are careful. It will be our bridge. Now we are in the yard. There isn't a spear of grass on it—not a single spear, is there, grandmother?”

“No, child,” said the old lady without enthusiasm, “it is perfectly bare.”

“The Enderthorpes' chickens done that,” said Mr. Tumbleton following, and disposed, as he always was, for conversation. “They're your neighbors on the west, as the Miss Days is on the east. See that there ole rooster? That's a Enderthorpe bird, a-looking for something green, now, but he won't find it.”

“It will be all the easier for me to go about by myself,” said Mr. Woodney cheerfully. “Does the Enderthorpe house stand close to ours?”

“Yes, papa, but there's a picket fence between.”

“You might as well know about them people at the beginning,” said Mr. Tumbleton cautiously. “You want to keep an eye on 'em. Me and the ole woman, we raised a sheep from a lamb, and it being pore, and sickly from the jump, we put our hearts on the little beast; the children just loved it. It was like an adopted child in the fambly. Y—he's the baby—worshipped it. Well, one night the sheep disappears, and a day or two later the Enderthorpes was givin' all their neighbors mutton; had more'n they could handle. Even fetched some to us—but no sir, we didn't take a bite; it would of choked us! Now, that's the Enderthorpes! I'll go and help A and D unload. Yes, sir.”

“What very unpleasant neighbors!” murmured Mrs. Woodney, glancing distrustfully at the adjoining house.

“Well,” said her husband, “we have no sheep, so if they come offering us mutton, it will be somebody else's. Mace, what kind of a house have we?”

“All these houses are just one-story,” his daughter explained, as she led him to the open door. “Ours is green. I don't like the color a bit, as a color, and still it makes you think you are living 'way out in the country, you know, and that's pleasant. There isn't any porch, and the front door is right down on the ground without a single step. Isn't that quaint? It's the very thing for you, papa. Now we are walking right in, on a level. There's no hall. Why, Papa, how strange! Here's a pump in the very front room.”

“That,” said Mr. Woodney, laughing, “will be handy when our company is thirsty.”

“It is unbecoming,” said Mace's grandmother with some severity. “It is undignified.”

“What can we do with it?” exclaimed Mace's mother, staring helplessly at the pump which occupied one corner of the room. “Our carpet will be getting wet all the time. And besides, it takes up so much room, and the chamber is so small anyway—”

“It must be removed!” said the older Mrs. Woodney, firmly.

“Take out that pump?” exclaimed Mr. Tumbleton, poking his head through the window in the unconventional manner peculiar to all the Tumbletons. “You'll wish you hadn't! That there ain't no ordinary drinking pump, it has got its leverage on the cellar. That there cellar at times rises plumb to the ceiling of it, and if not pumped, will run over and come up through the floor. Yes, sir. You just muzzle up yore pump and run the tubing out the window. It ain't no great exertion.”

“Dear me!” complained Mrs. Woodney. “How unfortunate!”

“That is one thing I can do,” remarked Mr. Woodney, “as well as a man with the keenest eyesight. I suppose it is only used in very rainy seasons.”

“Well, no, it comes into play 'most any time,” said Mr. Tumbleton, leaning his bare arms on the window sill, for he was paid by the day. “I tell 'em they must be a spring som'ers in the ground, and it raises like. Rain don't seem to have so terrible much to do with it.”

“That will be more exciting than the sidewalk,” said Mace, not sure that she enjoyed this new prospect. “Come on, papa, so Mr. Tumbleton can bring in the things. I see the three rooms are all in a line, one behind the other. This is the middle room.”

“Any more pumps?” inquired Mr. Woodney, smiling.

“We will at least build a screen or partition around the pump!” said his mother. “I could never look a caller in the face with it pointing its crooked handle at us like a finger.”

“This room is larger,” said Mace. “It has two windows, one on each side, and an outside door, and a hook in the ceiling for a swinging lamp. Just the thing, when we get our lamp. The hook will be ready for us. What room will this be, mamma?”

“I'm sure I don't care,” said Mrs. Woodney, looking about. “Some of us can sleep in here, I suppose. It doesn't make any difference, you know, everything is temporary.”

“Now we come to the back room, papa,” continued Mace, leading the way. “It has such a funny little window, on hinges like a door, and so high up, I can't reach the bottom of it. That is why it's so dark in here, I suppose. If this is the kitchen, how can we see to cook, I wonder? Here is another outside door—one to each room. There's a big rock against it. Oh, I see—it has no latch, or fastening of any kind.”

“I should think people might get in,” remarked Mrs. Woodney. “How primitive! Really I think I shall be afraid with only a stone against the door.”

The door opened into the back yard whither the wagons had been driven. “Yonder is a barn, papa,” said Mace. “Oh, I am so glad. I can play in it, and we will climb to the loft. I see it has a loft.”

“It is a good thing to have a barn,” her father responded genially. “It will be ready for our horse when we get one, just as our hook is ready for our lamp.”

“Where do you want these things put?” asked Mr. Tumbleton, addressing the new mistress of the house.

“Oh, I don't know,” said Mrs. Woodney, helplessly. “There are so many of them. And the carpets will have to be put down first, I suppose. Really, I don't know how we're to manage. You might put all the things in the barn, and then we can bring them in as needed.”

“I would much rather,” said the older Mrs. Woodney, “that my things did not go into the barn, Geraldine.”

“Very well,” said Mrs. Geraldine Woodney placidly, “it was just a suggestion. I really don't care what plan we adopt. What do you think, Mr. Tumbleton?”

“Now, I'll tell you,” said Mr. Tumbleton, stroking his whiskers. “They ain't

"I suppose," said Mrs. Woodney, "we might make either end of the house do as the parlor. That back room is so dark we can hardly cook in it, and the front room has the pump. People could come around the house, especially if we fixed up a sort of front porch to the back door."

"Oh, dear!" said Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, sinking languidly upon a chair which had been lifted from the wagon, "everything is in such 'a muddle,' as it says in 'Hard Times.'" Her hand fell upon her lap, and her book flew open. Her eyes sought the page and in an instant the world about her was forgotten.

Stubborn.

A little girl was heard talking to her rabbit as follows:

"Five times five; six times six; seven times seven" Betweentimes she shook the rabbit violently.

"Dorothy," said her mother, "what are you doing to your rabbit?"

"Well," replied the child, "papa says that rabbits multiply rapidly, and Bunny won't do it."

"The Little Mother Who Never Came Home."

"I am going out to an entertainment this afternoon," said the "Little Mother" to her doll children. "I am sure that you will be very good while I am gone. You know it is seldom that I leave you."

It was such a pretty doll house in which these children lived, and the lady of the house was a very careful caretaker and housekeeper.

Dinah was called to come up from the kitchen where she had been eating her lunch, to put the baby to bed in the tiny brass bedstead, and bring the bottle the "Little Mother" was so particular to keep in order herself. It was filled with warm milk and put to the dear baby's lips. "I shall shorten baby's clothes next week, Dinah," she said, as the smiling colored nurse was seated in the low rocking chair by the side of the precious baby. "The Little Mother" took care of the baby's bottle herself, for she had heard much talk about "germs." Germs, you know, are such a worry in a loving mother's life.

Christine, the oldest one of the doll children, was standing behind the curtains looking out of the window when the "Little Mother" called her. "Come into the parlor, Christine, and sit down at the piano and do your practicing. You have not practiced nearly enough lately, and just think how much money I'm paying out for your music! I want you to do your best while I'm gone, just as if I were here listening to you."

Christine sat down in front of the handsomest piece of furniture in the parlor of the doll house. Carl and Gertrude, the two youngest children, were put into the nursery with their playthings, with the injunction not to make a noise and wake up the baby. It was the "Little Mother's" Christmas doll house and she had to turn back several times to look at it before she went away.

The "Little Mother's" mother, the grandmother of the dolls, followed her to the door, where the good-bye kisses were given and loving words were spoken such as mothers and children speak if they are to be parted for even a short time. There was a happy, expectant look on the little girl's face as she joined her friends at the starting place where they were going together to the entertainment, which was especially for the children that afternoon.

Oh, the sorrow of it all! God pity the mourning hearts who lost their dear ones in the dread calamity that followed! So many little white souls went up to the Father in heaven that day. Why were they taken and in such a dreadful way? Ah, yes, why indeed! Only he who took them to his arms can answer that all-absorbing, unanswerable question.

The "Little Mother" never came home. The doll house is just as she left it. The baby still sleeps in its tiny brass bed. Dinah sits in the low rocking chair by its side. Christine is still sitting at her practicing. Carl and Gertrude are in the nursery with their playthings. They have been very obedient children. The doll's grandmother often stands on the threshold of the "Little Mother's" room and looks in on them, but though weeks have passed since the happy "Little Mother" bade her good-by, she has as yet no strength of heart to go into the room.

The dust has gathered thickly on the furniture of the doll house, so different from the way the careful young housekeeper kept it. The maid takes the duster and starts to go to the "Little Mother's" room, but the poor lonely grandmother of the dolls puts up her hand and says, "Not yet, Mary. Not yet; some other time—perhaps."

The "Little Mother's" playmates often wonder if the dolls get alive in the night when everybody is asleep, and ask each other why the "Little Mother" stays so long, and when she will come back.

They do not know that she has been carried by the beautiful angels up to that new home, in that country where no child is ever affrighted and where pain never comes and no one has any sorrows, and that she is so very happy now and will not come back any more.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

The Midweek Prayer-Meeting booklets, the Daily Readings and the Topical Hand-Books are finally in the hands of those ordering them, and we thank those who so patiently waited on us, though we could not help the delay. All orders can now be filled promptly.

More than half of our Sunday-School Libraries have been sold, and the others will go out this week if possible. We mean to sell them, hence the reduction from $12.00 to $2.50 for library of forty cloth bound books, on the subjects interesting and helpful to Bible-school pupils.

We have the best New Testament for use in your schools that can be had for seven cents per copy, it being revised, too, and we have the same book in better binding at 15 cents and in large primer type at 35 cents, all postpaid, but when these are gone, the supply cannot be renewed at such prices.

The Normal Instructor, Part 2, "The Christ," is used by more schools this year in connection with our lessons in John than we had thought, and at the price, 15 cents, should be in the hands of all teachers and all senior pupils.

One enthusiastic friend writes us, "I had two other Lesson Commentaries given me Christmas, but yours is the best of all." Over 400 pages, selling for only $1.00, handsomely bound in cloth, no "limp" business done here when it comes to a book that is good for life, and should be retained in one's library for years to come.

The list in our "Removal Sale" is corrected each week, the books sold being taken out, and others substituted, so that we advise an examination of the list each week. This is a "bargain sale" of which our friends are taking advantage, as they should, and we are sending out hundreds of books under its advantageous offers.

We are sending out the Normal Instructor, Part II, "The Christ," to many who are using them in connection with our lessons in the Bible school for the next six months, on the life of Jesus. The International Lessons are confined to the Gospel of John, but the Instructor takes up the life of the Christ systematically, and thus supplies for you what is lacking in John's testimony, but you will also need the part on The Land, Part IV, and the one discussing the People, Part VII. These are offered at the nominal price of 15 cents each, or $1.50 by the dozen, prepaid, or the set of seven for $1.00.

A PRAYER.

O THOU ETERNAL ONE, I need Thee for time. They are always telling me that earth is the robing room in which to prepare for heaven. Rather hast Thou said that heaven is the robing room in which to prepare for earth. It is from within Thy sanctuary that I am armed for the battle of life; it is in meeting my God that I learn to meet my brother. I am not fit for this world till I have seen the other world; I must go up to the mount ere I give laws to the people. It is from behind the veil of eternity that I speak to the things of time. I could not bear the fretting of the shore were it not for the sight of the sea. I could not stand the murmur of the crowd were it not for the murmur of the shell. I should sink beneath the burden and the heat of the day unless I were refreshed by the spray from the ocean of Thy love. Roll in, then, thou great sea! Roll in upon the hot sands of time, and lave the thirsty land! Roll in upon the beach, and wash its impurities away! Let us hear the sound of Thy waves, and we shall bear the rumbling of earth's chariot wheels! He who has lain one moment on Thy breast is fit to tread the dusty courts of time.—George Matheson, in "Leaves for Quiet Hours."

Bloody Massacres in the World's History.

The bloodiest massacre of modern times was that of St. Bartholomew, in France. Seventy thousand Huguenots were killed August 24, 1572.

Sixty-five thousand Croatians were slain by the Turks in 1592.

At the taking of Ismail by the Russians, in 1790, 30,000 men, women and children were killed.

When Jerusalem was destroyed in the year 70, it is said that 1,100,000 Jews were slain.

In Thessalonica, 7,000 persons were invited into the circus and put to the sword by the order of Theodosius in 390.

Massacres of the last century follow:

Whites in Santo Domingo, March 29, 1804.

French in Madrid, May 2, 1808.

Massacres at Scio, Greek archipelago, April 2, 1822.

The Power of the Churches.

There is an evident determination on the part of the Republican bosses in Ohio to renominate Governor Herrick for a second term. It is announced that Geo. B. Cox, whose power is well known, will give the governor his personal and official support. Whenever Mr. Cox supports it may be reckoned that the machine, with all its wheels greased, will work as easily as it is possible for a machine to work. But the "bosses" are not taking into account the power of the church. It was the power of the church in Ohio that gave R. M. Bishop his notable victory over his Republican opponent in a state that had normally a large Republican majority. Governor Bishop was, we believe, one of only two Democrats who have ever carried Ohio, and it was because he had the solid support of the Christian people who put aside their party because of the principles for which the candidate stood, and his own well-known character, that he was elected. Governor Herrick has offended the better class element of the state by his lack of backbone when it came to dealing with the liquor question, and if he is nominated, it will be evident that this is due to the dictation of the liquor men. It is possible that the managers of the party may have the power to bring the governor to the front again. Patronage gives any administration a great leverage. But with graft, dollars, positions on the one side, there are the consciences of a large mass of voters on the other. Upwards of fifty conferences, representing nearly all of the Protestant churches of the state of Ohio, have passed resolutions condemning Governor Herrick's action on the Brannock bill, and protesting against his renomination. Of course, all those who took this action were not Republicans. Churches and temperance societies are not built on party lines, but have representatives of both great parties in their membership.

Shall Bossism Rule?

Ohio has before it now an issue just as important in its place as that which presented itself to the Missouri electorate a few months ago. Shall "bossism" and the saloon run the state, or shall the deliberate judgment of the best people have a voice? It is not a question of Democrat or Republican. It is not a question of Governor Herrick's own personality. In many respects he is no doubt a very admirable man. For instance, we commend very heartily the attitude he recently took towards prize-fighting. No stronger statement could have been issued than he issued on this subject against this debasing practice. But the Protestant churches have come to the time when they believe that the liquor interest cannot be played with any longer. Its power has grown so great that any truckling to it means disaster to all church influence. One Ohio paper, a Republican one, too, puts the case very concisely as follows:

> Loyalty to church decrees is stronger with Christian people than the pronouncement of political parties. Governor Herrick has done that which they have regarded wrong. They have denounced his actions. They have repudiated his administration. Does this mean nothing? It is well to remember that the governor's opponents represent the moral and religious sentiment of the state. His clamoring champions are composed of office-holding, office-seeking, office-giving classes, who place self-interest above party welfare; such men defy religious and moral convictions, and are ready to throw down the gauntlet to the church. In nominating Mr. Herrick that is exactly what they will do.

There is still time for Governor Herrick to repent, but even were he to do that, we doubt whether he would have the confidence of a very large number of voters who have come to the conclusion that it is time to break the power of the bosses, as well as of the liquor men.

Up to the Churches.

In this connection we wish to give as wide publicity as our circulation can to an editorial article in Leslie's Weekly of January 26, under the caption "It is up to the churches." This editor of a great "secular" weekly says:

> District-Attorney Jerome was wholly right in declaring, as he did recently at a meeting of New York clergymen, that the churches were largely responsible for the failure of the Sunday laws in the city and elsewhere in the state. Referring particularly to the saloon evil, he said to the New York pastors: "If you will stick together and get the Baptist and the Methodist communities in the western part of the state to help, you will find that the Republican governor will take some action. Then the law may be enforced, for he will see in the movement what may affect his political life." This is true as to the solution of the saloon problem, and the same has been true for years past, whatever may have been the complexion of the party in power.
> The churches in New York state, as in almost every other state in the Union, represent in their total membership, in their aggregate property holdings, in their combined intellectual, social, and moral influence, enormous power, and are, where united to one end, capable of almost any achievement in the interests of the public. In all the respects named the churches together far outweigh the combined interests of the liquor dealers, and if they acted as harmoniously and solidly together as the latter do would have no difficulty in accomplishing their purposes. Acting as one strong arm, they could strike a blow at the saloon curse from which it could never recover.
> The churches complain that their wishes and demands find so little apparent consideration at the hands of politicians, legislators, and executive officials. Why? One reason is because they so rarely agree among themselves on any specific and definite demands, and another resson is that they do not go about their reform work in a way to command the attention and co-operation of practical men. No party in city or state could, or would, resist them if they acted together with earnestness, sincerity, and true unity of purpose.

The truth of this statement is apparent to everyone who has studied the question. Denominational divisions have crippled united action in the past on great moral questions. But a new day is dawning. The great brotherhood of the followers of Christ are getting closer together in their religious convictions and this must necessarily bring more harmony about questions that affect the home and the individual life. We are looking towards constructive work. We are all coming to realize with Tennyson that "It is better to fight for the good than to rail at the ill."

The Canteen.

There is going to be a very determined effort made to restore the canteen. Already a party of women in high circles, chiefly wives of officers and Washington society leaders, have banded themselves together in opposition to the policy adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. For the most part these ladies have good intentions but we are inclined to believe that they have no more knowledge of the subject than they ascribe to the temperance women. We have seen no evidence that they have studied the question at all, while the W. C. T. U. is plentifully supplied with statistics and facts, to say nothing of moral argument. The argument of the army crowd that liquor is a necessity is one of the most absurd that could be trotted out. The matter is very well put in a letter to the Secretary of War, wherein General Noel Gaines, Inspector-General of the State of Kentucky, scores General Inspector Burton, of the army, for his defense of the canteen. In the course of his letter General Gaines says:

> The officers of our army are right; or they are honestly mistaken, and therefore wrong; or they are clamoring for what they know to be wrong, for some important reasons, and are therefore hypocrites.
> Are they right in asserting that drinking whiskey and beer is a moral benefit to the army? Are they right in claiming that an article that is destroying and damning and ruining physically millions of men and boys daily is a preventative to sickness of our soldiers? Are they right in saying that a poison that causes men to desert their homes and little ones will keep a soldier from deserting his flag and country? Are they right in claiming that a thing that causes brother men to murder each other is good to keep soldiers from murdering each other? Are they right in saying that a drink that makes men kill women will plant a pride and love of country in the hearts of soldiers? Will the very article that causes civilians to be civil law breakers, thereby destroying the public peace and rendering prisons and civil courts a necessity, be the very thing to keep soldiers from violating military laws, thereby aiding discipline and rendering military courts unnecessary?

The Trouble in Russia.

History is repeating itself in Russia. The French revolution is being re-enacted in the dominion of the Czar. The old lesson which has been taught over and over again in the history of the world is being taught once more in the land of the Slavs. Oppression and disregard of the rights of the people are ultimately followed by bloodshed and revolution. It has always been so; it will ever be so. Human nature can stand a great deal before it rises in revolt, but there is a limit beyond which endurance ceases to be a virtue, and men prefer death to servitude.

It is strange that the blind rulers are hardly ever able to see it, or, seeing it, they lack courage to act. Who has not heard the rumblings of revolution in preparation for a long time in Russia? Recently there was a respectful demand made by the people through their representatives for a redress of their grievances. It met with contemptuous treatment by the Czar and his counselors. They were informed, in effect, that liberty was not a thing to be demanded by the people, but to be doled out by the throne according to its good pleasure. Most people could have seen that this would increase the spirit of revolt. Czar Nicholas and his advisers could not see it.

Then came the final appeal of the people to be heard. Workingmen of the nation, voicing their petition through their priestly leader, demanded the right to hand their petition to the Czar, guaranteeing his personal safety. They were simple-minded enough to believe that he would come out to meet them, and at least hear their story. Instead of that the brave priest and his mostly unarmed followers were met with armed regiments of Russian soldiers who shot them down like sheep in the shambles. These blind leaders imagined that this would put down the revolution! Have they ever read history? Do they know anything of human nature? It would seem not.

"Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." It looks as if the clock of destiny had struck the hour for the downfall of Russian autocracy, the overthrow of the family of the Romanoffs, and the bringing in of a constitutional form of government. This outbreak probably means the virtual end of the war with Japan, as the Czar's troops will be needed at home. These are history-making events and we are witnessing one of those epochs in a nation's life when the people, wearied with oppression, assert their power and their rights, and introduce a new era in the history of that nation.

Writing as we are now doing at the very beginning of this outbreak, we do not pretend to forecast the course of events, but we cannot doubt that it means larger liberty for the Russian people and the bringing about of better conditions in all the subject peoples of the Czar, and throughout the east.

The Later News.

At the time of writing, the revolutionary excitement in St. Petersburg has apparently died down. The severe measures taken by the authorities cowed the populace but underneath the surface there is, no doubt, all the material for another explosion. Moscow caught the flame and many of the larger cities of the empire. The Finns have showed signs of rising and the disaffected population on the shores of the Baltic will not sympathize with the autocracy in this conflict. Despite the fact that proclamations have been issued in the Emperor's name, promising a revision of the general law, so as to restrict the hours of labor, the institution of a plan for state insurance, and otherwise to meet the demands of the strikers so far as the law will permit, and guaranteeing them protection against interference by agitators, the effort of the government has not met with great success. Undoubtedly many of those who took part in the demonstrations will be satisfied with conditions that promise them shorter hours and more money, but after all that has transpired, it can hardly be true that the troubles in Russia have been merely brought about by disaffection on the score of labor. Some of the leaders have been caught by the soldiers or the police, and at first it seemed that they would at once be executed. Wiser counsel prevailed, and it is now thought that only Gorky is to suffer death. On Friday night, it was learned that Warsaw, the third largest city in the empire, and headquarters of Polish revolutionists, had followed St. Petersburg and Moscow, and that fighting was in process in the streets. This is a more serious trouble than an outbreak in St. Petersburg, for all Poland is against the Russian rule, and any spread of disorder there may set going a real revolution that will be beyond the control of the Czar's government. The weakness of the present rising is that it has no prominent leaders in the upper class, and is not properly supported by money or arms. Its strength lies in the fact that a widespread discontent with the present order of things is manifested throughout the whole country. This discontent, though suppressed for the time by the sabre and the knout, will rise with increasing force unless there is some real effort to do away with the conditions which gave rise to it.

The condition in the east does not make the troubles at home the less real for the Czar. It was even reported that Kuropatkin has asked terms of Marshal Oyama. It is certain that there has been a renewal of the battle, the Russians at first being the aggressors, but at the moment of writing, seemingly having the worst of it. Besides, the Baltic fleet is reported to have been damaged in a hurricane, and the Japanese are making a movement against Vladivostok.

The authorities at St. Petersburg seem to be in dread of further risings, not in the great centers where large bodies of troops are stationed, but the fear is that there will be a concerted effort made to overwhelm the small garrisons.

Lay Workers in a Meeting.

It would be well if it could be drilled into the people's minds that it does not all depend on the evangelist. Writing of the great meetings at Liverpool, England, "Time would fail me," says a correspondent, "to tell of how policemen bring people to the meetings and rejoice in their salvation; of how a band of 150 street-car conductors are praying and working for the salvation of their comrades; of how telegraph messenger boys are working daily winning their companions to their Master; of how one of the most earnest workers by day and by night is a prominent member of the Liverpool Corn Exchange. Sufficient to say that the spirit of God is working mightily to the salvation of thousands of men, women and children, and the expectation is that yet greater things will be witnessed during the second part of the campaign which extends from the first to the twenty-second of January."

Prayer and Modern Thought.

We have been requested by a reader of the Christian-Evangelist to write an editorial on prayer as affected by modern thought. The question of particular interest, of course, is whether there is anything in the results of modern scientific and philosophical thought to discredit prayer. We answer, so far as our knowledge goes, there is not. This is not saying, of course, that there are no skeptics both in science and philosophy who hold views which would discredit the value of prayer. What we mean to say is that there is nothing in any generally accepted view of science or philosophy that is contrary to Christ's teaching concerning prayer.

Perhaps the one principle of modern science which more than any other would seem at first thought to undermine prayer is the universal reign of law. Science, of course, proceeds in all its investigations on the principle that every atom in the universe and every force that is operative in nature is subject to law. This is not a world of chance. What science has discovered and what both philosophy and religion confirm is that we live in an orderly system, including a physical or material order governed according to material laws, and a moral order under moral or spiritual laws. Of course science has to do, mainly, with the material order, but when it comes to deal with man and with social phenomena it is bound to recognize a moral as well as a physical order. Is there anything in this idea of the universality of law, and of the principle of cause and effect which runs throughout the universe, that overthrows the reasonableness and value of prayer? Not at all.

As long as we recognize a personal God who is the source of all law, there is a rational basis for prayer. We know that man can improve his physical condition by observing the laws pertaining to health, and by bringing himself into proper relations with his material environment. Is it not reasonable to suppose that he may improve his moral condition by conforming to the laws which govern his moral being? Is it not also reasonable to suppose that prayer is one of those spiritual laws, in obedience to which man comes into such relation to God that he receives moral and spiritual strength for his tasks? If we consider prayer as a moral and spiritual force, which it undoubtedly is, it is both unscientific and unphilosophical to presume that it has no effect. Does not the child's petition to his father often cause the father to so use material and other laws as to grant the request? Can we reasonably deny to the Creator the power that we concede to his creatures? Is God a prisoner in the universe which he has created, and so bound by the laws which are but the emanations of his will that he cannot minister to the moral needs of his children? There is nothing in science or philosophy or reason or common sense to lead us to such a conclusion.

Again, it may be said that the theory of evolution which modern thought has generally accepted is antagonistic to the idea of prayer. The only kind of evolution that has any general acceptation among believing scientists and philosophers is theistic evolution, and there is nothing in this view derogatory to prayer. If evolution be but God's way of doing things—his method of creation and of development—we still have God as the great Evolver, and as long as we have a personal God whose plans and purposes embrace every created thing, and who through the ages has been preparing the earth for the abode of man, we have a Being to whom we can pray in confidence that our prayers will not be unheeded. We know that in certain stages of development, in all organisms, even according to evolution, there come into play certain forces which were not in operation before that, and which make for a higher development. Why, then, should it be thought incredible that man should reach a stage of development in which the moral and spiritual forces, which do not affect the animal creation, should operate for his moral and spiritual development? Who can say that the posture of the soul which prayer implies is not one of the means which God has ordained for man's spiritual development?

Not only is there nothing in modern thought to undermine prayer, but there is much to emphasize its value. On this phase of the subject we cannot dwell further than to say that the doctrine of the divine immanence, according to which God is still operating in the world as he ever did, in all the processes of life and growth and progress, emphasizes the scriptural idea of the nearness of God to us, and of his availability for us as a source of strength and help. Recent discoveries in electricity and the methods invented for availing ourselves of its use, and much of the highest scientific thought concerning matter and motion, are anything but materialistic in their bearing, and are quite suggestive of unseen and spiritual forces which pervade the universe. Nothing which science has brought to light or philosophy has discovered, when rightly understood, ought to discourage us in the least from lifting our hearts in adoration and petition, saying, "Our Father!"

It is gratifying to note the fact that in connection with the religious revival that is sweeping over the country, there is a growing interest in the purification of our political and industrial life. We are having brought to light as never before the abuses, both in politics and in our business methods, and this must necessarily precede any work of reform. No religious revival can justify itself that does not result in a purer political life and in more honest business methods.

A Supreme Advantage of the New Evangelism.

The old evangelism was loaded down with speculative dogmas and hard-to-be-understood doctrines which made the winning of converts a difficult process. If these doctrines and dogmas were not brought to the front, as they generally were, it was known that they would follow hard after the evangelist and must be swallowed in order to acceptance in the churches which held them in their creeds. This was a great disadvantage. It was laying a heavy burden on the evangelist and his message. Nothing but a strong religious instinct in human nature made it possible to win converts under such a regime. How many men we have all known who were kept out of the church because of some knotty problem in theology which they supposed they must accept in order to be an orthodox Christian!

The new evangelism, going back to the New Testament, finds its sweet evangel free from those abstruse speculations and hard doctrines which have been a stumbling-block to so many honest souls. It has but one message and that is good news. It presents Christ as the world's only Saviour, as the Physician for all our human ills. To believe on him as the Son of God, on the testimony of prophets and apostles, concerning his doctrine and deeds, and character and life—that is the faith required. To submit to his divine authority renouncing sin and pledging loyalty to him in the open confession with the mouth and in baptism—these are the simple terms of discipleship. Nothing beyond this in the way of faith is required as a condition of membership, and nothing in the way of obedience. To maintain a Christian character is, henceforward, the only condition of abiding in the fellowship of the church.

How all this simplifies the Gospel! How it frees it from entangling alliances with philosophy and theology! Both of these are good in their places, but their place is not in the gospel message, nor in the conditions of accepting Christ. The evangelist who goes out before the people, unhindered and unhampered by all the theologies, subtle speculations and hoary traditions of men, with the simple story of the cross to preach to men, lifting up Christ as the only leader whom they need to follow, with his word as their only guide, his name their only trust, and his character their only model, has a tremendous advantage over the old-time evangelist who was loaded down with the accrued impedimenta of past ages. He can answer a hundred objections with this simple message, that could not be answered under the old style of evangelism. "What creed shall I accept?" Accept Christ. "What church shall I join?" Join Christ, and let him settle the question of church. "How can I tell which is the right way, amid so many conflicting views and creeds?" Christ is "the way, the truth and the life." "How can I know that I am saved?" By taking Christ at his word, and accepting his salvation. "I cannot understand many things in the Bible." Can you not understand what Christ wants you to do and be in order to salvation? Attend to that first and tackle your difficult questions at your leisure.

The very simplicity of this gospel message is its strength and effectiveness. It gives room for the evangelist to emphasize the things that are vital. How strongly can the great fundamentals of faith, of repentance, of obedience, of love, and of a wholehearted surrender to God, be presented when Christ alone is the object of such faith, obedience and love! How the beauty of the Christian life can be described when it consists, not in the acceptance of theological subtleties but in growing in the grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in Christian service! With such an evangel, so adapted to human nature and so satisfying to the human heart, the evangelist who carries it has the most irresistible plea that was ever committed into the hands of men for advancing the kingdom of God.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Christian Publishing Company is just now engaged in the interesting process of moving. Do our readers know anything about moving? No family knows how much it has until it undertakes to move. The Christian Publishing Company was organized in this city in November, 1873, and began operations on the first of January, 1874. Its first location was on Second and Olive. We were burned out there and took temporary quarters on Sixth, near Olive. Then we came a little farther west between Seventh and Eighth on Olive street. Our next move was to Eighth street, just south of Olive. From there we moved into still larger quarters at 913 Pine street, where we were located several years in the same building with our Methodist brethren. From Pine street we came to 1522 Locust street; and here we have remained until the present time. In all these places we have occupied buildings erected for other purposes than the publishing business, and have had to adapt them to our use the best we could. The present quarters at 1522 Locust street was a residence, to which we have added rooms in the rear to enable it to hold our growing business. At last, having built back to the alley, and the space being insufficient to accommodate our business, we have been compelled to erect a new and commodious building of our own, specially adapted to our business and made to fit our needs, with ample room for growth. We are now transferring the accumulation of years, in the way of plates—about a hundred tons of them—printing presses, books, type, printing material, office fixtures and furniture, etc., to this new building which will be 2710-12-14 Pine street.

It will be seen from the above that we have been moving west, like the churches, only we have not been going so rapidly. We have gone only twenty-five blocks west in thirty-one years—less than a block a year. We are looking forward with no little pleasure to the occupancy of our new quarters, built especially for our own use and owned by ourselves. But the task of removing a publishing house like ours is one of no small magnitude. There are seven large presses, the largest of which and the one on which the Christian-Evangelist is printed, weighs about thirty five thousand pounds. These are to be run by electric motors. To transfer all these presses to their new home and get them in order, and the other machinery and material, and keep up our business at the same time, not missing an issue of the Christian-Evangelist or of any other of our publications, is requiring a good deal of extra work and wise management, but we hope to succeed. If this week's paper should be a little earlier than usual, and the next a little later, our readers will understand that the big press, meanwhile, has been removed from its old quarters to the new. If there should be a little failure in promptness in filling orders or in answering letters our readers will attribute the same to the confusion incident to the work of removing. We expect to more than make up for any delinquencies of this kind in the prompt and vigorous way in which business will be dispatched in our new quarters where we will have better facilities for work. Be patient with us for a few weeks.

These different moves from smaller to larger quarters through the thirty-one years of our history, in this city, represent a series of struggles and of victories of which our newer readers know very little. It is some consolation to those of us who have been at the helm all these years of struggle and of unceasing labors to know that our company stands as high in its business integrity and credit as any institution in St. Louis. There is every indication at present that in this removal to its larger and better quarters it is entering upon a new epoch in its history which is to be marked by increasing growth. We hope soon to publish an illustrated number, showing the different departments of our publishing business and indicating to our readers some of the processes through which the raw material coming into our hands goes out in the finished products. An enlarging life is evermore seeking a larger embodiment. So sings Dr. Holmes in his "Chambered Nautilus":

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from Heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by Life's unresting sea.

These lines are written as we are turning our faces southward for a little dip into Dixie Land. Our first objective point will be Dallas, Texas, near which "Faith Cottage," a part of the Juliette Fowler home, is located, to assist in the dedication of which is the immediate object which takes us south. We shall give an account of this home and its dedication in our next issue. From Dallas we expect to go to New Orleans, where we have an engagement to preach on Sunday. This will be the terminus of our journeyings southward for the present, as we shall return home directly from there. Our original plan was to go on to Florida but business in connection with our removal, and other duties, require our presence in St. Louis, for awhile, but we hope still to make the Florida visit a little later. Last week we spoke of the "southward instinct," but instinct, no matter how strong, is no match for reason, especially when reason is reinforced by conscience. After all, the path of duty is the one that offers the least resistance to the man with a conscience, while the hardest path which such a man can travel is the path of disobedience to the highest sense of honor and obligation. We must ask our readers, therefore, to wait a little while for their promised visit with us to the land of orange blossoms and the mocking-bird, accepting as a promise of something better this flying visit into the borders of the Southland.

Questions and Answers.

By what name should the church be called?
Colorado Springs. N. W.

Taking the New Testament as our guide, it should be called the church of God, or the church of Christ, or the Christian church. The latter is not given exactly in that form in the New Testament, but it expresses substantially the same thought. Our own congregations may be termed churches of Christ, or Christian churches, and our membership Disciples of Christ, or Christians. There is no reason why we should limit ourselves to a single name. Some of these names are better understood in some parts of the country than others. When it is necessary to designate the churches of the Reformation it is always better to use the name that is best understood as referring to the people whom we wish to designate.

Somewhere in the Bible there is a passage to this effect: "What is man that God should be mindful of him?" What do you understand by that verse?
Blanco, Ark. E. C. Mitchell.

The quotation is from the eighth Psalm and the context in which it occurs goes far to explain its meaning.

When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers,
The moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained;
What is man, that thou art mindful of him?
And the son of man, that thou visitest him?

In contemplating the magnitude and glory of the material universe, and the greatness of Him who had created them, he was led to inquire what there is about man that God who was the author of all these worlds should be mindful of and visit him. The inference clearly is that man must be of great value in the sight of God to account for this mindfulness on his part. The verses which follow indicate the nature of man's greatness. He was made "little lower than God," and "crowned with glory and honor." He was given "dominion over the works of thy hands. Thou hast put all things under his feet."

Does the Bible teach that man possesses an immortal soul, and is the phrase "immortal soul" used in the Bible? R. M. JACKSON.
Pattonsburg, Mo.

The phrase, "immortal soul" does not occur in the Bible. The New Testament, however, clearly teaches that man possesses a nature that survives death, or the dissolution of the body. This part of man is designated sometimes by the word soul, and sometimes by the word spirit. It is the rational, moral and spiritual part of man that survives the body, as Jesus clearly teaches.

What do you understand by the statement of Paul, 1 Cor. 12:3: "Wherefore I make known unto you, that no man speaking in the Spirit of God saith, Jesus is anathema; and no man can say, Jesus is Lord, but in the Holy Spirit"? B.

This is in Paul's dissertation on spiritual gifts. It was one of his tests by which they were to know whether persons claiming to speak under divine influence had the Holy Spirit, or some other spirit. Anyone pronouncing Christ accursed could be set down as speaking in some other spirit, while no man could acknowledge Jesus as Lord except in the Holy Spirit. This does not mean, we take it, that a hypocrite could not say these words mechanically, without doing it in the Holy Spirit, but that no one can do it intelligently and sincerely without doing it under the enlightenment and guidance which come from the Holy Spirit. That is to say, we are indebted to the Holy Spirit for all the religious light and life which we possess, and whoever is led to acknowledge Jesus as Lord is guided in such confession by the teaching and prompting of the Holy Spirit.

Notes and Comments.

The Central Baptist has the following timely comment:

> That very excellent body of people, not numerous, but greatly respected, who are known as Free Baptists, are just now in a position where they may well pray the Lord to preserve them from vanity. They are directly the object of two lines of courtship, with suggestive glances from other directions. Some official negotiations are in progress between them and the Disciples of Christ with reference to a union, while at the same time a number of Baptists are exchanging with them messages of affection which look toward denominational matrimony.

We had noticed that the Baptists were casting affectionate glances in the direction of the Free Baptists. That's all right. Who knows but the Free Baptists have a great mission to perform in bringing about a glorious wedlock between all the branches of the immersionist family? It may be that they have come to the kingdom at this time for this purpose. We think there is no danger that they will have their heads turned by being the object of courtship by two such ardent religious wooers as Baptists and Disciples of Christ, In this sort of courtship there is no room for jealousy. We shall rejoice at all the advances toward unity in Christ of all who acknowledge him as their divine Lord.

Discussing further the possibility of union between Baptists and Free Baptists, and referring to a remark of another paper that "the two bodies are now in practical accord, for the reason that we [the Baptists] have gone over to the position of the Free Baptists," having surrendered the "higher Calvinism" and restricted communion, the Central Baptist admits some modifications and says: "There has always been a large number among us who are extreme Calvinists and some who are Arminians, and they dwell together in the enjoyment of that liberty which is freely accorded them." That is the important thing, and opens up the only possibility of union. If Baptists who differ about Calvinism, and about the different methods of observing the Lord's supper, can dwell together in fraternity, why should not they get on in happy union with the Free Baptists and the Disciples of Christ?

In a kind personal letter Dr. Winbigler, pastor of the First Baptist church in Washington, D. C., whose article we reviewed in a recent editorial, says, in referring to our review:

> I concede that the Disciples do not teach "Baptismal Regeneration" as the Episcopalians and Roman Catholics do, that the virtue is in the ordinance, but the statement that I make that your view may be called "Baptismal Remission" I think has been true, whether it has not also been modified in your statements and teachings I am not certain.

The phrase is one that has never been used in any of our representative writings, as far as we have seen. It is a misleading phrase. Why "Baptismal Remission" rather than "Repentance Remission" or "Faith Remission"? It would be more appropriate, if either one of these phrases is to be used, to call it "Faith Remission," seeing that repentance and baptism are but faith in process of manifestation, and obedience. Besides, no one who understands the spirit of the gospel would insist that remission of sins is tied to baptism in an absolute and inseparable way, as it is to those internal and spiritual conditions called faith and penitence which makes forgiveness possible. In scripture language, however, baptism, along with repentance, is "unto remission of sins." It is at that point or stage in the "obedience of faith" when the believer may claim the assurance of remission of sins, based on numerous passages of scripture.

In the same letter Dr. Winbigler makes the following suggestion:

> Would it not be a good thing for the Baptists and the Disciples to appoint in their general conventions, advisory committees to attend the respective meetings as a preliminary step towards co-operation? Could not that also be done in state meetings and possibly in local associations? There will have to be some courting before the engagement and marriage. Is it not time that we try to fulfill the prayer of our Lord in John 17?

We are sure this suggestion will meet with a hearty response from the Disciples of Christ, and that they would be delighted to appoint such committees to confer with similar committees appointed by our Baptist brethren in their conventions. They have believed for a good while that the prayer of our Lord for the unity of his disciples among themselves as well as with him ought to be fulfilled, and will be glad to co-operate in any movement looking to that end.

Commenting on Dr. Carroll's annual summary of the religious growth of the various churches, the Congregationalist and Christian World says:

> The report shows that at the end of 1904 there were 1,674 more ministers, 2,310 more churches and 582,878 more communicants than at the close of 1903. In each case this represents less gain than in 1903 as compared with 1902. In 1900 Congregationalists ranked tenth in number of communicants; we now rank eleventh among the sects. The Disciples of Christ that in 1900 were eighth, are now sixth in order, and the Protestant Episcopalians, contrary to the popular impression, are now in the same relative place they were then, according to Dr. Carroll.

If present indications are to be relied on the year 1905 will show greater progress in all the churches than its predecessors for many years back. The present religious awakening is widespread, including not only our own country but Great Britain and some of the continental nations.

The Need of the Hour

By James M. Philputt

"In the year that king Uzziah died I saw the Lord."—Isa. 6:1.

The most notable figure in Hebrew history, after King David, was the prophet Isaiah. The word of prophecy which had been despised and rejected when spoken by such men as Amos and Hosea, became by the mouth of Isaiah a strong practical power in the life of the nation. He was not only the leader of a great religious movement; in his later years he was easily the first man in Judah and virtually guided the affairs of state. In the dark crisis of Israel's history he was the bulwark of the nation, through the commanding influence of his character and the power of his prophetic word. His genius consisted in no single stroke, but in an unfailing faith, patience and reliance upon Jehovah.

The vision of the text marked the turning point of his career. He never forgot even the year in which it occurred. Earthly kings may come and go but the Heavenly King abides forever. The vision came while Isaiah was yet a young man, feeling his way toward the future, and pondering deeply in his heart the part he should take in the problems of the times. One day while worshipping in the temple there came to his inner, spiritual sense this vision of the glory and the holiness of God. He "saw the Lord, high and lifted up, his train filling the temple. Above him stood the seraphim—the 'shining ones'; each had six wings; with twain he covered his face, with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly." This is a symbolic way of expressing their humility, modesty and obedience. They seemed to be arranged in antiphonal companies, calling from one end of the temple, "Holy, holy, holy, Jehovah of hosts;" and answering from the other "The whole earth is full of his glory." So tremendous was this resounding diapason of praise that the very foundations of the temple were shaken.

You can trace the influence of this vision in all Isaiah's after career. His one aim was to get the people to see God. "You are absorbed," he would say, "in temple services, in ritual, in sacrifices, feasts and new moons; you are literally treading the courts of the Lord, but you do not see him! You have lost sight of God himself, as a factor and force in the life of the nation. It is to him you must look for deliverance, and not to horses and armies and human resources."

There is a striking similarity between our own time and that of Isaiah. Many ministers in these days are asking on their knees why it is the pulpit has not more power. People come and listen and are interested but go away with lives unchanged. We live in an age of great progress; the world is forging ahead along many lines; but when we look at the church, while there is machinery and activity enough, there is not a corresponding spiritual development. There is far too much apathy, indifference and worldliness. The church is shorn of her power; she is like a sleeping giant; if only she could be aroused and assert her power her influence in the land would become irresistible.

What we need is not so much more preaching, but preaching to a different purpose. As in Isaiah's time we need a fresh vision of God. We talk about God, we are engaged in various religious exercises, but too often we do not have a keen and clear sense of God himself, present in the midst of his people. If for a single half-hour we could be brought face to face with God the transforming effect would be greater than that of all the sermons we have ever heard. It was such a vision, burned into the consciousness of Paul on the Damascus road, that made him the great missionary and apostle to the Gentiles. It was a vision of God which sent Booth to the submerged tenth of London. Into the little chapel of St. Damian, in the Umbrian hills, once wandered young Francis of Assisi—dissolute, dissatisfied, discouraged. It was but a rude structure, with only a stone altar and a picture of the crucifixion. As Francis gazed at the picture it seemed to say to him, "Come unto me!" And with his mystic vision the picture was transformed into the real Christ, calling him into fellowship and service. It was in that hour that St. Francis resolved upon the life of poverty and service which made him one of the most conspicuous figures in Christian history; so that even the skeptic Renan said, "There have been two Christians—Jesus and St. Francis."

This vision must come to us in the face of Jesus Christ. In the church's development the emphasis must often be shifted from one portion of scripture to another, as the need of the time requires. Just now the truth which needs emphasis more than any other is the declaration of Christ, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

There is with many Christians a conception of God that is erroneous and fatal to spiritual development. He is thought of as a great Being apart from the world, cold and unapproachable. It is difficult to understand how this conception ever got into the church, but once there it is almost impossible to dislodge it. And yet when you pick up your New Testament how at variance all this is with the teachings of Christ concerning the Father! "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." "I came to show you the Father." "I and my Father are one." There is no love and tenderness, no forgiveness and compassion in me that is not in the Father. When you see Christ take little children into his arms and put his hands on them and bless them, he is saying "That is what my Father feels." When you hear him saying to the poor sinner, "Go, sin no more"—"that is what my Father feels." When you see him weeping over Jerusalem because they would not receive his message he would say, "That is what my Father feels." Always and everywhere you have the heart of God reflected in the words and deeds of Christ. "I came to show you the Father." It was in addressing a pagan audience at Athens that Paul said, "God is not far from every one of you; for in him we live and move and have our being."

"Closer is he than breathing, Nearer than hands and feet."

In ten thousand different ways God is ever seeking to win our hearts from darkness to light, from sin and self to his fellowship and service. Mr. Moody used to say if he could get the world to believe but one little sentence, "God is love," that would be sufficient. It is this vision of God as love that melts the heart and wins its allegiance forevermore. Just this is the purpose of the coming of Christ—that through his mission of love and mercy we might come to know God. All our preaching is of little worth unless in some way it shows you the Father. For seven years Dr. Chalmers preached to immense throngs in Glasgow, but absolutely without spiritual results. Then he was laid upon a bed of sickness, where he got his first real vision of God. When he returned to his pulpit his words shook all Scotland. He says himself that those first seven years were without a "feather's weight of influence in changing the lives of the people." They came to hear his marvelous oratory; were charmed and thrilled; and went away to live just as before! With his new vision of God came the spiritual power that transformed their lives; and the influence of Thomas Chalmers is felt in Scotland even to this day.

With this vision of God there came also to Isaiah a new view of himself. He was no doubt an exemplary young man, one of the cleanest and best of his times; but when he had seen the Lord he fell upon his face and cried, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King." We judge ourselves too much by those about us or beneath us. This leads to conceit and complacency. A man will say, "Well, if I am not as good as I can be, I am certainly as good as a great many about me." You may be all that and yet very far below what God would have you be. "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees you cannot enter into the kingdom

By F. D. Power

"There are certain offenders whose criminality takes the shape of brutality and cruelty toward the weak who need a special type of punishment. The wife-beater, for example, is inadequately punished by imprisonment, for imprisonment may often mean nothing to him, while it may cause hunger and want to his wife and children, who have been the victims of his brutality. Probably some form of corporal punishment would be the most adequate way of meeting this kind of crime."

This is what the President said in his message, speaking of conditions in the District of Columbia. Then a bachelor member of the House of Representatives, who could safely offer it, presented in the Congress a bill to punish such husbands as indulged in the pastime of wife-beating with a turn at the whipping post. Then the press took the matter up, one of the leading exponents of civilization supporting the proposition and the other opposing it. Then the preachers were interviewed as to the advisability of introducing this means of correcting an evil, and curiously enough, most of them said it would be a good thing. Then the newspapers all over the country pitched in, actuated by that noble and patriotic impulse of everybody outside of the District to manage, not their own, but the District's affairs. And now the debating societies have taken the thing in hand, and strenuous orators are arrayed on both sides, and night after night the question is being vigorously canvassed. It has reached the acute stage. The President has stirred a hornet's nest. Life is hardly worth living any more at the Capital. One would suppose from the din that such a thing as conjugal felicity was unknown among us, that the crack of the whip resounded far and near along the banks of the Potomac, and that there was no salvation for the fairest city on the globe save in a return to barbaric or medieval forms of government.

The arguments pro and con are at least interesting. It is said the question whether or not whipping is an evil or a benefit is still uncertain. The customs of slavery are recalled and the reign of the overseer on the plantation pictured as restored and the spirits of Phillips and Garrison and Lincoln invoked to witness the rehabilitation of an infamous institution. The church and clergy are charged with the responsibility for the wife-beaters, teaching as they do the authority of the man over the woman in the vow "to love, honor and obey," and the state, it is declared, should oblige the church to strike out of its marriage ceremony a pledge so promotive of this crime. One of our most prominent pastors declares the whole thing unconstitutional—a violation of the eighth amendment, forbidding "cruel and unusual punishments." Many argue that the whipping post would no more prevent wife-beating than lynching prevents the most heinous and diabolical of crimes. On the other hand the friends of the measure argue that the husband who uses the lash on the wife should have a taste of his own medicine, that it is a sin against society to put such a criminal in a comfortable cell and feed him and clothe him at the expense of the people, that such a remedy will speedily make wife-beating a thing of the past, for no man would want a second application of the whip. Little Delaware is quoted as an example of the virtue of this treatment of the criminal. And so the discussion goes merrily on.

It does seem that we are turning back the hands on the dial. The whipping post was one of the institutions of the seventeenth century, brought by our fathers across the sea. Our early penal codes were fashioned after statutes and customs of England, and were marked by the cruelty, barbarity and inhumanity of the age. In some states in 1789, ten, and in Pennsylvania, twenty crimes were punishable by death. Branding, whipping, cropping the ears, standing on the pillory, sitting in the stocks, or ducking were common punishments one hundred years ago. In Delaware, which still retains the whipping post, a blasphemer was flogged, stood upon the pillory and branded with a letter B on the forehead. In Pennsylvania a thief, whether man or woman, after receiving thirty-one lashes well laid on, was condemned to wear on the left sleeve a Roman T, four inches each way and one inch wide, of red, blue or yellow cloth, and it must be worn for six months, and if found without the letter the penalty for the first offense was twenty-one lashes, for the second thirty-nine and a T branded on the forehead. Whipping posts and stocks were conspicuous in every town. In 1787 in Boston five thieves were sentenced to be flogged; in 1789 eleven were ordered by the court to be flogged in front of the state house. In 1817 a sailor was bound to iron rings on the outside of a Philadelphia prison and publicly flogged, and in 1819 in Georgia, and in 1824 in Philadelphia, common scolds were ordered to the ducking stool, but the sentence was not executed. Later still, Judge Cranch, of this city, sentenced a woman to be ducked in the Potomac, but she was fined instead.

In England the whipping business lasted longer than here. In 1825 a soldier was tried for insubordination and sentenced to receive 1,900 lashes with the "cat o' nine tails," a brutal instrument of nine knotted whip-cords. As late as 1829 British courts-martial were forbidden to give more than 300 lashes, and in 1832 the number was restricted to 200. The death of a marine at Portsmouth in 1836, after undergoing 134 stripes, led to an outburst of indignation and the decline and final abolition of whipping in the mother country, though there are said to be instances of the use of the rod as a corrective as far down the century as 1865. In the time of good Queen Bess it was the English way to whip the rogue, not to a post, but through the streets at the tail of a cart, and this may be the Washington way. As the poet sings:

Time was—before the philanthropic trash—
When jails resounded with the hearty lash,
When any morning some known rogue you'd meet
At the cart-tail sent yelling through the street;
While the delighted crowd, with jovial cries,
Urged on the hangman's boisterous exercise.

Long after the public flogging became a "relic of barbarism" the schoolmaster kept up the reign of the birch. Men are living to-day who can recall experiences of this character. One of the old time teachers whose supreme joy was in switching youngsters laid across his right knee, and held in place with the left knee and hand, with the right hand free to exercise the rod, thus indulges his muse:

But now for years my chief delight has been
To scourge the obnoxious stripling of sixteen,
Horsed at nice angle on the sturdy back
Of one whose faithful aid I never lack,
My John, who, with his grip and grin enjoys
The bounds and twistings of rebellious boys.
Some masters love the wooden horse that holds
The fast bound victim in its leathery folds,
But why this apparatus, which affrights
Ridiculous parents in their sleep o' nights,
Each fancying in his dreams his naughty whelp
There strapped and stripped and yelling out for help?
Nor do I like the block—he never feels
The proper smart who there unharnessed kneels.
Or, if the other lads must hold him down,
It makes a scandal in the neighboring town—
Stick to the living horse (i. e., the knee).

Shall we revive the whipping post for wife-beaters? That is the burning question. I have one suggestion. Shut up the saloon and there will be no need for the rod. The man sells his soul to Satan. For a certain number of years he is to have all his desires gratified, and then he is to forfeit his soul. The time expires and the man is unwilling to fulfill his contract and asks Satan on what terms he may be released. "Curse your God and I will release you." "No," says the man, "I can not. Give me something less fearfully wicked." "Then kill your father." "No, that is too horrible to think of. Is there nothing else?" "Yes; beat your wife," says the fiend. "Never! Is there no other condition?" "Why, certainly," answered Satan, "Get drunk!" And he did; and cursed his God, slew his father, and beat his wife, and died, and the devil got him. Give the wife-beater one year at hard labor and pay the wages to the wife; and above all close the saloon!

A minister of Jesus Christ should be interested in all that concerns the true welfare of humanity. The day is gone when it was fashionable for a preacher to hide himself in the cavernous recesses of his own consciousness, or to bury himself in that hermitage which many a study has constituted. The parson who is invisible all the week is usually incomprehensible on the Sunday. Therefore, if some of these English letters are occasionally concerned with the higher thought of this nation it is not because they are written by a recluse. I mix actively with the life of this prodigious London and in it meet men and women from all parts of the earth. For that very reason it is an intense relief at times to retreat from the hurly-burly, and though there is seldom time to indulge in a climb up the heights of Parnassus in fellowship with the giant minds of the past, yet there is unspeakable delight in lingering on its lower slopes. Over some of the choicest of the books of the season I have been pondering in spare half hours during the past few weeks with profit and pleasure. I will try to communicate a few of the lessons I have gathered.

The Roman Bogey.

I am one of those optimists who do not feel scared by all the worst that is said or can be said about the recrudescence of popery and its revival in Protestant lands. Several books have recently been published in London, the object of which is to make Anglo-Saxons quake at the prospect of a conquest of Britain by the Pope. One of these, entitled "The Advance of Romanism in England," by the Rev. J. Broadhurst Nichols, is especially alarmist. The facts adduced are not to be impugned. They are truly formidable and ominous enough, and I have no wish to minimize them. It is certain that Romanism does breathe more freely in England than at any juncture since the Reformation. The stupendous "Invasion of the Friars" consequent on the abolitions of the monastic "congregations" and "associations" in France by the action of Premier Combes, has occasioned the establishment of many powerful settlements of monks and nuns in England. In many towns and villages these Franciscans, Benedictines, Dominicans, and other religious orders have already ingratiated themselves with many of the people who have been professed Protestants. Jesuitry is here and there impregnating the moral atmosphere with its poison. But the fact after all which is most to be borne in mind is that the British people are Protestant at heart as they have been since the Reformation. The papal ascendancy is gone for ever. The chief peril now lies in the lack of Protestant unity. Romanists feel that they have one grand specific advantage. They persistently point to the apparent breakdown of Protestantism. They challenge Protestants with the question, "Can you have a true church which is not a unity, and can you have a unity which is not expressed in visible authority, and a concrete organization to which all will submit?" The Vicar who is author of this book, although an Episcopal clergyman, says that this kind of appeal will do more for Romanism than any ordinary propaganda. It is the kind of appeal which allured Newman and which tells with multitudes. And yet, it is absurd to say that Romanism is increasing in influence and in power. On the contrary, it is steadily withering. And the forces of truth are steadily gaining, although Protestantism is losing its old forms and conventions and is being constrained to come closer and closer to the Bible and to relax its artificial formularies.

A Monumental Biography.

Seldom have I been so moved by the record of any career as by the newly issued "Life of Hugh Price Hughes, by His Daughter." I hope that this noble volume will be much read in America as well as on this side of the Atlantic. For it is in a sense the religious history of our own times. I doubt not that many who are reading these lines of mine have seen and heard Hugh Price Hughes, the greatest Welshman of modern days, for he visited America and was delighted with that wonderful country. This splendid Paladin of British Nonconformity was an originator of great movements. He missioned the west end of London as it had never been evangelized before. He took Methodism of the best type and planted it right in the shadow of Westminster Abbey. He did more to help young men in London than any other man, excepting the grand old Baptist, Dr. Clifford. I had the honor of being his friend. It was at the Grindelwald conference among the Swiss Alps that I learned to know him. I have in London sat in his study chatting over the signs and currents of the times. And I was present with him at a meeting on the memorable day on which he died. We lost Dr. Parker in London during the same season. But Hughes was cut off in his prime. His memoirs tell all the pathetic story of a glorious life and of an untimely end of that life through the stress and strain of overwork. Is it right that the church should kill off its best men? A few years ago it was said that London had "killed its learned bishop." That was when, from a similar cause, Bishop Creighton's valuable life was cut short. C. H. Spurgeon should have lived for years longer. Why should a great preacher thus be the victim of the merciless requirements of the public?

"A Thousand Miles of Miracle."

I cannot help registering my apprecion of the pathos of the new book entitled, "A Thousand Miles of Miracle in China." This wonderful missionary record of suffering during the Boxer trouble must deeply impress the mind of every reader. It is written by Archibald E. Glover, of the China Inland mission. This narrative touches a period without parallel in the history of missions. Mr. Glover makes the causes of the terrible tribulation abundantly clear. But his story is chiefly concerned with the series of marvelous escapes of his own party. And interwoven with it is a valuable history of the crisis in Chinese missions. The book ends with a most touching account of the death of Mrs. Glover through the appalling sufferings incurred during the journey of escape.

A Veteran Preacher.

That grand old man of the English Baptists, Dr. Alexander Maclaren, has just issued one more series of his wonderfully impressive and eloquent sermons. In his retirement after a long ministerial life he is resting in the north of England. Here is an exceptional case of a great popular preacher who has not been killed by overwork. The reason is that he has refused to be overworked by the people at large. He preferred to give his own people his main strength. He has never taken part in the multitudinous social, economic and political movements which do so much to distract many capable preachers and to weaken their ministry, as well as to abbreviate their term of usefulness. The sermons are all on the Book of Genesis. They are all purely expository. Dr. Maclaren was considered by his Manchester congregation to be the world's greatest living preacher. These sermons will be admitted by every reader to be magnificent. There is one negative quality about them which I will not here discuss. We should not know from them that there was any such thing as higher criticism! That is a wonderful feature in the grand book on Genesis.

"Abide With Me."

How this beautiful hymn came into being is recalled by the rebuilding of the Lower Brixham church, England, which was begun thirty years ago in memory of the author of the hymn, Rev. Henry Francis Lyte. At the age of fifty-four he found himself doomed to die of consumption, and prayed that it might be granted to him to write something which would live to the glory of God when he was dead. His prayer was granted and he wrote "Abide With Me" on the last evening that he ever spent at Brixham, after preaching to his congregation for the last time.

Letters from a Retired Minister

From the Rev. Dr. William Prentice, D. D., at Los Angeles to his nephew, the Rev. Will Westbrook Prentice, who has lately become the minister of the First church at Belleview. Young Prentice has mailed the manuscript of a recent sermon to his uncle accompanying it with a letter in which he says a synopsis of the sermon was published in the Belleview Daily Telegraph.

Los Angeles, Aug. 19.

My Dear Nephew:—Your letter and manuscript of sermon came in due time. I read both with no small degree of pleasure. By the way, Will, I am glad to know that you are using the daily papers. It is well that you take advantage, at least occasionally, of this courtesy of the press. The power of the daily newspaper is simply tremendous. Use it in every legitimate way. Cultivate the acquaintance of newspaper men. A friend or two on the editorial or reportorial staff of a great daily may mean much to you and your work. Looking back over my twenty years' ministry at "The Central Church," New York, I am frank to say that I could not have accomplished what I did had it not been for the assistance I received in divers ways from the papers.

Now for your sermon, which I have had time to digest pretty thoroughly. Your exegesis of the text is good. It is clear as a bell. I like it. As a whole the sermon is very readable; some of your illustrations are strong, not to say striking. If you delivered it just as it is written I should say there is a danger that you fall to thinking more of the form of your sermon than of the matter. Better have a care here! The sooner you cease to think so very much of your rhetoric and the more you think of the salvation of souls, the sooner your pulpit work will begin to tell for eternity. People don't go to church to hear oratory, for a man can't be an orator one hundred and four times a year. People don't go to church to hear lectures on literature and sociology, for the specialist on the lyceum platform is the preacher's superior at that. People go to church to see Jesus and where no vision is the people perish. I sympathize with you in this very thing. Every young fellow with fine literary tastes, and even some who have none, experience this danger. Alas! some never do get over it. I wrestled with it, too. I recall that in my first city pastorate when I was conducting revival services a literary woman of considerable reputation with whom I had a slight acquaintance dropped in on us one night. I had been talking simply and tenderly about the "Exceeding Sinfulness of Sin" but just as soon as I saw her I climbed up on my "high horse." Well, from that moment until I finished I "played the fool" extraordinarily well. I feared a slip in my English or a confusion in the agreement of my nouns and verbs vastly more than I did a mistake in a scriptural reference. I dragged in two or three classical allusions, quoted Richard the III's "My conscience hath a thousand several tongues," etc., and a couplet or two from Browning. But I met my just deserts in concluding, for about the very last thing I said was, "The wages of sin ARE death."

That night in the privacy of my own room I prayed God earnestly to forgive me, and that I might have another opportunity to preach the word. I didn't feel that I deserved another.

Clothe your thoughts in the choicest diction you can command, but don't always drift with the oratorical current. Frequently you would better turn and stem it.

All that I have to say about your pulpit style is this: Cultivate variety! Don't get into a groove! Be sermonically supple! Don't permit your congregation to guess pretty accurately just the manner in which you will deliver every sermon. No matter how beautiful one's natural style is he ought to vary it some, even if it costs a big struggle. For instance, an effective preacher would not so much as think of treating in the same general style John 3:16 and Luke 16:19-31. And all this reminds me of an incident I think worth relating.

I spent my vacation in a quiet hamlet where I formed the acquaintance of a Mrs. "X," who happened to be a very unique character. Her early educational advantages had been limited so that she seldom spoke other than ungrammatically and in a high falsetto tone at that. But she was naturally sharp as a tack. She has a son who was at that time a lawyer living in Chicago. (He is now in Congress.) And the story hinges on a visit which Mrs. "X" made to that son's Chicago home. He had married wealthy and lived in one of the fashionable residence districts. The daughter-in-law became very much devoted to her husband's mother, though she labored hard to have her leave off some habits that had become second nature to her. But let me quote it as nearly as I recall it in Mrs. "X's" own phraseology:

"You see, Brother Prentice, Elmira [that was the daughter-in-law] thought she could teach an old dog new tricks, an' one day she says to me, 'Mother, don't you think you could break yourself of that rather prim'tive practice of conveyin' food to your mouth with your knife? Wouldn't you like to try it? Suppose you begin to-day.' An' I said, 'Elmira, don't you lose a mite o' sleep about that matter. I'll promise you now that if there's anything forkable on the table I'll fork it, and if there ain't I'll knife it.'"

She put it a little bit crudely, Will, but the principle holds good on the very subject I am considering. Sometimes you'll have to handle delicate subjects. When such a one comes up speak out clear and bold.

I want you to be a fully orbed young fellow with no pet hobbies to trot out every time you have a chance to make a grandstand play. The gospel of Jesus Christ is by all odds the biggest thing in the world. Don't attempt to sidetrack it, or compromise it, or whittle it away. I am now an old man with the snows of seventy nine winters on my head. For more than half a century I have preached the gospel in season and out of season. And I want this to go down in black and white for your clear young eyes to read. I have never regretted a single sermon in which I came out clear and strong with, "This is so," but I do regret the few in which I raised the question, "Is this so?" The pulpit is no more a place of expression of doubt than is the powder magazine a place for the striking of matches. See to it that from your pulpit there rings out a bugle blast of the faith triumphant. All else that enters into your success as a minister is but as dross compared with this.

"The salutation of me, Paul, with mine own hand. Grace be with you."

Affectionately your uncle,
William Prentice.

Preach Permanent Ideas.

A great deal is being said just now in the newspapers about Theodore Thomas, the great musical director of Chicago, and the editorials declare with great unanimity that his crowning glory was his conscientious adherence to the lofty and classical works of the masters. All his life long he persistently refused to pander to the lower taste of the populace, that demanded a low grade of jiggy and jerky melody, and he is credited with having done much toward cultivating a taste for the better grades of music among the people. Is there not a lesson in this for ministers of the gospel? Is there not a permanent and lofty set of ideas in every system, and along by their side a transitory and ephemeral set of notions that constitute the "rag time" of religion? Is it not true that about all of the divisions in our own ranks as well as the larger alienations of the visible church have their foundation in this insect world of "theology"? Preach permanent ideas. "Why labor for the meat that perisheth?" The path of history is strewn thickly with ideas now dead, that men once believed to be the veritable law of heaven. A. C. F.

The City the Goal*

By Lloyd Darsie

III.

In future movements for the conquest of the city, evangelism will play an important part. In this direction we are splendidly equipped. From the beginning, the Disciples have been distinguished for their evangelistic zeal and fervor. Those who have pointed out our peculiarities have always conceded this.

A passion for souls, a fervent yearning for the unsaved, was characteristic of the pioneers. They believed in the gospel. They held it to be the power of God. They had a sublime confidence in the old, sweet story. They never doubted that, when loyally and lovingly told, it would win its way to the human heart. They said, with Paul, "We will know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified." Like the apostle they preached, not for the sake of preaching, but to rally men to the cross of Christ. They were rarely disappointed. God gave them souls for their hire. They received little else, but they were satisfied. Every sermon was an evangelistic sermon. Every preacher was an evangelist; to close a discourse without an earnest invitation to the unsaved was treason to the King. Those men were masters in exhortation. They studied the art of appeal. They knew the way to the human heart. "With many other words" and oft-repeated exhortations they urged the claims of God upon the souls of their hearers. Not only so, but they made plain the way of salvation. They preached as though some present would hear the gospel for the last time. To preach a sermon without pointing out the divinely appointed steps by which the sinner approaches God and obtains the forgiveness of sins, was considered wasted time and effort. If the theme offered no logical opportunity to outline faith, repentance and baptism, they lugged it in with no apology for such an intrusion.

They opened the door of the kingdom so wide and made the invitation to enter so frank and cordial, that no man doubted a welcome. Their very sermons were invitations. Such subjects as "The Evidences of Pardon," "The Remission of Sins," "The Dispensations," "The Simplicity of the Gospel," "The Divine Authority," and "What is Conversion?" will indicate the character of their efforts. It was great preaching. It was comprehensive preaching. It was successful preaching. It made possible our greatest triumphs as a people. It swept whole churches into our ranks. We need such preachers and such preaching to-day. What our young men need is not some new interpretation of the gospel—not some restatement to meet present needs—but a return to the simplicity, the earnestness, the directness and the audacity of those grand men of God.

Such is our heritage as a people. We have trained in this school. We have before us such examples and ideals. We have been schooled in evangelistic methods. We are equipped for personal and aggressive effort as are no others. Our religious neighbors understand this. They look up to us as possessing the fire and zeal that once pushed the conquests of Methodism far and wide. If we are specialists in this field, we ought to work our specialty. If we are so exceptionally endowed for this work, we should be bold and audacious. We should undertake special efforts and plan great campaigns. When I have studied the evangelistic efforts of our denominational friends, the large investment of men and money and their abounding satisfaction with comparatively meager results, especially when compared with their investment, and then have thought of our own great harvests gathered annually without great display or large expenditure, I have thought of the Savior's promise, "To him that hath shall be given, and he shall have the more abundance."

The character of evangelistic work is changing. It is no longer one great evangelist. It is no longer the exploitation of the personal gifts and eccentricities of some remarkable man, but a well-planned and amply-equipped campaign. It is now a combined effort enlisting many men of rare spiritual power who simultaneously attack the enemy and occupy strategic points in the great city. That this is the wiser plan, that this is "the more excellent way," that it promises larger and more permanent results, I think none will doubt. This co-operative evangelistic effort has been conspicuously successful in many of our cities, and waits, I think, its greater triumphs, when undertaken by a people best fitted for evangelistic work. I believe the time is ripe for such a forward movement by the Disciples in many cities. Let the movement be well planned. Let all the churches be interested. Let the field be canvassed and explored, that we may know the ground to be won. Let the preliminary work be carefully done. Let the expectation be created that is half success. Let good choirs be trained for effective co-operation. Let special committees be appointed on advertising, finance, personal work, ushering, devotion and press work, and trained for special effort.

My Brethren! What little round top was to the battle of Gettysburg, the city is to our present civilization. It is the key to the situation. To fail here is to make final and irreparable failure. Jesus our captain summons us to this conflict! The Son of God goes forth to war! Who follows where he leads? Shall we be indifferent when such tremendous interests are at stake?

A FELLOW FEELING

Why She Felt Lenient Towards the Drunkard.

A great deal depends on the point of view. A good temperance woman was led, in a very peculiar way, to revise her somewhat harsh judgment of the poor devil who cannot resist his cups and she is now more charitable. She writes:

"For many years I was a great sufferer from asthma. Finally my health got so poor that I found I could not lie down, but walked the floor whilst others slept. I got so nervous I could not rest anywhere.

"Specialists told me I must give up the use of coffee—the main thing that I always thought gave me some relief. I consulted our family physician, and he, being a coffee fiend himself, told me to pay no attention to their advice. Coffee had such a charm for me that in passing a restaurant and getting a whiff of the fragrance I could not resist a cup. I felt very lenient towards the drunkard who could not pass the saloon. Friends often urged me to try Postum, but I turned a deaf ear, saying, 'That may do for people to whom coffee is harmful, but not for me—coffee and I will never part.'

"At last, however, I bought a package of Postum, although I was sure I could not drink it. I prepared it as directed, and served it for breakfast. Well, bitter as I was against it, I must say that never before had I tasted a more delicious cup of coffee! From that day to this (more than 2 years) I have never had a desire for the old coffee. My health soon returned; the asthma disappeared, I began to sleep well and in a short time I gained 20 pounds in weight.

"One day I handed my physician the tablets he had prescribed for me, telling him I had no use for them. He stayed for dinner. When I passed him his coffee cup he remarked, 'I am glad to see you were sensible enough not to let yourself be persuaded that coffee was harmful. This is the best cup of coffee I ever drank,' he continued; 'the trouble is so few people know how to make good coffee.' When he got his second cup I told him he was drinking Postum. He was incredulous, but I convinced him, and now he uses nothing but Postum in his home and has greatly improved in health." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

—Mrs. Princess Long has been giving a series of concerts through central Illinois during the last two weeks.

—B. H. Lingenfelter, for many years the successful pastor at Seattle, Wash., has resigned the work there to take effect April 1. He prefers to locate somewhere in the west or middle west, but would go anywhere where the finger of Providence would seem to point.

—The church at Murphysboro, Ill., regrets its inability to retain as its pastor Philip Evans, and very cordially commends him to the brotherhood as an honest and earnest worker. Any church needing a minister may address him at Murphysboro, or H. L. Graff, the church clerk.

—Foreign missions are not only a test of our obedience, but means of salvation from narrowness and provincialism. That only is the normal church that is the working missionary church. Some suggestions will be found in another column from Brothers McLean and Rains about the March offering.

—It is not often that we hear of the confession of a mute. In the meeting at Udell, Ia., held by Evangelists Atwood and Gardner, there was a touching scene when a mute wrote upon a blackboard, in response to the evangelist's question, "Do you believe with all your heart that Jesus is the Son of God?" the answer, "Yes."

—The indications point to a very large gathering at the congress this year which is to meet at Columbia, the Athens of Missouri. Here Christian college, one of our best female schools, is making improvement after improvement, and the Bible college building is about completed. It is hoped that the dedication of this handsome edifice may take place at the time of the congress.

—An effort is being made to establish a congregation at Porterville, Cal., a point selected by the state board. It is a good section of California for people in the east to go to. The town is a growing one, and there are already 2,000 people there. Those wishing any information about it may write to W. W. Pew, who is the missionary evangelist acting under the board.

—G. F. Bradford, who has been for three years at Eureka, Kan., is so well liked that he has been asked to remain. The local paper says that never in its history has the church been in such a prosperous condition. The congregation has removed a thousand dollar debt on the building, and over 100 additions have been made to the membership, including some of the most influential citizens.

—Benjamin L. Smith visited the church at Valparaiso January 22, and with A. L. Martin, the special missionary of that church, presented the claims of Indiana Harbor to the continued support of the church at Valparaiso, as it is our own home mission field. The result was the church voted to continue its support of the work of A L Martin as its own home missionary at Indiana Harbor. J. H. O. Smith is the pastor at Valparaiso.

—Geo. C. Ritchey, of Roseburg, Oregon, writes: "Your educational number of the Christian-Evangelist is indeed great and would have been very helpful to the coast states had you issued it Jan. 5 instead of Jan. 12. It reached here yesterday, Jan. 16, after education day. Next year may we have the educational number one week earlier? Success seems to be your close companion. May it continue so." That is one trouble with the "coast states"—they are too far away! If they could only be brought over on this side of the mountains they would be all right. Faith can remove mountains, but there is no promise about removing "coast states"(!) so we will move up our educational number one week on the calendar.

—The work at Platte City, Mo., under Louis S. Cupp moves forward. In three years there have been 185 additions, about 150 being by baptism. Brother Cupp has a large mission study class which occupies the hour of the midweek prayer-meeting, and in the absence of a city library, a public library has been started in the church, beginning with 200 volumes. The young pepple seem greatly interested in these two movements.

—A pastor who is about to leave a church writes concerning its leading members: "They do not even know where our representative papers are published." We are not surprised to learn, after this, that the church has lost its bearings largely through erroneous teaching. The church that does not keep in touch with our literature and with the general enterprises of the brotherhood, is likely to lose its bearings and drift into general uselessness.

—The Christian hospital of this city wishes a few more girls between twenty and thirty years of age, of good morals, with a grammar school education and good health, to take the training course for a nurse. For further information write to Mrs. O. C. Shedd, 4011 Pine St. This institution is a part of the National Benevolent Association, and is under its general supervision. It is doing a much-needed work in the line of Christian benevolence.

—In a great religious campaign we must have the "sinews of war," and the way to have that is to adopt a scriptural, systematic and proportionate method of giving. Send for a bundle of Brother Wharton's tract, "The Christian Use of the Tithe System," and distribute them among the members of your church. Price, three cents per copy, 25 cents per doz., and $1.50 per hundred. The tract contains 24 pages, in three chapters: I. The Tithe Principle; II. The Practice of the Tithe Principle; III. Objections Answered.

—Stephen E. Fisher realizes the value of the Bible chair work and the opportunities for it at Champaign, Ill. Writing of the University Place church he says: "The work of this church will not be what it ought to be until we can institute the Bible chair idea and thus have added facilities for presenting the great fundamentals in their simplicity. The student life here presents in fact one of our greatest opportunities for the dissemination of our plea, and our brotherhood must not pass its call unanswered. The Methodists and Presbyterians are both planning to inaugurate a work of this sort next year."

—The work is progressing at Detroit. Brother Tannar sends a fine report of the Central church. A fine lot has been given to the church for a mission and architects are now at work on plans for a chapel to cost from $10,000 to $15,000. It is hoped to complete this during 1905. "We shall then," writes Brother Tannar, "organize a Sunday-school and congregation and hope to begin a work in that part of the city which ought to mean a great deal to our cause in Detroit in coming years. The site of this proposed new church is in a part of the city that is destined to be most important as a residence section."

—The board of trustees of Eureka college has passed resolutions upon the death of Bro. Thos. E. Bondurant, late of De Land, Ill. He was for many years a faithful and efficient member of the board of trustees of Eureka college and greatly aided it by his warm sympathy, financial co-operation, and wise counsel. He was one of the most liberal supporters in building up a strong Christian college in Illinois. With his sister, Mary E. Bondurant, and other relations sincere sympathy is expressed. The deeds of such men as Brother Bondurant go on until the end of time. They live not for themselves, but for others.

—In connection with the third annual convention of the Religious Education Association which will be held in Boston from Sunday, Feb. 12, to Thursday, Feb. 16, there is being arranged an exhibition of Sunday-school apparatus, literature and methods of teaching. It is designed to make the exhibit as pedagogically complete as possible and to show the plans and methods of instruction pursued by Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish Sunday-schools. Communications respecting it should be addressed to Dr. Richard Morse Hodge, 700 Park Ave., New York City.

—I have often thought I would try to tell you of my enjoyment in the perusal of the Christian-Evangelist. I always turn to the reports from the churches; then to the "Easy Chair," and never fail to read "As Seen From the Dome," by Dr. Power. I had the pleasure of hearing him speak several times and must say that I think he is a Power in the church. There are so many things in the paper that are helpful to me—the Endeavor Lesson, the Midweek Prayer-meeting, etc., I cannot express my appreciation of the paper, and would be lost without it. E. H.

—Z. T. Sweeney will dedicate the new Christian church at Owensboro, Ky., on Feb. 26. The handsome edifice will represent an investment of $35,000. We will all rejoice with Bro. R. H. Crossfield in the prospect of doing even a greater work than he has done in that city. During 1904 his report shows 538 names on the roll with a gain of 84 for the year. The Tenth Legion has a membership of 22. The treasurer's report showed all bills paid, and a balance in hand. The same can be said of the auxiliary societies. $640 were raised for missions and Brother Crossfield had a total of 197 additions there and at other places where he preached during the year. W. E. Harlow will conduct a revival service for the church during April.

—The Missouri state secretary and the secretary of the Board of Church Extension came very near having a race. Both had checks of $1,000 sent to them at the beginning of the year. The first letter opened by Brother Muckley contained a check for that amount from a friend in Missouri on the annuity plan. This lifted our church extension fund up to over $445,000 which means that there is another $55,000 to be raised in order to reach the half million by the close of this year. We cannot let 1905 go out without a clear round half million dollars for the use of our Church Extension Board. The latest amount received is a gift of $400 from a friend in Texas. All money should be sent to G. W. Muckley, Corresponding Secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Missouri.

—Henry W. Schwan reports a day of great blessing and good things at Ripley, O. Benj. Wettich, who resigned a splendid position as superintendent of a German parochial school in Cincinnati in order, to use his own declaration, "to be a Disciple of Christ only and to preach Christ to my fellow countrymen," was ordained to the Christian ministry by Brother Schwan, R. H. Dodson, present pastor of the church at Ripley, assisting. The services were conducted in the German Evangelical church, where Brother Schwan had the privilege of ministering in German once each month, while he was located at Ripley, to a scattered but very devout band of Germans. The fact that Professor Wettich's father and brother are both prominent in the Lutheran ministry and that he himself has always been a Lutheran has caused a great deal of comment on the part of the general public. To quote Brother Schwan, "His own flock and our people are one in bidding him God-speed and our people regard this as God's definite leading, pointing toward larger things."

—Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis in a recent sermon at Plymouth church, Brooklyn, predicts an unequaled spiritual revival which is to sweep over the country. He says: "We have been in a hothouse condition for 20 years. We have analyzed the Bible and dogmatized the Bible, and have had heresy trials that were more dangerous than Chicago fires, and we have asked questions and answered them. We have passed from the old thought that the world was created in six days to the new thought that God is making a new world every moment. At length we understand that God is not far off, that he is not to interrupt our laws with miracles, but that he is close to man, and is living with him all the time. All this is the result of science. We are at the beginning of one of the greatest church-going epochs in all history."

—We acknowledge the receipt of a bright little calendar from Dr. Albert Buxton, president of Dexter-Houston college, Dexter, Mo. He says:

> Southeast Missouri is growing as rapidly as the "boom" regions of the pioneer frontiers—and yet, measure half way up from the northern Arkansas line to the Missouri river, and half way from the Mississippi river—in this one-fourth of Missouri, I can find only one minister residing at and giving his whole attention to one church, and only three or four more that reside in this region and give half their time to any one church. A Christian college here is a permanent fortress—an arsenal of Christianity in this region. Pray for us. Help us.

No school in any part of our state is needed more than Dexter college, and everyone who knows the situation in southeast Missouri can but sympathize with the heroic effort which Brother Buxton and those associated with him are making to build up a Christian institution in that section of our great state.

—We have received a neat pamphlet containing a sermon by Rev. John Chester Ball on the occasion of his inauguration as president of Keuka college, entitled, "Christianity a Warfare for Conquest." In an introductory note, Dr. Geo. H. Ball, who visited our convention in St. Louis refers to the occasion of the inauguration of his successor as one of great interest to himself. He says: "Even a strong and healthy man at 85 years of age necessarily expects soon to lay aside weighty responsibilities. My anxiety for a successor, every way able and worthy, has, for some time, been very deep and strong. It gave me unspeakable pleasure to find such a man among my blood relatives. * * * I continue my active service for it, as God shall give me strength and prolong my life." The able sermon, based on the great commission in Matthew, shows that the new president is likely to be a worthy successor to the venerable man who has filled the position with such distinguished ability.

Ministerial Exchange.

Churches wishing a pastor or an evangelist of experience will be put in communication with a young man by addressing J. O. Crowder, 1909 Farragut St., St. Louis, Mo.

"Any pastor or evangelist desiring a singer of exceptional ability as soloist and chorus leader may find the same by addressing me. She is a Christian lady and terms will be reasonable." H. G. BENNETT.

Jefferson City, Mo.

Charles E. McVay, singing evangelist, is open for an engagement in March. Can give popular song recital to help pay expense of meetings. Address, Benkelman, Neb.

B. B. Burton, 1109 26th St., Des Moines, Ia., desires to hold a meeting in May, also two summer meetings. He can also fill several Chautauqua dates.

C. Manly Rice, 58 Virginia St., Wheeling, W. Va., desires to correspond with a male singing evangelist having a sympathetic voice, who is a good soloist and choir director. Meeting to begin soon.

Philip Evans, 405 N. 9th St., Murphysboro, Ill., wishes to receive propositions regarding a pastorate in Illinois, Missouri or Iowa, paying from $800 to $1,000 per year.

J. J. Limerick, Carrollton, Mo., is open for an engagement as pastor or for meetings.

H. C. Williams, 3308 Lincoln Blvd., Omaha, Neb., will correspond with churches needing a minister.

W. F. Shearer, Angola, Ind., is open for an engagement to hold a meeting in February. Can furnish singer if desired.

The church at Lamont, Okla., wishes a minister, married man under fifty years of age preferred, for half or three-fourths time. Will pay at the rate of $600 per year.

Dedication at South Haven, Kansas.

It was a long trip from Wabash, Indiana, to South Haven, Kansas. But it was a most joyful occasion when we met with the faithful brethren, under the wise leadership of their devoted pastor, Bro. J. M. Morrison, and dedicated their new and beautiful house of worship with all of the indebtedness provided for. Their house is modern in all of its designs, and will make a most comfortable place for worship. On account of crop failure in that part of Kansas for two years running, it required a great struggle on the part of these devoted men and women of God to build and furnish the house. But they proved themselves equal to the task, and they have completed the work.

Omaha's Union Meeting.

The churches of Christ in Omaha are uniting with the other city churches in a forward evangelistic movement. There are about fifty different congregations engaged in the campaign. Our two faithful pastors, Bro. S. D. Dutcher and Bro. H. J. Kirschstein, are each preaching one week according to the plan adopted—Brother Dutcher at the Westminster Presbyterian and Brother Kirschstein at the Castellar Presbyterian church. The meetings are to continue three weeks. Much good is looked for and a widespread interest is being manifested. Indirectly the joining of forces is bound to result in benefit to the cause of primitive Christianity in Omaha. It is putting our people in touch with portions of the city not hitherto reached except in an indirect way, and will give the people of those communities a chance to get acquainted with the people and preachers devoted to the restoration movement. Protracted meetings in both the North Side and the First churches will probably be held later in the season. LOUIS R. SMITH.

The Revival in Denver, Colorado.

[In a letter to the editor under date of Jan. 20, Brother Tyler writes thus concerning the great revival at Denver.]

We are in the midst of the most intense religious interest, in Denver, that I have ever seen.

The South Broadway Christian church is the center of one of the ten districts into which the city is divided. It is crowded every night, and is full every day. Cards are used on which are the words: "I have an honest desire to live a Christian life." There is a place in which to write the name of the church of one's preference; about 100 persons have expressed a preference for the South Broadway Christian church.

I cannot, in a brief note, tell you a tithe of the good things that are coming to pass in these days and in this part of the world and that I am fairly bursting to proclaim. To-day was observed as a day of prayer in Denver. This is Friday, Jan. 20, 1905. Business houses were closed from 11:30 to 2:00 o'clock. The mayor issued an order closing all city offices and suspending business during this time. Great meetings were held in the Tabor opera house, the Curtis theatre, and the Coliseum. The governor left his office in the state house to hear J. Wilbur Chapman preach in the Tabor opera house. This is enough for the present. As soon as I can find time to do so I will tell the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST about this most wonderful campaign. Cannot say more now. B. B. TYLER.

How We Established a Church.

There are many towns in the same condition that Junction City, Kansas, was in. But there is no reason why they should not have a Christian church if the people have the love of Christ in their hearts and sufficient energy to go to work with the determination to "have" a church. In the early spring of 1904, J. W. Scott (our present elder) and myself advertised for those who were former members of the Christian church. A few readily responded and took up the work with us of finding others. Some we found were "cold" and tried to discourage our work, for they "thought there were plenty of churches in the city." These were either afraid of the tax on their pocketbooks or of being unpopular with other churches, if they lent their aid for a new church. Many such obstacles confronted us, but thank God we surmounted them all for Christ's sake. May 22, of 1904, we organized the church with 19 members, and began to hold communion services, prayer-meetings, and Sunday-school, and these meetings have been of great comfort and joy, and in the future those few, like Christ's Disciples, will look back upon those hours with great pleasure. To-day we are proud to state that we have enrolled in the church and Sunday-school 70 members; have leased a church for five years; employed a pastor (F. M. Branic), who will begin his work Feb. 1 with a revival meeting; and we have abundant resources for meeting all financial obligations and the Christian church of Junction City is an established fact.

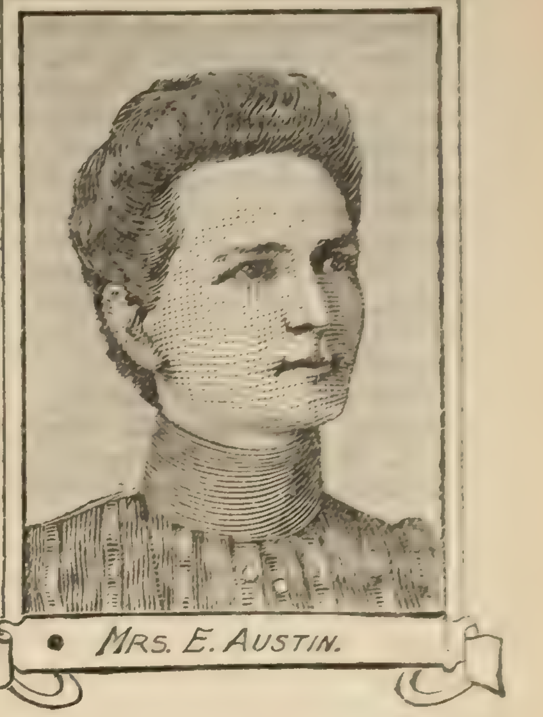
THOUSANDS HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE AND NEVER SUSPECT IT.



MRS. E. AUSTIN.

An interesting letter to our readers from Mrs. E. Austin, of New York City.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 9th, 1902.

A little over a year ago I was taken with severe pains in my kidneys and bladder. They continued to give me trouble for over two months and I suffered untold misery. I became weak, emaciated and very much run down. I had great difficulty in retaining my urine, and was obliged to pass water very often night and day. After I had used a sample bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, which you so kindly sent me on my request, I experienced great relief. I immediately bought of my druggist two large bottles and continued taking it regularly. I am pleased to say that Swamp-Root cured me entirely. I can now stand on my feet all day without having any bad symptoms whatever. You are at liberty to use this testimonial letter if you wish.

Gratefully yours,

Mrs. E. Austin.

19 Nassau St.

The mild and prompt effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Recommended and taken by physicians, used in hospitals and endorsed by people of prominence everywhere. To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free, by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

The Chicago Campaign.

The evangelistic campaign of our churches here is progressing, to the encouragement of all who are co-operating in it. Our force was strengthened last week by the coming of F. L. Moffett, of Centerville, Iowa, to lead the forces at the Douglas Park church. Thus far, with one exception, every co-operating church has had a number of accessions during the campaign. The largest number gained thus far is that of the Metropolitan church, 48. This church, however, has been conducting its meetings for one week longer than the other churches. The Austin church is second, with 44 accessions. The First church is third, with 22. There have been reported, to date, 190 accessions to the various churches.

The down-town noonday meetings have grown steadily in interest and attendance. Bro. H. O. Breeden, of Des Moines, Iowa, addressed the largest audience of the campaign on the closing day of his service here. This week the central noonday meeting was addressed on Monday by H. A. Northcutt, of Kirksville, Mo.; on Tuesday by J. H. O. Smith, of Valparaiso, Ind., and the Wednesday meeting, by J. P. Rice, of South Bend, Ind. The meeting on Thursday will be addressed by F. L. Moffett, of Centerville, Iowa. Friday is to be a grand rally day, when the work of the campaign will be reviewed and reports given. Brothers I. W. Lowman, of De Land, Ill., J. J. Taylor, of Connersville, Ind., W. A. A. Harris, of Kentucky, Geo. B. Stewart, of Dayton, Ohio, and local pastors will speak on that day. Each day in these meetings the invitation of the gospel is extended, and the attempt is made to discover those who have been connected with our churches in other places and not now identified with local congregations. A storm is now upon us, and it remains to be seen how seriously it will affect the progress of the work.

The Conference Committee.

So widely scattered are the members of the Free Baptist conference committee that it has seemed impossible to get any considerable number together. However, by correspondence it has been generally agreed that Robert Moffett, of Cleveland, shall act as secretary of the committee, and a meeting will be called at the earliest favorable date.

The hope has been expressed by some members of the Free Baptist committee that we may have an extended conference during the summer. We must be at least well ready for that. It seems to be generally felt, I think, that our larger acquaintance is favorable to our full union. We can at least make progress by cultivating a kindly acquaintance. I am very sure that any who oppose this will make an unusually sad mistake.

Easter Services Ready.

The Christian Publishing Company's presses have just turned out for the National Benevolent Association thousands of copies of a beautiful Easter exercise, by Palmer Hartsough and the Fillmores, entitled "Easter Joy." The association will send this exercise free of cost to all Bible-schools and church societies wishing to present it on Easter night. Since this is the only day on which appeals are made for church benevolences, and because of the dearness of this ministry to the heart of the Master, we heartily commend this service to all our congregations everywhere.

The Cleveland Campaign.

The meetings are doing quite well. The local interest in each church is reported good. In the first 15 days 184 additions were reported. The greatest number of additions at any one place is Miles Ave. with 76. While Cedar Ave. is a church of several years' standing, yet this is the first meeting ever held in the church. So far there have been 22 added there. Not only are additions being won, but Pastor Wise reports the best audiences he has ever seen in the house. Everybody who knows G. W. Moore, knows that the preaching is of the highest order. At the preachers' meeting at the Y. M. C. A. building, Monday, Jan. 23, it was moved to have another effort of like character next year, and a committee was appointed to begin the preparations. It takes some time to learn how to do a thing right. All things considered, the Cleveland meetings have been very successful so far.

A Great Church Convention.

In Des Moines, Iowa, June 22-28 will be held what promises to be the largest church convention ever held in Iowa. At that time the Christian church (Disciples of Christ) will hold their jubilee convention, celebrating the completion of fifty years' missionary work of that church in the state.

Fifty years ago that church had seven ministers, 37 congregations and 3,000 members in Iowa. They now have 327 ministers, 485 congregations and 60,000 members in the state. Strenuous efforts are being made to have this gathering eclipse any gathering of the kind that has ever been held in the state and it will not be at all surprising if 25,000 people attend these sessions. The church is waging a strenuous evangelistic campaign this year. They have their hearts set on winning 10,000 souls for Christ during the year and have for their motto "Each One Win One." The ministers and churches are unitedly pushing the interest of the convention and are taking offerings in their respective congregations to support the missions of the state.

The Christian Lesson Commentary.

The volume for 1905 is equal to any one of the preceding nineteen volumes. This book is a real aid to those who follow the international Sunday-school lessons either as pupils, or as teachers. For six months in 1905 the studies will be in the gospel of John. The "Harmony," in this book, of the four gospels, is alone worth the price of the volume to those who will take up the study of "The Life of Christ" and who have not a "Harmony." This is an eclectic work. The "helps" have been gathered from a wide field.

The Christian Lesson Commentary on the Sunday-school Lessons for 1905, by W. W. Dowling, is a substantial volume published by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis, for the use of advanced students and teachers. The helps given are extensive and eclectic and a useful feature is the Dictionary of Scripture Proper Names at the end of the volume. Copious illustrations, chronologies, summaries, etc., add to its value. This is the twentieth year of its appearance as a lesson help.—The Canadian Congregationalist.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

New York Letter.

The twelfth annual conference of the Foreign Mission Boards of the United States and Canada was held in New York, Jan. 11 and 12. It is the custom for one of the boards to entertain the conference at luncheon the two days of the conference, so our F. C. M. S. did the entertaining this year, and did it gracefully and with credit to our great brotherhood. Secretary Rains was chairman of the committee of arrangements, and also presided at one session of the conference. Among the topics discussed were these: ''Arbitration,'' ''Young People's Missionary Movements,'' ''Missionary Exhibits,'' ''How to Enlist and Cultivate Large Givers to Foreign Missions,'' ''Missionary Magazines—Value to Society, Make-up and Distribution,'' ''The Outlook in the Congo Free State,'' ''The Relation of Missions to the Native Church and Its Leaders,'' and many other themes of interest in the work of evangelizing the world. All the larger missionary societies of the country are co-operating through this agency, and the effect is mutually beneficial to each and all of them. The next annual conference will meet in Nashville in February, 1906, just a few days in advance of the Student Volunteers' Convention. At these conferences one also comes in touch more or less with missionaries, at home on furlough, who add much to the value of the convention by their practical suggestions.

While in the city F. M. Rains held two missionary rallies, one at the church on 169th street and one at the church on 56th street. Dr. Macklin will remain in this city for a few weeks to do some work along special lines and then will go to Philadelphia to pursue certain medical studies at the Jefferson medical college.

At a recent meeting of the Lotus club of this city Professor Henry Van Dyke, of Princeton, was the guest of honor. Dr. Van Dyke, responding to a toast, spoke of two things in particular: Preachers and writers. He claimed that one of the surest measures of a preacher's success is the number of true and tried friends he can make; and in order for a man to make friends he must be friendly toward men, he must be the opposite of what the old Scotchman said of his minister, ''He is invisible six days in the week, and incomprehensible on the seventh.'' If the preacher is ever tempted to climb up in his theological sycamore tree, if he be a man of perception he should heed the cry he must sometimes hear from the crowd: ''Zaccheus, come down.'' It is when he can live with his fellowmen on a footing where he makes them realize that he has the same temptations and struggles to contend with that he can be most helpful to them, and then he is liable to find in their friendship his best reward. In speaking of his literary work Dr. Van Dyke said: ''I am fond enough of the honest dollar to be happy that the pay of writers is better than it used to be. In order for one to become a literary success it is not necessary to have his hair growing half way down his back, nor is it necessary to live in literary society. I could not get into the blood-and-thunder school of modern fiction, nor into the thud-and-blunder school of modern criticism, nor into the neurotic nor the tommy-rotic school of poetry.'' ''After all,'' said he, ''the ethical interest is the supreme ideal of life, for he who emasculates himself until he is unable to tell the difference between good and evil, between right and wrong, incapacitates himself as a writer, and yet a writer is not a preacher, and literature is not the pulpit.''

Professor Franklin H. Giddings, of Columbia university, was the speaker at the January meeting of the Disciples' union of New York, which was held at the church on 119th street, Jan. 10. His topic was ''The Present-Day Trend of Social Evolution,'' in the discussion of which he claimed that human society has made steady progress through all the centuries, though at times it seemed, looking at certain periods of history and certain people, that no advancement was being made. Rythmic progress was the phrase he used to describe the development of society, along the lines of politics, religion, industry and business. He claims that we are rapidly tending towards what is regarded as socialism by many people, which means either public ownership or public control of most, if not all, the public facilities in the United States. This doctrine has been in practical operation on the continent of Europe for many years, and in England pretty nearly all the street railways are owned by the respective English cities. And every year finds a considerable number of our cities added to the list of those which are doing this sort of thing. He predicted that within the next few years all public utilities will pass into the possession or the control of the people in general. The cry of liberty is raised against this idea. But he claims that we have not as a nation yet learned what liberty means. The Pilgrims and the Puritans came to this country not to secure individual liberty for themselves or any one else, but a group liberty. If any man among them dared to think or to act independently of the group to which he belonged, woe unto him. He was allowed to go to Rhode Island, if he would hurry. He says individual liberty came into this country, or began, in the days of Andrew Jackson, and it started among the people of the Mississippi valley, and was a result of the pioneer life of the preceding decades. He also claims that our social pyramid is upside down and we are just beginning to see it. For the last twenty-five years our legislatures, state and national, have been making laws to bind the individual and curtail his rights; and all the while we have been giving increased prerogatives to corporations. But we have already begun to turn in the other direction. By a study of the rythmic progress of society we see how this has worked in the past. Time was when men were bound to their clan, tribe, feudal lord, or to their parish, as now they are bound to their trade union, trust, or to their sect. All this indicates the absence of real individual liberty. It is bondage. But now men may leave their party, religious sect, trade or their trade union and the like without being disgraced. Real progress is being made and in the end we will have union in liberty and liberty in union in a degree in which we have not had these things. His speech was clear, thoughtful, and in the most dispassionate style. S. T. Willis.

Our Young Folks.

Our Young Folks, published by the Christian Publishing Co., 1522 Locust St., St. Louis, 75 cents a year, is a splendid weekly for young people, not only as a help in Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work, but as well suited to develop a high moral and spiritual tone. Such literature is one of the best aids to training up the young in the way they should go. Try it for your boys and girls. It stands at the head of the list of its kind.—Texas Missions.

The Land of Roses and Magnolias.

The Soniat Ave. Christian church, New Orleans, was organized last April with 23 members. Their number was increased during last year to 37 members. They secured a property which is now worth $7,000 or $8,000 and has a debt of only $3,000 (to the Church Extension Board). The building is nicely finished and furnished. The baptistry is elevated above the platform, and has heavy curtains hung over it, stretching across its middle lengthwise. It is the best arrangement for a baptistry I have seen anywhere—better than sliding doors, rolling floors, or drop curtains. The work accomplished is the best testimony to the devotion of this handful of workers.

I began work as their pastor on Jan. 1. There were two additions the first Lord's day, one by letter and one by baptism from the Episcopalians, one from the Baptists the second Lord's day, and three by statement last Sunday. The prospects are bright for the future.

On last Friday night the church gave an elegant reception in my honor. Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Catholics and Jews were present. Brethren Wilkinson and Merrill, pastor of the Rayne Memorial Methodist and Valence St. Baptist churches, respectively, made very complimentary speeches. Bro. A. M. Denholme, general manager of the New Orleans Item, one of our elders and our efficient Sunday-school superintendent, made the address of welcome.

The American Christian Missionary Society is fostering this new work in this great city. New Orleans, on account of the Panama canal, promises to become the central city in the western hemisphere. It is growing rapidly—now has over 300,000 people. It is a cosmopolitan city, and here the nations of the earth may be reached. French, Italians and Spanish give it a Latin atmosphere. Forty per cent of the population is said to be Roman Catholic. The Soniat church is in a splendid uptown district, where the chances for growth are good. Already I hear whisperings of a third church.

Bro. T. B. Larrimore has been in a meeting with the First church since Jan. 1. This church is taking on new life, and the membership express themselves as highly pleased with Brother Larrimore's preaching. There have been two additions by statement. The meeting still continues.

The writer is much pleased with the beauty of this city, and its opportunities for work. He is in love with the people. They have a way of wooing that is irresistible.

Will the brethren at large please send to me the names of Christians moving to this city? It is said that there are enough people here who should be affiliated with us to give us the largest Protestant membership in the city. Is it not the pastor's business to look after his sheep, even when they wander away from his fold? Marcellus R. Ely.

A Fine Record.

At the annual business meeting of the First church reports were read from 12 departments. Of many prosperous years perhaps the one just closed was the most prosperous. It certainly was from the standpoint of money, $8,765 was raised for all purposes including missions, charities, current expenses, repairs, etc. Of this $1,250 was paid into the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. In addition to this not less than $1,000 from individual members is known to have been given through private channels. Including their own pastor six workers are kept in the field for all their time, and one other is supported by a brother and sister of the congregation. The active roll of membership is 911, with 152 retired from the active roll. The congregation is by no means wealthy. The amount raised comes from a multiplicity of givers, rather than large sums from a few. One feature of this church is that no paid socials, entertainments or bazars of any kind are resorted to as a means of raising funds. There have been added to the church 101 members during the year. This was without outside evangelistic aid to the pastor.

This is near the end of Bro. J. G. Slayter's fifth year here. The success of the church is largely owing to his indefatigable zeal, his physical endurance, the genial sunshine of his heart and his powerful gospel preaching, utterly devoid of any sensational element. Perhaps the most effectual door open to him is his large Bible class. During the year the average weekly attendance has been about 150. At least 50 per cent of those brought into the church came through this class, and the secret of his success seems to be his application of the Sunday-school lesson to the daily lives of the people, together with a painstaking care to keeping up the attendance.

Another powerful instrument of the church is "The Brotherhood." This meets one night in each month. Sociological questions are discussed by either local or outside talent. The membership is 89, with an average attendance of over 100. Men meet each other as men. All artificial walls which separate brother from brother are removed. It promises to be a strong factor for good citizenship in this city. Since the organization of this club three years ago three other similar clubs have been organized. They have met once in joint session.

By the drawing power of a good choir, by Brother Slayter's plain, easy, practical, everyday gospel preaching, and by the combined activities of a harmonious and devoted church, splendid audiences are gathered together, weekly, morning and evening, winter and summer, and it is truly delightful to see the power which the gospel has over the people in these mercenary days of hurry and drive, of selfishness and worldly-mindedness.

NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA.

A CURE FOR ALL.

Not a Patent Cure-all, Nor a Modern Miracle, But Simply a Rational Cure for Dyspepsia.

In these days of humbuggery and deception, the manufacturers of patent medicines, as a rule, seem to think their medicines will not sell unless they claim that it will cure every disease under the sun. And they never think of leaving out dyspepsia and stomach troubles. They are sure to claim that their nostrum is absolutely certain to cure every dyspeptic and he need look no further.

In the face of these absurd claims it is refreshing to note that the proprietors of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have carefully refrained from making any undue claims or false representations regarding the merits of this most excellent remedy for dyspepsia and stomach troubles. They make but one claim for it, and that is, that for indigestion and various stomach troubles, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is a radical cure. They go no farther than this, and any man or woman suffering from indigestion, chronic or nervous dyspepsia, who will give the remedy a trial, will find that nothing is claimed for it that the facts will not fully sustain.

It is a modern discovery, composed of harmless vegetable ingredients acceptable to the weakest or most delicate stomach. Its great success in curing stomach troubles is due to the fact that the medicinal properties are such that it will digest whatever wholesome food is taken into the stomach, no matter whether the stomach is in good working order or not. It rests the overworked organ and replenishes the body, the blood, the nerves, creating a healthy appetite, giving refreshing sleep and the blessings which always accompany a good digestion and proper assimilation food.

In using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, no dieting is required. Simply eat plenty of wholesome food and take these Tablets at each meal, thus assisting and resting the stomach, which rapidly regains its proper digestive power, when the Tablets will be no longer required.

Nervous Dyspepsia is simply a condition in which some portion or portions of the nervous system are not properly nourished. Good digestion invigorates the nervous system and every organ in the body.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by all druggists at 50 cts. per package.

Mississippi.

My first year's work for the Meridian church closed Dec. 31 and I have accepted a call for 1905. The work in many respects has been very pleasant. The membership is now 150 including 34 additions during the year. The church raised $557 to liquidate the church extension debt; gave $10 for church extension; $20 for foreign missions; $36 for home missions; $100 for the state work; $23.50 for the new church building at Hickory, Miss., besides other offerings, for the orphans' home, etc. The total raised for all purposes was about $2,000, which does well for such a small congregation. Our Sunday-school has one of the very best men for its superintendent, Bro. S. K. Cozine, formerly of Lexington, Ky., and a member of the Central church, and our officers have been faithful.

A summary of our year's work would be incomplete without mention being made of the glorious meeting we had in September, conducted by R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky., which resulted in the saving of many souls, as well as being a great spiritual uplift to the church. We are already planning for our meeting to be held in April by Bro. O. P. Spiegel, of Birmingham.

Our cause in Mississippi has been greatly strengthened by the faithful work of the state evangelist, Bro. W. W. Phares, but on account of ill health he has been forced to resign and will serve the church at McComb. We hope soon to have a good man to succeed him, to carry out his well formed plans for the success of our plea in Mississippi.

A. T. Felix, formerly of Bardstown, Ky., has accepted the work at Fayette; Brother Holton, of California, has taken the work at Hattiesburg, and is making an excellent beginning.

Aberdeen is without a preacher, Brother Nutter having gone back to Kentucky. We hope soon to hear that a good man has been secured to preach there.

The Mississippi Christian, edited by M. F. Harmon, at Jackson, has changed its name to The Christian Messenger, and is a great help to the churches throughout the state.

Meridian, Miss. W. M. BAKER.

A Few Suggestions.

The time for the annual offering for foreign missions in the churches is again near at hand. The first Lord's day in March is not far away. The Foreign Society has larger obligations now than ever before. The number of missionary workers is 438, the number of schools and colleges being supported is thirty-eight, the number of hospitals and dispensaries is seventeen, and the number of orphans is over 400. Careful plans should be made for an unprecedented offering. We venture to make a few suggestions to the brethren everywhere.

1. Talk right out about the March offering as a matter of course, as you would about a baptismal service or the Lord's supper. The duty of this offering is just as binding in the scriptures as either of the institutions mentioned.

2. Do not fail to make thorough preparation. Every detail for the offering should be looked after with scrupulous care. Without this it will not be a success.

3. Much depends upon the way the offering is announced. The announcement should be made with moral earnestness and with great expectancy. A timid, half-apologetic announcement invites failure.

4. Divide the church into sections or districts and select a live, wide-awake, interested solicitor to secure subscriptions from every member in each section. This method has proved very successful wherever adopted. In this way some individual members will contribute as much as the whole church gave last year And we suggest that each member be asked for a definite and creditable amount, and not for an uncertain, pitiful "something." Pitch the giving on a high plane.

5. It is important that an offering be secured from every member. Work to increase the number of givers as you would labor to increase the membership of your church. By this method some churches have made their greatest advances. The lamented George Darsie emphasized this plan during his successful twenty-seven years' ministry at Frankfort, Ky. Try to get every member to at least support a missionary for one day by giving $1.65. Ask others to support a missionary for a week by giving $11.55. Others will support a missionary for a month by giving $50.

6. Plan for a foreign mission rally in your church Sunday night, February 19. Some preachers and church officers regard this as one of the greatest meetings in the church during the whole year. They have the churches crowded with eager, interested people.

7. Determine to raise not less than your apportionment This is only the minimum of what the church can and ought to give.

8. Make good use of the March offering envelopes. Place these in the hands of every member of the church in good time before the first Sunday in March. The envelopes are always helpful when faithfully used.

A. McLEAN,
F. M. RAINS.

A HANDSOME CATALOGUE.

Well-Made Carriages and Harness at Factory Prices Are Sold Under a Strong Guarantee.

For years people have been buying carriages and harness of The Columbus Carriage and Harness Company, of Columbus, Ohio.

The plan of the company is to sell direct to the customer from the factory. They guarantee to refund the purchase price on any vehicle not satisfactory, and to pay the freight both ways in case of dissatisfaction on the part of the purchaser.

This plan has met with the success it deserves, and the saving to the buyer ranges from $10 to $40 on an order, according to the price of the job furnished. This is the only company in Ohio making all their own carriages, buggies and harness in their own factory, and selling them exclusively to the mail order buyer. Naturally the prices are much lower than the ordinary dealer can meet, and the price saved in the purchase goes into the buyer's pocket.

Every one contemplating the purchase of a carriage, buggy or horse trappings of any sort should write a postal card to the company for their handsome illustrated catalogue, which gives complete information as to their way of dealing.

The Need of the Hour.

of God.'' When the thought of self-satisfaction, or conceit of one's piety, gets fixed in the mind there is an end of all spiritual growth. One of the surest signs that a soul is getting nearer to God is a growing sensitiveness to sin. There is, indeed, great difference between a moral man and an immoral one, between kindness and brutality, between culture and boorishness; but there is an immeasurably greater difference between the best man that ever lived and God. If you play the violin compare your performance with Paganini. If you paint, put your work alongside an Angelo or a Raphael. The orator does not pattern after some provincial stump speaker, but takes for his models Demosthenes and Pitt and Burke. A candle is better than no light at all in the dark, but a candle casts a shadow in the track of a great modern searchlight; and the searchlight itself fades out in the blaze of the noonday sun.

I once heard F. B. Meyer, of London, tell a story of a visit he made to one of his parishioners who was a washerwoman. She lived in a garret and her day's work hung out upon an adjoining roof. With the blackened roofs and chimneys of sooty London as a background the clothes looked very white and clean. Mr. Meyer complimented his parishioner upon her work, and she was of course greatly pleased. But during the call a snowstorm came up and everything was covered with the beautiful mantle of white. This made the clothes look yellow and dingy. Mr. Meyer humorously called attention to this fact as he was leaving, but the good washerwoman replied, ''Ah, but Mr. Meyer, who can stand against God Almighty's whiteness!'' When we bring ourselves into the presence of God we fall upon our faces, with Isaiah, crying ''Undone!'' One of the greatest dangers of the spiritual life is a callousness, an insensibility to sin; and this is a constant danger, for sin is such a common thing; we hear about it and read about it every day. The very atmosphere we breathe seems saturated with it. It is almost inevitable that we should come to think lightly of it. We think of it as a misfortune, as a natural imperfection, and not as a malignant disease, whose poison is in our very heart. Let us not be deceived. How Christ tore the masks from men's lives in this respect! With him sin was no mere ceremonial thing, but a moral taint which must be gotten rid of at all cost. ''If thy right eye cause thee to sin, pluck it out! If thy right arm, cut it off! Better enter into life maimed than that all should be lost!'' To the apostle Paul sin was no shadow, but an awful reality! Read the seventh chapter of Romans, and you get a glimpse of the tremendous struggle that went on in his own soul. How can any man with the scroll of the centuries unrolled before him think lightly of sin? What tragedies, darkened lives, broken homes, ruined nations, tears, agony and bloodshed are its heritage to the world! If you think lightly of sin, beware! It is only because you have been benumbed by it. If you go to the closet of the purest saint you know, you will hear him exclaim upon his knees, ''God be merciful to me, a sinner!'' But if you would get an adequate conception of the awfulness of sin go to Gethsemane and Calvary! There you see sin as a shadow across the face of God. There you see love suffering that sin may be removed. At that scene the human heart grows tender and sin becomes increasingly hideous. Then it is that we can sing

> ''Just as I am, thy love unknown
> Has broken every barrier down;
> Now to be thine, yea thine alone,
> O Lamb of God, I come! I come!''

It is only the vision of God that can give us the true vision of self and sin.

Next there comes the interesting episode of the angel flying with the coal of fire to touch Isaiah's mouth, saying, ''This hath touched thy lips and thine iniquity is taken away and thy sins are forgiven.'' How swift and sure is God's forgiveness when once we recognize our sin and turn from it.

Then follows Isaiah's consecration: ''I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then I said, Here am I, send me;'' anywhere, however difficult or obscure the field, at home or abroad, in the quiet country or the crowded slums of a great city; I am ready for the baptism of toil and suffering, ready for the task, whatever it may be. It is a human soul that God must have to do his work; it cannot be done through a book; it cannot be done by machinery. His message can come only from the lips that have been touched by the coal from off the altar. Only those whose lives have been cleansed by the power of God can be used for the extension of his kingdom.

After this new vision of God and self life can never be the same. Dannecker, the German sculptor, once spent two years upon a statue of the Christ. When it was finished he called in a little child to see if she would recognize it. ''It is some great man,'' she said—and Dannecker knew that he had failed. Disappointed and saddened, he went to work again; and after he had wrought six years once more the task was finished. Again he called a little child; and while she looked upon the statue, unconsciously she moved toward it, murmuring, ''Suffer little children to come unto me''—and the sculptor knew that this time he had succeeded. The instinct of the child was a better judgment than any jury of critics. It was after this that Napoleon desired him to carve a statue of Venus; Dannecker declined the commission, saying that after he had had a vision of the Christ he could not use his gifts in producing a heathen goddess.

In all our service we need this vision of God. That alone brings the transformation. You may listen to preaching all your days and yet be just as hard and censorious, just as faultfinding in the home, just as clever in driving unscrupulous bargains in your business; but at last there comes an hour in which all this is changed; it is the hour in which you get a vision of The King, and of yourself, and of the fearful price you are paying for every sin. It may come to you in the midst of a great, seething city like this; it may come even at this very hour. You go to your home and say, ''Yes, this is my home, but it is to me a more sacred place than ever before. These are the dear ones God has given me; henceforth I love them with a new love.'' To-morrow you go down town and you say, ''This is my business, but I come to it to-day with clean hands, which shall never again be soiled with anything dishonest or dishonorable.'' You have had a vision of The King, and life is richer, duty sweeter, earth more attractive, and heaven more sure.

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ALABAMA.

Fairhope, Jan. 18 —Well received. Meeting continues. Four confessions. Brother Hill came over the bay to-day and will assist to-night. I will begin a meeting at Meadow Spring Friday night, expecting S. P. Spiegel to come later when Fairhope has finished.—J. F. CALLAHAN.

ARKANSAS.

Bald Knob, Jan. 23.—A short meeting out in the country at Hebron, resulted in taking three confessions. The work was done under many difficulties. They want another meeting next summer.—JAMES H. BROOKS.

Fayetteville, Jan. 26.—There were four conversions at the First church last Sunday.—N. M. RAGLAND.

ARIZONA.

Phoenix, Jan. 16.—We had a fine day yesterday. There were six added, three by confession, three by statement. We organized a church at Tempe, a near by city, with 24 members and a Sunday-school with 45 pupils on last Sunday. They have a splendid hall, and are well equipped for the future I will continue to preach for them on Sunday afternoon until they can do better.—D. D. BOYLE.

Phoenix, Jan. 23.—Four added yesterday, three confessions, five last Sunday, three baptisms. The work grows and I will continue with this church indefinitely.—D. D. BOYLE.

CALIFORNIA.

Monrovia, Jan. 23.—Four more added yesterday, one confession. Organization of church effected with 27 members. Sunday-school officers chosen. Second session of Sunday-school with fine increase over last Lord's day; 12 in boys' class and 10 in young women's class.—SUMNER T. MARTIN, J. A. CARROLL, evangelists.

COLORADO.

Colorado Springs, Jan. 27.—One hundred and nine additions. Home forces. One hundred and seventy dollars for Colorado missions.—CRAYTON S. BROOKS.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, Jan. 23.—Just closed a 17 days' meeting with the historic Beaver Creek church of Maryland, resulting in 22 accessions: 21 by confession and baptism and one by statement. Despite muddy roads, snow drifts, dark nights and other hindrances, we had good audiences all the way through, and I regard this as one of the happiest meetings of my life. No truer people are to be found than in this community. W. S. Hoye has been their faithful minister for 21 years. Our stay at his home was very pleasant.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

IDAHO.

Boise, Jan. 17.—The Lord is blessing us greatly. Since taking the work, Nov. 20, there have been 19 added to our forces—14 in the last three Sundays. We are reaping the abundant harvest from the faithful sowing of our good Brother Wright and his faithful wife. Faithfully he has served the church at this place, and it is only because of his health that he leaves. We will have a new tabernacle in a few weeks that will seat 700 people. We expect a great year's work.—EDW. B. HARRIS.

ILLINOIS.

Plymouth, Jan. 23.—We held a three weeks' meeting at Caney, Kan., in December. Ten identified themselves by letter, many of whom, though among the best people in town, could not before be induced to do so. One come from the Baptists and one by confession. I was ill the last three evenings and Brother Charlton filled the pulpit. We desire to locate with a live, working church with a good field from which to be strengthened. I am recovering my health and strength at home while Mrs. Walton gives a series of concerts in Kansas.—J. ARVILLE WALTON AND WIFE, evangelists.

Chicago, Jan. 20. Our meeting has been in progress 12 days with 30 additions to date.—GEORGE A. CAMPBELL, pastor; H. A. NORTHCUTT, evangelist.

Lake Fork, Jan. 24.—Closed the year at Bellflower, Jan. 1, with 64 additions, 34 by baptism. Raised for all purposes about $1,200; out of debt and money on hand. Began revival here Jan. 13 with home forces. Congregations large and interest good. One man restored who has been a backslider 14 years. Meeting continues.—J. D. WILLIAMS, minister.

Belle Plains, Jan. 19.—We have just closed a meeting, with J. P. Davis doing the preaching. There were five confessions.—E. Z. PONY.

Mt. Carmel, Jan. 23.—Our meeting conducted by Bro. S. M. Martin continues with steady and increasing interest; 120 accessions to date. Baptisms almost every night. The meeting is remarkable in the fact that large audiences keep coming every night so long. I am sure that a long meeting will give the best results. It gives the evangelist time enough to teach and impress the great truths of the gospel.—LEE TINSLEY, pastor.

INDIANA.

Evansville, Jan. 21.—In a meeting here with home forces. There were three confessions yesterday and interest is growing. Chas. J. Schneider is song leader.—ALLEN T. SHAW, pastor Bethany church.

IOWA.

Whiting, Jan. 15.—Five added at regular service: four by baptism and one from the Baptists.—D. S. THOMPSON, pastor.

Kasson, Jan. 21 —We are very grateful to the brethren at Winterset for allowing their pastor, J. H. Swift, to hold us a short meeting, which closed to-day with 12 by confession and baptism, two of which united with the church at Lorimor, all being bright, earnest young people.—H. H. KILGORE.

Atlantic, Jan. 23 —We have just closed a three weeks' meeting with eight additions, all by confession. J. A. McKenzie, our southwest Iowa district evangelist, did the preaching. His next meeting will be at Missouri Valley.—W. B. CREWDSON.

Maxwell, Jan. 19.—Our meeting closed at Elkhart with six added. Excellent results were obtained for the weather through which we were obliged to pass. J. M. Hoffman led us in the effort to save souls. The church is grateful to God for the results that were obtained; we shall reap throughout the year from the seed that was sown. A C. W. B. M. auxiliary was organized with 22 members. This will prove a great spiritual blessing in our future work.—G. E ROBERTS, pastor.

Moorhead.—Just closed a meeting at a mission point five miles in the country with 20 added: 18 by confession and two from the Danish mission church. All of these become members of our home congregation. During the meeting the thermometer registered 18 degrees below zero and four nights it was 14 degrees below. The meeting was closed four nights on account of a storm. There is no more fruitful field than the country adjacent to our prosperous churches.—W. B. WILSON, pastor.

Without MACBETH on it what can you expect of a lamp-chimney!

You need to know how to manage your lamps to have comfort with them at small cost. Better read my Index; I send it free.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Stillwell, Jan. 22.—The First church of Stillwell began a meeting on Jan. 16 with Evangelist D. W. Campbell, of Iowa, and Miss Mayme Eisenbarger, of Bethany, Mo., leader of song. Ten added to date. Great interest manifested. Audience increasing at each service. We are working for a great meeting.—J. C. HOLLEMAN.

KANSAS.

Beloit, Jan. 20.—H. F. Ritz has a fine meeting in progress, Sister Hazelrigg doing the preaching. This is a good field for our plea, —T. WALLACE.

Iuka, Jan. 18.—G. C. Ardrey, of Stafford, has just closed a four weeks' meeting. Although he labored under adverse circumstances the result was a great victory; 22 accessions: 16 by confession and baptism, and six otherwise. Brother Ardrey did a great deal of good in this community, and our church is built up spiritually. The Christian Endeavor has been organized with 20 members. We hope to secure soon the services for part time of some able minister to carry on the work which has been started.—M. E. TREMAIN, church clerk.

Lyons, Jan. 23.—Forty-seven to date, great interest; continue.—HAMILTON AND WILKINSON.

Lawrence, Jan. 23.—Two more additions at the North Lawrence church. In the evening we united with the First church in a union meeting to hear A. McLean's address on missions. Work at the Northside church is moving along nicely, and the congregation is much encouraged.—W. T. Clarkson, pastor.

North Topeka, Jan. 23.—Closed a three weeks' meeting last night with 12 additions, two from the denominations. H. E. Ballou, of Effingham, did the preaching.—F. H. Bentley.

KENTUCKY.

Owenton, Jan. 24.—In 1904 the Owenton Christian church had 40 additions. The amount collected for all purposes was $1,579.58, of which $274.80 were given for missions. In addition to my regular work I made five short visits to the weaker churches in Owen county and added to the several congregations 26 souls—19 by primary obedience. Of the total additions for the year 35 are here reported for the first time. The church attendance is increasing and the prospects are bright for further success.—W. J. Clarke, minister.

LOUISIANA.

Jennings, Jan. 23.—We have had two additions—a U. B. minister and his wife. Services are increasing in size and our members are heroic in their efforts to extend the Master's cause. They paid my expenses to the St. Louis convention and have shown their appreciation in other ways. We have the second largest and the most influential church in the city.—H. L. Ford.

MICHIGAN.

Adrian, Jan. 23.—Five more confessions yesterday, making a total of 22 recently added. We are doing good work for a mission church. —W. H. Kindred.

MISSOURI.

Butler, Jan. 25.—I have been assisting Bro. H. James Crockett here in a three weeks' meeting, beginning January 1. There were 24 additions, of which 18 were baptized. We had but one week of good weather, then came snow and zero weather. On the first day of the meeting the church extended a call to Brother Crockett to become permanent pastor. He has won the hearts of his people and the confidence and respect of the entire community. Butler is a strong church, having many excellent men and women in its membership. Brother Peach, supported by an orchestra, led the singing. Sister W. E. Walton sang a number of gospel solos. I greatly enjoyed the meeting and the hospitality of the community.—J. T. Ogle.

Lathrop, Jan. 23.—One confession here last night.—J. G. Creason.

Princeton, Jan. 23.—We held a five days' meeting Jan. 16-20 at the Union church, six miles southwest of Princeton. There were three added: two by baptism and one from the Christian Union church. Good feeling and interest wrought upon the community.—S. A. Ennefer.

Monett, Jan. 23.—Had a gloriously good meeting yesterday. One more addition by letter; having additions nearly every Sunday, church is in fine condition. The future is bright and hopeful. We begin a protracted meeting Jan. 29. Expect Brother Simons, of Chetopa, Kansas, to be with us and help us in the meeting.—J. P. Haner.

Columbia, Jan. 23.—There were two confessions at our Sunday evening service with the East Side church of Moberly. This church is the only Protestant church in the east portion of the town and is splendidly located among a population of nearly 3,000 people. I began preaching there full time, the first of January, and we hope to have a great work this year. The Christian-Evangelist will help us, for many, I hope, will read it.—J. F. Ferguson, pastor.

Carterville, Jan. 23.—Meeting three weeks old with 42 additions: 31 confessions, rest by statement and from other churches; seventeen are men. House was packed to overflowing last night; interest is intense; six additions last night. Meeting will continue over next Sunday and perhaps longer.—Bentley, singer.

Palmyra, Jan. 24.—Our meeting closed Sunday night, Jan. 22. We had just made a successful beginning when smallpox, inclement weather and bad roads dictated it the part of wisdom to close. Four were added: one by letter, three by baptism. H. R. Trickett presented the gospel message.—W. H. Jones, minister.

Weaubleau, Jan. 24.—We have had three added here by letter since last report, one in December and two in January, at regular services. The church has called me again. Our Bible-school is doing finely. The outlook is good. We have employed Elder J. D. Babb, of Buffalo, as evangelist for Hickory, Polk and Dallas counties. He is already doing a good work. At last report he was in a meeting at Thurman schoolhouse in Dallas county, with 12 added—seven baptisms, one Catholic, one Methodist, others reclaimed.—S. E. Hendrickson.

Dewitt, Jan. 25.—Evangelist Kitchen, of Moberly, just closed a great meeting at Dewitt with 32 additions: 20 confessions, five reclaimed, two by letter, three from Methodists, two from Baptists. A Christian Endeavor was organized and the official board strengthened by four new members.—Mrs. Frank Baker.

Carrollton, Jan. 16.—Two baptized at Bogard yesterday, and one baptized and one received by statement at Norborne on Jan. 12. —C. C. Taylor.

NEBRASKA.

Overton, Jan. 23.—Two last Lord's week and one (an Episcopalian) yesterday. We are getting ready for our protracted meeting (Feb. 6) with B. H. Coonradt and wife, of Edgar, to assist us. I will supply his pulpit while he is with us. Everything promises a great meeting and ingathering of precious souls.—O. L. Adams, minister.

OHIO.

Mount Healthy, Jan. 23.—Nine additions—eight by baptism.—A. C. Gray.

Beach City, Jan. 23.—Two confessions and baptisms at Dundee. Large audiences. I will hold a meeting in February for free-will offerings if the church will adopt my plan, or on reasonable salary.—Bowman Hostetler.

Hamilton, Jan. 20.—Two baptized last Sunday night. In the afternoon I delivered the annual memorial sermon under the auspices of the woman's relief corps. I have informed the church that I shall not enter my second year as pastor.—A. M. Growden.

Kipton, Jan 23.—A 22 days' meeting resulted in 18 additions to the church—17 by baptism and one by statement. The preaching was done by the pastor and the singing was conducted by E. W. Gibbs and wife, members of this church. The Sunday-school has grown in the last seven months from an average of 35 to about 100. The outlook for this village church is certainly most encouraging.—W. S. Cook.

Mt. Vernon, Jan. 21.—We held a three weeks' meeting, with H. N. Miller, of Newark, preaching. The meeting resulted in 26 additions: nine by letter, 16 baptisms, one of the additions was a Dunkard. Of those baptized three were from as many different denominations, and one of the letters was from the Baptists. The above figures but inadequately report this meeting. It was a grand meeting in different features—the attention and interest most marked, and the attendance from the start excellent, at different times we could not begin to seat the people that came to hear.—W. A. Roush, pastor.

OKLAHOMA

Shawnee, Jan. 22.—Four additions last Sunday.—Granville Snell.

Newkirk, Jan. 24.—We are in a fine meeting here; a difficult field, but God is blessing us. There have been 13 accessions to date. These are fine people and will add much to the church. F. D. Wharton is the popular pastor.—E. W. Brickert, evangelist.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Turtle Creek, Jan. 23.—I just closed a two weeks' meeting with home forces. There were nine added, seven by baptism, one from Christian alliance, and one by statement.—Geo. E. Jones.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston, Jan. 23.—There are bright prospects for the Master's work in Charleston. We have commenced the new year with resolutions to do more for his cause. On Jan. 1, the church held its annual election of officers, selecting three new deacons and one additional elder by unanimous vote. We have been having additions to the church nearly every Lord's day. Our prayer-meetings are well attended and very helpful. The ladies' aid is active and doing fine work under the leadership of our minister's wife. The attendance in our Bible school increases slowly but steadily. Bro. Chas. E. Smith, our minister here, and the writer organized a mission Bible-school in the northern part of the city on January 8, since which time it has shown a healthy increase.—Arthur W. Inabruett, elder.

TEXAS.

Corsicana, Jan. 19.—Annual report of First Christian church shows total money expended, $2,297.69, of which $850 was paid on our new church lot. Sixty-five were baptized during the year 1904—26 as a result of protracted effort and 39 in our regular ministry.—J. F. Quisenberry.

GROWING IN GRACE.

"Ye therefore, beloved; knowing these things beforehand, beware lest, being carried away with error of the wicked, ye fall from your own stedfastness. But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. To him be the glory both now and forever. Amen" (2 Peter 3:17, 18.)

The contrast which the apostle here makes between falling from our steadfastness and growing in the grace and knowledge of Christ is suggestive. It must be the one or the other. There is no standing still in the Christian life. He who fails to go forward, goes backward. Not to increase is to decrease. This fact, remembered, is a powerful stimulus to growth.

Growth as a Duty. The exhortation in the text is to "Grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." John tells us that "the law was given through Moses; grace and truth came through Jesus Christ" (Jno. 1:17). What Peter means is that we should grow both in the grace and in the knowledge of the truth which Christ brought to us. Growth is thus enjoined by the word of God. It is a duty, also, which we owe to ourselves. Every man is under obligation to make the most of himself. This can only be done by growth. Again, we owe it to God, who has called us with such a high calling, and has given us such tasks to perform, to make ourselves capable for these tasks through growth both in grace and in knowledge. Notice, it is not enough that we grow in knowledge; we must also grow in grace. It is this blending of grace with knowledge that makes a beautiful, well-rounded character.

The Means of Growth. Read 1 Peter 2:1, 2. Notice here the negative and positive sides of growth—the things to be "put away" as a preparation for the nutriment by which we are to grow. There is nothing better to promote Christian growth than "the spiritual milk which is without guile." But we are not likely to "long" for it while there are in our hearts wickedness and guile, hypocrisies, envies, and evil speakings. Babes in Christ must feed upon the simpler truths and facts and principles of the gospel, until they grow strong enough to digest the more difficult truths connected with our Christian life. But in order to "grow thereby unto salvation," this spiritual food should be taken regularly and should be accompanied always by spiritual exercise corresponding therewith. Nothing promotes physical digestion more than healthful exercise, and nothing promotes a spiritual apprehension of truth so much as obeying the truth. (John 7:17.)

The Measure of Our Growth. Read Eph. 4:12, 13. Observe that all the offices of the church have for their purpose "the perfecting of the saints"; and that this "perfecting" looks "unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ." Our personal growth and perfection looks, therefore, to the common good—the building up of the whole body of Christ. Notice too, that the only limitation placed to our growth is "till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." What an illimitable range of growth is thus before us! What a magnificent destiny for the church of God! Here is indicated the sublime purpose which God has had in all his revelations in the establishment of his church, and in all the ministries of the church—the building up of men and women to the full measure of the stature of Christ.

Here, then, in this lesson, we have three things: (1) The duty of growth; (2) The means of growth; (3) The measure and model of Christian growth.

Prayer. Oh Lord, since Thou hast called us to share in Thy life, in Thy labor and suffering, in the world's redemption, grant us, we beseech Thee, the earnest desire to be like our Master. To this end may we hunger and thirst for the spiritual food and drink which Thou hast prepared for us, that we may grow thereby into Thy likeness, and fill up the measure of duty and responsibility which Thou hast laid upon us. Help us to put away from us everything that hinders our growth, and so to open our hearts to Thy truth that we may at last attain unto Thy likeness and share in Thy glory. For Thy Name's sake. Amen.

THE SECOND MIRACLE AT CANA.—John 4:43-54.

Memory verses 49-51.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The same works that I do bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.—John 5:36.

After the completion of that early Judean ministry of which John tells—or perhaps we should say the interruption rather than the completion of it—Jesus returned to Galilee. Passing through Samaria he met the woman at Jacob's well, as narrated in the previous lesson, and paused for two days preaching to a throng of willing listeners at Sychar. Thence he passed on into Galilee and came to Cana, the home of one of the little group who had already become his disciples and the place where he had already performed one miracle.

The fame of Jesus had already filled the country (Luke 4:14), a fact which suggests that the bare reference to his works in Judea (John 2:23) must cover rather a wide range of unrecorded activities in miracle working. Doubtless there had already been enough works of healing (though none are recorded) to give him a reputation pre-eminently as a healer of desperate diseases, for the nobleman who came from Capernaum was very sure that Jesus could heal his son.

A very large proportion of the miracles of Jesus were miracles of healing. In an age when medical science was scarcely known and when the provisions for the care, comfort and cure of the sick were notably inadequate as compared with the situation in our own time, this healing ministry offered the most obvious field for the exercise of that power which Jesus possessed. And the use of his power in this way had a double value: It showed a power which all beholders at once ascribed to God and thereby became a testimony to his divine mission and gave weight to his words; and it showed the love and sympathy of God for suffering humanity. Jesus came to reveal the Father, primarily to reveal the Father's love, and the miracles of healing were not less notable as proving the love of God than as showing that Jesus was the bearer of God's power.

In most cases in which the details are given, it was required that the intended beneficiary should show his faith before the act of healing—a circumstance which shows that Jesus did not rely upon the miracles to win men's confidence. The moral and spiritual impress of the character of Jesus was and is the highest proof of the validity of his claim to our allegiance. Those who to-day condition their acceptance of Jesus upon a proof of the historicity of his miracles might be answered as he answered the nobleman: "Except ye see signs and wonders ye will in no wise believe"—with a clear implication that faith ought to have been based upon other grounds.

CHRIST A SERVANT—AND WE ARE SERVANTS.—Phil. 2:3-11.

For the Leader.

There are false ideals at work in the minds of the people of to-day, that are doing a great deal of harm. Much depends upon the ideal. Some think everything depends upon the ideal. That is pretty strong, but we can all concede the important place the ideal occupies in the life of one. There is nothing upon which there are more erroneous ideals than the relation we sustain to others, to work, toward the life of the sweating brow. When we get above work, when we consider it lowering one's dignity to earn one's bread; when we want to be served, rather than serve; when we are all seeking the places in life where some one else does the drudgery, and we sit as the served—when these things are true of us, we need such a lesson as this one to-night. Our Savior was not inferior to any, and yet he said he came to serve rather than to be served. If our Savior was a servant, how much more are we servants! Let us get the good lessons and the profitable applications out of this topic to night.

For the Members.

1. It is not mine to pick the best places and to say, "This is the work I want to do." The mind should be in us that was in Christ. I should come to this question not to please myself, but him who gave himself for me. And, when we come to consider this matter well, it must be best for us to serve rather than to be served. If it had not been so, our Master would not have taken this course.

2. Some one may say, "How can this be, that it is better for one to serve the world than to be served by the world?" Well, it must be so because Jesus followed this course. He did it, knowing the full philosophy of the whole thing. In his divine wisdom and knowledge he must have been able to see that there was more real profit, more real pleasure, more lasting satisfaction, more that ennobles one, more that profits in the true sense of profit, in such a course than in the opposite course. Upon no other grounds can I conceive of our Lord's choosing this course.

3. The one who serves because of a true spirit of Christ in him, has a joy that can not be taken away from him. The opportunity for such course will ever abide in a world where sorrow and darkness reign on every hand. May not this be one reason given in explanation of the course of Jesus? Again there is a nobler feeling experienced, a more real joy, in doing for others than there is in experiencing some such thing done for us. The donor of a true gift gets more out of it in a real happiness than the receiver. "It is more blessed to give than to receive" is nothing else than the enunciation of this doctrine.

4. If one's happiness is held by no stronger tenure than that peculiar to the joy that comes from position, from money, from fame, from a host of patronizing friends, it is surely an uncertain and an unsatisfactory condition. How soon can all this take the wings of fire, of envy, of loss of health, of the passing of beauty, of the loss of position, and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth! Alas for us if we stand in no better security than this! Now, if we consecrate our lives to serving, to doing good, to helping others as did our Master, who can take away our joy? Is it not secure from every power that does prey upon the joy of one who works by the other rule?

5. The joy that comes from the life of service is eternal, for we can conceive that when the opportunity for service here is brought to an end by death, we are prepared for the highest life on the other side. If there are untold things to enjoy, who will be better prepared to enjoy them than one who has known the side of toil here? And when it comes to occupation, to the rich heritage, to being "ruler over many things," who will be more thoroughly drilled, or more thoroughly prepared for this, than one who has learned to serve as well as to be served, to be ruled as well as to rule? After we have considered the blessedness that comes from service, there remains the consideration of the benefit of suffering, sacrificing, that comes in a life like this. It brings out the best in one, and so has an important part in the perfection we seek.

Some Education Day Thoughts.

(CONCLUDED.)

It is right that individual and religious enterprise should have its part in the educational development of the nation. Churches and individuals are free to establish and endow colleges and universities in every state. But it is singularly short-sighted to advocate these things on improper grounds, and to discourage attendance at state universities. They are not for unbelievers alone, not for the indifferent. The sooner the number of church members in these schools can be increased the better, and when they crowd their halls, demanding generous instruction in the religious history of the race, and even demanding suitable courses to prepare for the ministry, the application of the doctrine of separation of church and state in education, which is one and inseparable, will go to the lumber room of our educational history, and the clause excluding sectarian instruction will be seen to have no application whatever to the main question of complete education in all schools whether of church or state origin. Instead of withdrawing from the state universities we must stand by them and contend earnestly for the principle that you can't get a man, the sum of whose virtues is equal to one, by educating four-fifths of a boy. The whole boy goes to the state university and the whole boy must be educated by the state as well as by the church. The unity of life dare not be sacrificed in any system of education. State and churches must rise to the principle of all schools for all people with religious, that is, complete education in every school. The church schools are as incomplete as the state schools. "Church schools are sometimes expected merely to hand down unchanged the traditions that they receive. They are required to furnish weapons against thought tendencies of the time that are condemned before they are heard." (George Albert Coe: Education in Religion and Morals, Chicago, 1904, page 328.) In a foot-note on the same page, touching prayers offered for colleges, the same thoughtful writer adds: "My own observation leads me to believe that such prayers are commonly based upon a false antithesis between study and spirituality which often amounts to a belief that intellectual development is per se dangerous to religious life." To the extent that such sentiment prevails in church schools, they are weak not only educationally but religiously. State schools on the other hand must be persuaded to give up the fraction four-fifths as an educational symbol and to fly the symbol of complete education.

Every increase in the percentage of church members in these colleges and universities gives Christians of all faiths an added reason for urging the regents and faculties to hoist the true symbol of education. Many of them are anxious in reality to do this and covet the encouragement of all Christians in their efforts to free state institutions from limitations laid upon them by laws enacted in other days when it was necessary to protect their youth against the withering blight of sectarianism in the churches. Men in state institutions know quite as well what complete education is as do men who direct church schools, and it is well for all denominationalists to remember that they and their forefathers must bear the blame of the limitations state schools are now under. Our own people must share this blame, for our contention for unity has not been without sectarian tendencies.

Brother Brown, it seems to me, lacks imagination when it comes to the amount of money the brotherhood is to raise, and has all too timid a heart. He hopes Iowa will give $3,000 and the brotherhood $20,000. That's about the same as saying that the brotherhood is to take up a penny collection for educational purposes! The presidents of the state universities have more imagination and more courage. They ask for hundreds of thousands and even for a million now and then, quite aside from regular appropriations, which they do not have to ask for. They ask for the money solely on educational grounds. They have more faith in what many preachers call the "godless state" than our financial agents have in the "godly church." According to thy faith! Our brotherhood in Iowa is rich, strong, numerous, influential, has its dignity to sustain before the world and the responsibility of glorifying God in its gifts, yet it is asked to give a university a sum no larger than any Iowa village gladly pays every winter to maintain a graded school!

A brotherhood a hundred years old that boasts more than a million members is expected to give a sum that an ordinary town school board would sneer at and this pitiful sum is to be divided among our colleges! Have we any educational policy? Has faith disappeared from among us? Have we no realization of what it means to endow colleges and universities? There is another New Testament religious body in this country. They are called Baptists. In 1904 they had $51,158,368 invested in educational plants. The Northern Baptists, about our number, gave, in 1904, $779,594 to foreign missions. They gave the neat sum of $635,396 to home missions, and gathered up, in 1904, $934,923 through the American Baptist publication society. Some way the preaching of New Testament things over in the Baptist fold seems to awaken the imagination of the people and to touch the source of all Christian benevolence. Let our brotherhood take a million-dollar collection on education day so that it can rightfully call itself a New Testament church.

Does It Command Respect?

The Editor the Christian-Evangelist:—In reply to Bro. J. W. McGarvey, I wish to say that his question, "Is it respectable?" is quite different from mine, "Does it command respect?" I think it is apparent, too, that the use he has made of the word "respect" is a little different from that which the whole of the article would justify, and also that he has wholly overlooked my use of the word "command" in the sentence quoted from my former article.

My thought is this: that, since we have a cause representing a million and a quarter people, the Bible colleges of the Disciples of Christ should be very much better equipped than they now are, in order to command respect. The individual or college, to command respect, must be generally recognized as superior, while he or it may have respect without this quality. Love or sympathy may beget respect for something that is quite inferior. So, our Bible colleges have the respect of many good people, not because of any superiority that gives them title to command it, but rather for the same reason that constrains us to respect our "poor relation," that of loving, sympathetic interest begotten of the sacrifices made for them—sacrifices made for the colleges generally—by a few heroic souls, the most conspicuous of whom being the overworked and poorly paid men and women composing their faculties.

When I note that the Methodists, with more than thirty theological colleges and departments, have five or six institutions each of which is endowed very much more heavily than the Bible College of Kentucky or that of Drake, I feel that we as a brotherhood are not doing that which commands the respect of ourselves. I note that one of the leading theological schools maintained by the Methodist church has grounds and buildings worth $695,000, and a productive endowment of $520,000 producing an annual income of $32,000. I find one other with an annual income of $35,000, and another with more than $32,000. With these figures before us, we can but be impressed with the small amount that is being contributed to the upbuilding of our own Bible colleges. It stands to reason that we cannot have so many excellent teachers in any of our Bible college faculties with a $5,000 income as we could with a $30,000 or $35,000 income. This lack does not command respect. We are coming to be recognized as one of the leading churches of this country. We should be able to point to at least one Bible college as well equipped as the best that others have.

I think it is generally taken for granted that a college professor ought not to be required to teach more than twelve hours per week, if he is to do his best work for the student. I notice that the Bible college men of Kentucky, as well as at Drake and other of our colleges, have an average of about twenty hours per week. This is not a condition that commands respect.

As to buildings, I am glad to know, as I have known, in fact, that the Bible college of Kentucky university has a very good building; but if I am to judge from the statements of my good brother, it is about half the size that it should be, if it is ever to be what the broth-

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

erhood ought to make it. As stated in the article criticised by my brother, it is my judgment that the least number of teachers in the faculty of a creditable Bible college should be from eight to ten. The professors in any of these schools will tell you that one of the great demands of the present time is that we have more teachers so that fewer hours of teaching may be required of each, and also for the reason that a better gradation and classification of students would then be possible. If the Bible college of Kentucky university had the additional teachers needed, the present building would be altogether too small, as, according to Brother McGarvey's letter, it accommodates but six.

The library of 3,000 volumes is no doubt good, but is it all that it ought to be?

As to the endowment, Brother McGarvey admits that it is not adequate. Certainly, neither $88,000 nor $188,000, as an endowment for a Bible college, represents properly the missionary spirit that should be existent in the church of Christ. We have something over $100,000 endowment for the Drake university Bible college, and other of our Bible colleges possibly have as much, or more. Such an amount is wholly inadequate to meet present needs. So Brother McGarvey and I are agreed that large additional endowment is needed by all our colleges.

As to the product of these colleges, I have nothing but words of praise for the great men and women who have received training in them, as well as for the saintly teachers who impart instruction therein, but it does seem to me that it has been the good fortune of our Bible colleges that these preachers and teachers came to them, rather than the good fortune of these same ministers that they were compelled to patronize these poorly equipped Bible colleges in which to be taught the word pure and undefiled. I note what is said as to the worthiness of the teachers of the Bible college of Kentucky university. In this statement I am in full accord with Brother McGarvey; but it takes a large number of great teachers in the present day to do the work required of a modern Bible college. I know that there is a thought prevalent in the world that an eminent teacher and one pupil constitute a university; but all our efforts to get endowment, and our insistence as educators that we be provided with more well trained men to do the work of these Bible colleges, indicate most emphatically our disregard of this misleading statement. A Bible college with enough such men as McGarvey, Grubbs, Deweese, Jefferson and Calhoun, would certainly command respect as to its faculty; but where shall we find one so blessed?

In view, therefore, of the information which Brother McGarvey has placed before me, and for which I thank him very much, I still insist that my former statement is not amiss. It is humiliating, I know, that our Bible colleges so inadequately represent the onward swing of this mighty movement of the Disciples of Christ back to first principles as taught by Jesus and his apostles. But certainly no blame, but rather praise, attaches to the names of our broad minded men such as Brother McGarvey, to whom the brotherhood is indebted for even the small beginning that looks to the establishment of really creditable schools, that will command our respect. These men have done more than their share toward making these institutions what they should be, the mightiest of the missionary forces of the church, while a great brotherhood has stood aloof, to our present shame and humiliation. We should have better Bible colleges than any of the denominations because we have a greater plea. That these colleges do not adequately represent the ability of the brotherhood to do for them, that they are not superior in any way, that they do not in their present condition bespeak in unmistakable terms the demand of our people for an intelligent, educated ministry, and that they consequently fail to command respect, should be humiliating to every follower of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

FOWLER.

Samuel Mills Fowler died at his home in Kalamazoo, Mich., Dec. 26, 1904, at the age of 87. He was born in Churchill, N. Y., and was ordained to the ministry at the age of 22. In 1849 he came to southern Michigan. For about ten years he lived and labored at Centerville, Brady, Grand Prairie and neighboring points, at some of which he organized churches. Then for three years he preached in Canada. In 1862 he came to Kalamazoo, and lived here till his death. His wife lived to a beautiful old age with him, having died only two years ago. Brother Fowler was in the ministry the long period of 65 years. He was a faithful and active member of the Christian church in Kalamazoo, and was ardently devoted to the cause of Christian union.

GRIMES.

Precious little Olive Mildred A. Grimes passed to her heavenly home Dec. 30, aged five years and five months. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." She was a bright, cheerful little girl, a faithful member of the Christian Sunday-school. She was only sick two days, and in the midst of her playthings and Christmas presents, she started home to her Savior. She was a sweet singer, and now another little voice is added to the angel choir. The memory of her life will inspire her parents and friends to place more emphasis on spiritual things.

SEARS.

Albert Martin Sears was born in Nicholas county, Ky., Oct. 15, 1833. June, 1851, he became a Disciple of Christ. Six years afterwards he came to Missouri, locating in Ralls county. Here, except a year spent in the west in search of health for his family, he lived and labored and died. May 23, 1861, he was married to Sallie Ann Shulse. To the union three children were born, who, with his wife, survive him, viz.: Dr. William E., of California; Pres. Otis B., of State female college, Farmville, Va., and Prof. Rolla G., of State university, Madison, Wis. In many respects Brother Sears was a remarkable man. Though, by reason of poverty, deprived of such an education as he desired, and in spite of the need of constant toil on the farm, he came to know things and could converse with anyone on the current questions of the day in church and state, and intelligently and beneficially. He knew our plea and for many years was a most efficient teacher in the Bible-school, and often remarked that he would rather do that work and serve in that capacity than be president of the nation. Identifying himself with the little band of Disciples meeting in a school house, it was not a great while until he was made elder and he, with others, served so well that it was not long until it grew into what was known everywhere as Olivet church, now located in Center, a strong, aggressive and efficient people. By industry and economy Brother Sears was enabled to accumulate a competency, all the while, however, generously giving to the needs of the work at home and abroad. And that his boys might excel him in ability to do good, he was careful to teach them at home and to put them in touch with the best instruction abroad. Nor were his efforts in vain, as those who know their present attainments and passion for larger growth will testify. Brother Sears, better than his most intimate friends, perhaps, knew himself, and was never disposed to appear what he was not. The gospel and his wise choice of the best associations and companionships saved him from what, otherwise, would have been a useless, vicious life. He was a man of strong passions and a stubborn purpose, which, had they not been restrained by the wise choices he made, would have mastered him for evil ends. He was evermore grateful for the graces of the gospel that adorned his life and thankful for the good forces about him that wrought so well. He died on a Saturday evening in December, but not unexpectedly to himself. Weeks before he spoke to his dear wife of the matter and directed that the writer, because he had known him so long and so well, should speak at the funeral and urged: "Tell him to speak the truth about me, a poor, weak sinner that I have been." Better this, though needlessly extravagant, than an effort to hide even lesser weaknesses from the public. Brother Sears was a good man—the trend of a life always void of hypocrisy is in evidence. He has not lived for naught. Otis and Rolla, distinctively, and the doctor, in face of physical misfortunes, and the bereaved wife, will reflect, in measureless ways, the fact. Ralls county, Mo., so abundantly testifying its indebtedness to the gospel of Christ, and its splendid triumphs, by the way, in the more than 26 preachers in the field, must forever count as a factor in the achievement of the life of Albert Martin Sears.

VAN WORMER.

Mrs. Jennie Loomis Van Wormer, daughter of the late Elder J. Edwards Loomis and Mary Baker Loomis, of Cicero, N. Y., old-time Disciples, passed to her rest at her home in Phoenix, N. Y., on Tuesday, Jan. 17, after an illness of two weeks. She was born March 19, 1846, baptized into Christ at 18 years of age by W. A. Belding, and was married to Henry S. Van Wormer, of Brewerton, N. Y., some 35 years ago. Soon after their marriage they took up their home in Phoenix, N. Y., and, although there has been no church of their choice in this vicinity, they have held true to the faith as taught by Christ's disciples. Allowing their membership to rest in the home church of their youth, they cast their activities, with the open Bible in their hands, into the local churches and Sunday-schools, and Henry and Jennie, as they were called, were known in the community as Disciples, and loved for their work's sake and respected for their loyalty to what they believed to be the true doctrine. Sister Van Wormer was a woman of warm friendships, devotion to her family, generosity in hospitality and ready in active sympathy in all cases of illness or want. Besides her husband, two daughters, Mrs. W. N. Emmons, of Knoxville, Pa., Theo. M. Van Wormer, of Phoenix, N. Y., and a brother, Jefferson F. Loomis, of Cicero, N. Y., survive. Bro. W. J. Ryan, of the Syracuse church, conducted the last sad rites in a simple service on Friday morning, Jan. 20.

Do You Suffer with Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for Asthma. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all other remedies fail. It is really a most wonderful discovery.

Mr. R. Johnson, Sr., a prominent citizen of Grand Forks, N. Dak., writes, I tried twenty physicians and changes of climate without relief, but was completely cured by the Kola Compound after fifty years suffering. Dr. W. H. Vail, an eminent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes that he tried Himalya on several different cases of Asthma with satisfactory results in every case. Mrs. Millie Borchers, Amanda, Ohio, writes, I suffered with Asthma twelve years until the Kola Compound cured me. Mrs. W. E. Murgittroyd, North Chatham, N. Y., writes, I suffered for several years with Asthma and could get no relief until I used the Kola Compound which cured me. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the importers, copies of which they will be pleased to send you.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Answer.

I'd rather be a Christian,
And with the Christians stand,
Than join the Baptist party,
And wear its party brand.

For sure the blessed Savior,
And Peter, James and Paul,
By such outlandish title
Did not God's people call.

You pass the holy Master,
Who is the church's Head,
And name for John the dipper,
Who is still among the dead.

For John was only human,
Despite your Baptist views,
And said he wasn't worthy
To bear the Master's shoes.

Indeed, he wasn't worthy
(With all your Baptist pride)
To place his name or label
Upon the Master's bride!

Christ said in Cesarea,
"I'll build upon this rock"—
And called his people Christians
Down there at Antioch.

But never called them Baptists,
And by no hook or crook
Can you find such a people
In all God's holy Book!

You don't trust in the water,
And think that you are right,
And better than the people
You nickname Campbellite.

You make quite high pretentions,
Much higher than you oughter,
For folks who get their title
Directly from the water!

You won't eat with the Wesleyans,
With Luther, or the pope,
Although you say they're Christians,
And have a Christian hope.

You set a higher table,
And by yourselves you keep,
Divide God's elect children,
And separate the sheep.

For these and other reasons,
I would not like to be
A poor, sectarian Baptist,
But a Christian true and free.

And specially this reason:
God left you in the lurch;
He founded no such people,
He started no such church!

CHAPTER XVIII.

POPLAR SQUARE CALLS A PASTOR!

Mr. Randolph called the meeting to order and Mr. Cunningham, who had been elected clerk in his son's stead, read the minutes of the previous meeting. The routine business was rushed through and the report of the Committee on Pulpit Supply called for.

The chairman reported that the church had been without a pastor for practically three years, and that, as a natural result, the audience had fallen off to an alarming extent and the work was in a run-down condition.

"We further advise'" he continued to read, "that a pastor be called at once. And, in view of the fact that such a thing seems impossible, unless the element in favor of Mr. Baxendale can be satisfied—and almost the entire church and the public, as well, are enthusiastic in the demand that he be reinstated—we recommend that a call be extended him, and that the said call shall become operative at his convenience."

Time and circumstances unite in accomplishing wonders. Strange to say, while all who had voted to accept Mr. Baxendale's resignation—except Ralph Cunningham—were present, the call was extended with but one dissenting voice—that of "Grandfather" Peterson. He stated that he had read "The Scriptural Church," and that in it Mr. Baxendale was more unsound than he had ever been in the pulpit. He also maintained that his associates in the board were being actuated by sentiment, and were thereby thoughtlessly imperiling "The Church" and its doctrines.

After deciding that the call should be regarded as a profound secret until Mr. Baxendale's answer was received, the meeting was adjourned, with a sigh of relief.

When Mr. Baxendale opened his mail, the next morning, he was greatly astonished—almost shocked—to find the official communication, containing the call, in Mr. Cunningham's own handwriting.

Also, one of the evening papers, of the same day, in a special edition, published a rumor to the effect that Mr. Baxendale had been recalled to the Poplar Square pastorate. Each of the officials disclaimed all responsibility in the matter, and the method by which the disclosure was made has not yet been discovered. Great is the mystery by which "official secrets" become public property!

Mr. Baxendale had intended giving the call at least a week's consideration; but, owing to its hasty publicity, he decided upon a course and acted at once. Consequently, the following evening, at a "called meeting," his communication to the board was read by the clerk. Feeling that the reader might be interested in its contents, the letter is hereby given in full.

"PROVIDENCE, R. I , June ———.

"BRETHREN:—Your favor, sent to me by the clerk of the board, received this morning. But for the untimely publicity given to the matter, I should have considered it for several days before replying. However, I presume I am as well qualified now to give an answer as I would be after further thought upon the subject. To simply say that I appreciate the call you have extended me does not express my feelings.

"For twelve evenful years I ministered to the Poplar Square church, and those years were full of sunshine. Now, after a lapse of three strange years, it is difficult for me to realize that the same delightful field is again open to me. If I obeyed the present impulse, prompted by memories of the past, together with the many pleasing features of the pastorate, I would accept the call and have the matter closed at once.

"But the views I held, when our relations were severed, have not changed. I am impressed that my convictions, along the line they suggest, have been rather intensified than modified. Judged by the standards of the denomination, I am perhaps more of a heretic now than I was thought to be then.

"I, therefore, submit the following proposition. If, by a large majority vote of the congregation, it is accepted, without modification, I shall be delighted to again take the pastorate and will also do all in my power to advance its interests. Otherwise, I cannot accept the call, and can only promise, in return for your kind consideration of me, my best wishes and prayers.

"1. The denominational name is to be stricken from the charter and from all tablets, bulletins and literature pertaining to the church and its work; and the organization must be advertised and called 'The Poplar Square Church,' while the members are to be known as 'Christians' only.

"2. The authorized discipline, together with the creed, must be abandoned—thereby cutting loose, entirely, from denominationalism—and the church is to recognize no human authority outside of the local congregation.

"3. Elders and deacons, whose duties are clearly outlined in the New Testament, are to be appointed; and in all matters pertaining to the spiritual welfare of the church, apostolic regulations must be applied

"4. The New Testament is to be our only guide in doctrine, methods and fellowship.

"May the Lord guide you.

"LLOYD BAXENDALE."

When the communication had been formally placed before the meeting, Dr. Lessing addressed the chair and said: "I voted to accept Mr. Baxendale's resignation because I thought he was wrong. But after reading his book and carefully examining his position in the light of scripture, I am convinced that he is right. If he is unsound, so am I, and likewise are many others of our congregation. His book is in nearly every family of the church. I am in a position, also, to state that the people have read it and the majority agree with him. I shall most heartily vote to accept the conditions specified in the document before us. I, therefore, move that, as a board, we recommend their acceptance by the congregation."

"Second the motion," responded five or six voices.

Then followed a heated discussion, led by Mr. Steele. He said, in part: "I voted to accept Mr. Baxendale's resignation, because I believed him to be unsound in doctrine. I also voted to recall him, on account of the popular clamor for him, which undoubtedly exists to an unlimited extent. I felt, however, that possibly his three years' experience in the very unenviable capacity of 'a preacher out of a job' had taught him a lesson, and that he would, at least, be willing to refrain from parading his peculiar views in the pulpit. I am therefore not only disappointed but utterly astounded at the arrogant and unreasonable demands contained in his communication to this body. I have not read his little book, nor do I care to do so. I have no time for such nonsense as I hear it contains. And as to the matter in hand, I feel sure that this board has too much pride to make a public spectacle of itself by submitting to the church such presumptuous propositions as these we are now considering. As for myself, the fact that we are entertaining the absurd suggestion, instead of dismissing it at once, depreciates, to some extent, my own self respect. And should it be placed before the congregational meeting and thereby become public, I would be ashamed to acknowledge that I had ever belonged to the Poplar Square church."

Several other speeches were made—all of them in favor of the motion, except "Grandfather" Peterson's, which was substantially a repetition of his former remarks, already chronicled. Mr. Steele insisted that Mr. Cunningham should express his views, but that gentleman declined to take part in the discussion.

Near the close of the meeting, Mr. Steele suggested that the proposed step would deprive the church of the Randolph Endowment Fund, as, without doubt, the bequest had been made to "The Poplar Square ——— Church."

To this, Mr. Randolph replied that, when settling up his father's business, it was discovered that, owing to an oversight upon the part of the testator, there was an irregularity in the form of the bequest. The denominational name was entirely omitted and "The Poplar Square Church" named as the beneficiary. His legal adviser had called his attention to the technicality and remarked that the will could be successfully contested. But he did not once think of taking advantage of it—his father's wishes being paramount to every other consideration in the administration of the estate, and, at his own request, the matter had been regarded as a "profound secret" by both the lawyer and himself.

The vote was then taken, with the result that, so far as the board was concerned, Mr. Baxendale was recalled to the pastorate upon his own terms—"Grandfather" Peterson and Mr. Steele voting in the negative.

The Czar and the People.

The story of the war's rebound on the social and political organization of the forty different nations and religions composing Russia, begins with the Czar, the man whose dominant characteristic is his horror of war, writes Gilson Willets in the World's Work. The tale of the Romanoff family shows why the Czar has this aversion. His father went to his tomb overwhelmed by religious superstition; his grandfather was killed by an assassin's bomb; his great-grandfather, crushed by catastrophes in the Crimea, committed suicide; his great great-grandfather died a mysterious death; his great-great-great-grandfather, in 1801, was murdered. The effect of the war upon this autocrat has been to make the most melancholy of the world's monarchs the saddest man in Europe.

To General Bobrikoff, the governor of Finland, I once said: "Is the Czar a good shot?"

"My master," replied the governor, "shoots like a book-worm. And he wears a uniform as an educated man would wear livery—self consciously and with detestation."

One day in St. Petersburg I said to my guide "Billy" (I couldn't pronounce his real name), "Billy, the streets are a-glitter with uniforms. What do you suppose all these soldiers think they are soldiering for?"

"For God and the Czar, sir."

That morning Billy took me to the railroad station to see the prisoners take the train for Siberia. Any stranger may witness that spectacle any Wednesday morning at eleven o'clock. Billy talked to one of the soldiers who guarded the five hundred prisoners. "Ask that man, Billy," I said, "what he thinks he is soldiering for."

"He says," replied Billy, "for God and the Czar, sir."

"But ask him, Billy, what else."

After a talk with the soldier, lasting fully ten minutes, Billy turned to me: "He says he doesn't know, sir."

Two hours later, in the Palace Square facing the winter palace, a vast crowd had gathered. The Czar had been thrown from his troika, sustaining slight bruises.

"Doesn't this crowd suggest personal attachment?" I asked the Count, as we drove into the square.

"It is no more a testimonial of personal attachment," he said, "than the crowds one sees at a Lord Mayor's parade in London. A crowd like this is not permitted here. Watch!" Hoofs were heard, and a company of Cossacks charged into the square—with whips. The crowd dispersed. It had seen those whips before. All my ideas of personal attachment melted at the sight of those whips—knowing that in the hands of Cossacks the whips were not merely for horses.

His best book . . . It is the book of the gospel—the gospel for the man in the street.—Dr. Jas. Hastings, Editor of Dictionary of the Bible.

All who read the book will be benefited thereby. It breathes a sweet, pure spirit and will certainly do much good.—D. R. Dungan.

It is a book for the age, by one who is alive to the needs of the age and the great problems that confront the leaders of the church.—J. J. Morgan.

It is the ripest thought and matured conviction of a veteran whose ministry as a preacher and writer among the churches of Christ has been conspicuous. It bears the unmistakable marks of wide reading, earnest thinking and catholic sympathies.—Christian Standard.

It has been quite a help to me. It abounds in good suggestions and new applications.—Wm. Ross Lloyd.

It is a book of wide compass, depicting the spiritual history of man from his origin to his final destiny.—J. W. McGarvey.

It is the greatest book ever published by our brotherhood. At every reading it has had fresh charm for me. . . Send for it now! Now!! Not by and by, and you will thank me for ten years to come.—Jas. Small.

Dr. Moore is the most picturesque figure of this present religious reformation, one of its profoundest theologians and most charming writers. Of all his numerous and valuable contributions to church literature this is his masterpiece.—Geo. L. Snively.

Money as Cheap as Water.

What, then, will it cost the man who would live like a king in a big New York hotel and enjoy these more than regal luxuries?

To occupy the royal suite for a day costs one hundred and twenty-five dollars. But this is without anything to eat. Food suitable to be served on a gold service by a retinue of liveried attendants comes high. For instance, one portion of turkey costs five dollars, the cantaloupe to begin with is one dollar a portion, and the grapes to end with are one dollar and fifty cents. Green-turtle soup is one dollar and twenty-five cents a portion, and a simple little salad two dollars. What would game cost? It might leave some change from a ten-dollar bill, but nothing worth talking about. One small portion of grouse, for example, costs three dollars and fifty cents. Does one care for a cup of tea? He can have it and welcome for sixty cents. Suppose some bucolic longings come to our friend from the country. The butler looks dumbfounded at first when he asks for buttermilk, but money can do anything, and so he gets a glass at the cost of forty cents. And fees—they are always with him, or rather they are always going away from him. The merest page would be insulted by a fifty-cent piece, though he might be willing to accept five dollars—on account.

It is safe to say that to live like a king in one of these New York hotels will cost the one in search of that experience at least two hundred dollars a day, and cheap at that.—January Woman's Home Companion.

Let the Boys Help.

"Let us get here at quarter past seven and have a coasting party!" cried Fred Baker. "We all have supper at six, and that will give us lots of time to get here."

"I can't come until half-past seven," said Will Adams, "I have to wash the supper dishes."

There was a chorus of derision. Wash dishes—a boy wash dishes! Who ever heard of such a thing?

"I have," said Will, quietly. "I know of three boys in the Hamilton hotel who wash dishes three times a day."

"Oh—but they are paid for it!"

"Well, do you mean to say that you would do for pay what you wouldn't do to help your sick mother?"

This was silencing, if not convincing, as the boys were "good" boys, as boys go. Yet one and all felt that Will Adams had belittled himself in some way by doing what they called "girls' work."

Is it not strange that these ideas should prevail, not only among boys, but among the boys' mothers as well?

Many a smart boy wants to help his mother, but does not know how, beyond bringing in wood and water or going an errand. There is nothing that will injure him in learning how to wash dishes, make beds, sweep, set the table or cook a plain meal. Indeed, all these things are accomplishments which may prove valuable in after life.

In this topsy-turvy world a young man may save himself from beggary at some stage of his career by learning how to cook.

To claim that this is girls' work is nonsense. There are men who make a living by sewing, cooking, washing and ironing. Not boys' work! It is a positive harm to a boy's moral character to allow him to be idle while his overworked mother is staggering under her household burdens.—Columbus Dispatch.

Her Life Had Been all Getting.

The following pathetic story is related by "Ian Maclaren" concerning a little girl who was blind from her birth:

"If I dinna see"—and she spoke as if this were a matter of doubt and she were making a concession for argument's sake—"there's naebody in the Glen can hear like me. There's no footstep of a Drumtochty man comes to the door but I ken his name, and there's no voice oot on the road that I canna tell. The birds sing sweeter to me than to onybody else, and I can hear them cheeping to one another in the bushes before they go to sleep. And the flowers smell sweeter to me—the roses and the carnations and the bonny moss-rose—and I judge that the oat-cake and milk taste the richer because I dinna see them. Na, na, ye're no to think that I've been ill-treated by my God, for if he didna give me ae thing he gave me mony things instead. And, mind ye, it's no as if I'd seen once and lost my sight; that micht ha' been a trial and my faith micht ha' failed. I've lost nothing; my life has been all getting."

What is Home?

Recently a London magazine sent out 1,000 inquiries on the question, "What is Home?" In selecting the classes to respond to the question, it was particular to see that every one was represented. The poorest and the richest were given an equal opportunity to express their sentiments. Out of 800 replies received, seven gems were selected as follows:

Home—A world of strife shut out; a world of love shut in.

Home—The place where the small are great and the great are small.

Home—The father's kingdom, the mother's world and the child's paradise.

Home—The place where we grumble the most and are treated the best.

Home—The center of our affection, round which our heart's best wishes twine.

Home—The place where our stomachs get three square meals daily, and our hearts a thousand.

Home—The only place on earth where the faults and failings of humanity are hidden under the sweet mantle of charity.

Curious Facts About Russian Priests.

A white Russian priest must be married, but he cannot marry a second time. If his wife dies, he must enter a monastery. Hence the Russians tell many stories of the extraordinary means to which the priests resort in guarding the health of their wives. If the priest's consort sneezes, a mild panic ensues in the household.

A St. Petersburg Experience.

An American wished to move from the Hotel Europe, the principal hotel in St. Petersburg, to a smaller hotel around the corner. He came down with his bag packed ready to go. "Sorry," said the manager, "but you cannot leave this hotel or register at another hotel until we get your passport from the police; and that will take a day and a night. You must go through exactly the same procedure as if you were leaving the country."

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE FIRST DAY—CONTINUED.

But Mace's mother was not able to forget the world about her save for a moment. At the time of moving, novels must be put aside, however fascinating. There were a hundred things to be determined—nay, a thousand. Mace, who was only fifteen, found a pleasurable excitement in the scene. It was interesting to see the folding-beds standing along the back path, as if they had gone out for a walk. The tables and chairs were scattered over the back-yard, as if there were to be an outdoors picnic. The refrigerator and the parlor table stood rubbing shoulders together, much as a democratic prince might hob-nob with his butler. Mr. Tumbleton and his two sons, A and D, were unloading leisurely, entering into countless discussions as to the best way to remove each article of furniture from the wagon.

"Now this here organ," said Mr. Tumbleton, laying a finger upon it and buoyed up by the thought that he was paid for the hour whether that hour brought forth a deed or a discussion, "we must be mighty keerful lifting it down."

"Yes we must," said A, approaching it cautiously. "I don't want to break that thing."

"It's a handsome organ," said Mr. Tumbleton. "Now, A, you git over to this cornder."

"No, dad," said A. "that ain't the way. We'll build up an incline to the end gate, and scoot her down."

"We don't want no incline," said Mr. Tumbleton. "At least, I don't think we do. I can't say, off hand. Now, let me study about this proposition."

"I'll git a rope," said D.

"Yes, do," rejoined Mr. Tumbleton. "I don't know as we'll need it, but they is few things that a rope can't accomplish."

"I do hope," said Mace, approaching, "that you will be very careful with my organ, Mr. Tumbleton. I think more of it than of anything else I own in the world."

At that moment, some one emerged from the house next door—the house which Mr. Tumbleton had described as belonging to the "sheep-stealing" Enderthorpes. "Say, Bob!" called Mr. Tumbleton, "can't you lend us a hand on our organ?"

"Don't call him!" whispered Mace indignantly. "And after what you said about those people!" she added reproachfully.

"Why, all we want of him is to help lift," returned Mr. Tumbleton in a hoarse undertone, "we ain't layin' no burden on his morals, miss."

Bob Enderthorpe, a youth of sixteen or seventeen, tall, angular, awkward, red-haired, and homely, stumbled to the dividing fence. "Yes, I'll help," he said, suddenly leaping the picket fence without touching it. He drew near the wagon, tripping, as he did so, over one of his feet, and almost falling into the arms of the elder Mrs. Woodney. As Mace gave him one swift, resentful glance, she noted the homeliness of his features, the shabbiness of his clothes, and the glaring redness of his hair. No wonder he is ugly, she thought, if his father is a sheep-stealer! It would have been unjust for him to have been polished, handsome and at ease. Bob did not look at her. "Push the organ my way," he said. "Let D get down here and help."

"No," said Mr. Tumbleton, "that ain't the way. You git up here, Bob, and I'll git on the ground and hold her back."

"Better just dump it down on my shoulder," said Bob Enderthorpe. "I can lift the whole business."

"Now, it's this way," said Mr. Tumbleton. "Miss Mace holds me responsible for this here organ, and it's my bones and muscles that's going to keep it from destruction. Git up, Bob."

"Very well," said Bob resignedly. He made a rush at the wagon and boarded it with such noise and force that the horses were startled. Mr. Tumbleton climbed to the ground.

"Let her come, Bob," he said. "Let go, A. Stand away, D. I'm going to have the whole responsibility on my back. Oh, I've lifted organs before to-day!"

"Now you're ready, are you?" cautioned Bob Enderthorpe.

"Let her come, Bob."

Mace, excited by these preparations, looked about for advice, but her family were all indoors. Mr. Woodney and his wife were tacking down the carpet in the middle room, and the grandmother had retired to examine the pump. Bob, obedient to the command, let the organ slide forward. It was heavier than Mr. Tumbleton had supposed and he swerved dizzily to one side. A and D, seeing the danger, rushed to his assistance and they were in time to prevent the instrument from being dashed to the ground.

"Oh, you have ruined my organ!" cried Mace, staring with whitened face at a long gash which had been cut into the front of the top lid; for when Mr. Tumbleton swerved, the organ scraped heavily against an iron bolt. The ugly furrow had been plowed from one end of the organ to the other.

"Well," said Mr. Tumbleton, as they rested it in safety upon the ground. "I reckon it will play as well as ever. Won't you give us a tune, Miss Mace?"

"You have ruined my organ!" cried Mace angrily. "And after I begged you to be so careful! It was all I had that was worth anything. And now you've ruined it, forever!" She burst into tears.

"Well, now," said Mr. Tumbleton soothingly, "perhaps we can putty it up and varnish it over. Bob, he let her down too swift for me, that's a fact."

"I told you not to call him over!" sobbed Mace. "I didn't want him to help! You would have him!"

"I'm mighty sorry," said Bob, who was as red of face as he was of hair. "But it really wasn't my fault. He said to 'let her come,' and I let her come."

"But I didn't want you!" cried Mace, who, like everybody (so far as I know) in moments of anger, speak words which are neither agreeable nor polite.

"I'll go back home, then," said Bob, not at all stiffly, but mournfully, almost tearfully.

"Yes, do!" cried Mace, a little louder than before, and turning her back upon him and the three Tumbletons. Her father, hearing her voice, stopped tacking down the carpet, and felt his way to the back door. "What is it, Mace?" he asked gently.

"Oh, papa!" cried Mace running to him, sobbing and throwing an arm about his neck, "they've ruined my organ—they've cut a horrible gash right across the front of it, and it could all have been helped, if they had done as I begged!"

"What person is that climbing our fence?" demanded the grandmother with some severity, as she gazed over her son's shoulder at the retreating form of Bob Enderthorpe.

"He's the son of the thief that lives next door," sobbed Mace. "Mr. Tumbleton would have him to help lift my organ, and now it's not fit to be seen. You can't look at it without seeing that place."

"Mr. Woodney, have you decided which room to have for a parlor?" asked Mr. Tumbleton, who had heard quite enough about the organ.

"Not yet. We know the middle room can't be it, so we'll fix it up first. I rather think we'll make the back room the parlor. It is so dark they couldn't see to cook in it, and now that the organ's spoiled in its looks, it will be best in a gloomy chamber. I rather think the front room must be our kitchen. In that case the pump will be unobtrusive. You know, if it were in the parlor, we might put draperies over it, and deck it; still—"

CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE!

Fistula, Fissure, Bleeding, Itching, Ulceration, Constipation and all Rectal Diseases a Specialty.
Cures Guaranteed. Send for Booklet. DR. M. NEY SMITH, Specialist,
800 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo. Established in St. Louis in 1888.

The Editor of the Christian-Evangelist knows of his personal knowledge a number of persons who were severely afflicted with rectal troubles whom Dr. Smith has cured. He is personally acquainted with the Doctor, and has no hesitation in commending any sufferer thus afflicted to him.

"Nothing could be done with it," the old lady interposed. "I have just been looking at it and I have given it my whole attention. It is a perfect pump, and could never look like anything else."

"Then I decide that the rear is our parlor," said Mr. Woodney with the air of a man making an all-important decision. "We can set the organ with its face to the wall as is often done in churches and hang something down over its bare back, and make it look quite respectable in the dim light."

"Or better still," said Mace, who was still angry and bitter, "we might hide it in the cellar."

"I wouldn't advise nothing to be put in the cellar," interposed Mr. Tumbleton with the air of a man who felt it his duty to speak. "This here cellar ain't never used for nothing except the water to be pumped out of it, when needful."

"Perhaps we can devise a sort of raft," said the master of the house cheerfully, "with a rope to it which will rise with the tide, and which we could pull up to the steps. We could keep our things on it—our butter and fruit and meat. We could even make it so strong that you could ride about on it, Mace. Wouldn't you like that?"

Mace, however, felt just then that she would not like anything. "The back being our parlor," said Mace's mother, appearing, tack-hammer in hand, and speaking between two tacks which she held in her teeth, "we must put up a temporary front porch to the back of the house. And we can hang things out in front so people will know it is the rear of the premises. We'll set the refrigerator at the front door, and the kitchen table for the crocks under the front window, and what with leaving open the door so the pump may be seen, I think strangers will understand that the house is reversed."

"Yes, ma'am," said Mr. Tumbleton with hearty approval. "I'll build yore porch for you, I'm a carpenter in a manner. Now at the corner of the front wall I can put up a nice little board with a hand pointing and the words 'Ladies' Parlor,' such as you may see in depots and the like. Then they'll come right around the house, for, there being no grass, you might say the whole yard is one broad, smooth walk, and here they will find my pretty little porch, and going in, Miss Mace can play for them on the organ with its face to the wall. Yes, ma'am. Now, A and D, get to work, for the sun will catch us if we stand here talking. Not but what it is a pleasure to converse with all of you," Mr. Tumbleton added apologetically, "but when there is work to be done, my policy has always been to go and do it."

BETTER THAN SPANKING.

Spanking does not cure children of urine difficulties. If it did there would be few children that would do it. There is a constitutional cause for this. Mrs. M. The Rule That Tommy Made.

By Julia Deane.

"I say there, boy, want to earn a nickel?" Tommy Tolliver, the new errand boy at the factory, jumped to his feet. Want to earn a nickel! Was there ever a boy who wanted it more? Tommy wondered.

"Just you run around the corner to Pat Ryan's saloon, and get a pail full of beer. Here's the change. We'll pay you the nickel when you come back," said one of a group of men who were eating their lunch in a corner of the room.

Tommy's face flushed. "I can't do it," he said.

"Why can't you? You ain't much of a kid if you can't carry a pail of beer two blocks."

"That's just the trouble," answered Tommy, with a flash of the eye. "I'm a lot too strong to carry a pail of beer even one block. I've had enough of the stuff. If it hadn't been for beer, I wouldn't be working here doing what my father ought to be doing—taking care of my mother and the youngsters. I'd be in school, like other boys."

"Say, sonny, you better do it this time," counseled a good-natured young man, "or they'll complain to the superintendent about everything you do."

"You'll have to do it, that's all there is to it," said the first speaker. "The boss put you here to run our errands. So jest you take that pail, and don't you show up here again till it's filled. Hear?" And the pail was thrust into the boy's hand.

Just outside the door Tommy hesitated for a second, thinking hard.

"That man in there isn't the head man," he argued. "Of course, if it comes to the boss telling me I've got to do it, I'll have to hunt for a new place; but I'm not going to give up easy."

Straight around the corner went Tommy to the main entrance, up the broad steps to the elevator. The elevator boy directed him to the room where "the whole push, president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, are holding an important meeting."

Boldly Tommy knocked at the door, and found himself facing a room full of prosperous looking men, so prosperous, indeed, in dress, that Tommy glanced down in sudden shame at his own shabby garments.

"Well, my boy, what's the trouble?" asked the gentleman who seemed to be at the head of affairs.

"I'm Tom Tolliver, the new errand-boy in the factory," said Tom, bravely. "I just came yesterday, and the men down there say I've just got to get this pail full of beer or I'll be fired quick. I came up here to find the real boss. Say, is it so? Have I got to carry their beer for them?"

The man looked seriously down into the boy's anxious face, as he answered with another question:

"Suppose you have? What will you do about it, young man?"

Quick as a flash the answer came back, in a respectful but spirited tone:

"Do? I reckon there ain't but one thing to do, and that's to hunt another job. I'm not going into the beer business for anybody." There was a subdued murmur of applause in the room.

"Well, my boy, neither are we in the beer business, and I think it's about time we had some pretty stiff rules posted up in our building concerning that very thing. What do you say?" he asked, turning to the other gentlemen in the room.

"I suggest that we draft such a notice immediately, have it written out on a typewriter, and put a copy in the pail, and send it back by this young man. Then the men can't say he didn't bring back a full pail."

Before the day was over notices were posted all over the building, forbidding the use of beer and liquors of all kinds on the premises. Neither did the president forget the new boy in the factory, but when, a few weeks later, a new office-boy was needed in the head office, he sent word to the superintendent of the factory that he would like to have "the boy with the backbone" sent up to take the position. And although no name was mentioned, the superintendent smiled a knowing smile, and called out loud, so all could hear:

"Tommy Tolliver, the president wants to see you in his office!"—Southwestern Presbyterian.

Business Notes.

Adnah, a tale of the time of Christ, is having a good run, for it is one of J. Breckenridge Ellis' best, and was never before offered for the price, $1.

"Praises to the Prince" is generally acceptable as an all purpose song book, with its 224 pages, and in such binding as other books of like character, is having fine sale.

Have you seen the new catalogue with the miscellaneous books? Well, order anything you want from this house, and if it is on the market you shall have it sure, and at just the price offered by others.

The "Removal Sale" is not interfering with the regular trade, as the orders and business indicate, but seems to be helpful, as the thought of one reminds one of something else, so both are ordered at once.

Robert Gordon, a story of the Mexican war, is one of our attractive books of good fiction, and has never been offered until put in our hands this winter for less than $1.50, but we are postpaying it for $1.00.

The Hoffmann Pocket Record and Memorandum, of which see advertisement, has gone to many of our ministers this week, all of whom save one compliment it highly, he wanting an encyclopedia in connection with the booklet.

One agent sends us regular orders for the Garrison books, "Alone with God," "Heavenward Way," and "Half Hour Studies at the Cross." More helpful or devotional books have not been written, and none sold at the price, 75 cents.

The Midweek Prayer-Meeting booklets, the Daily Readings and the Topical Hand-Books are finally in the hands of those ordering them, and we thank those who so patiently waited on us, though we could not help the delay. All orders can now be filled promptly.

We have the best New Testament for use in your schools that can be had for seven cents per copy, it being revised, too, and we have the same book in better binding at 15 cents and in large primer type at 35 cents, all postpaid, but when these are gone, the supply cannot be renewed at such prices.

⁂

We are sending out the Normal Instructor, Part II, "The Christ," to many who are using them in connection with our lessons in the Bible school for the next six months, on the life of Jesus. The International Lessons are confined to the Gospel of John, but the Instructor takes up the life of the Christ systematically, and thus supplies for you what is lacking in John's testimony, but you will also need the part on The Land, Part IV, and the one discussing the People, Part VII. These are offered at the nominal price of 15 cents each, or $1.50 by the dozen, prepaid, or the set of seven for $1.00.

More than half of our Sunday-School Libraries have been sold, and the others will go out this week if possible. We mean to sell them, hence the reduction from $12.00 to $2.50 for library of forty cloth bound books, on the subjects interesting and helpful to Bible-school pupils. Here are the books:

DAY OF OPPORTUNITY.

IT would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of the work of foreign missions. The vastness of the enterprise and the imperative demand which is upon us make the most extravagant adjectives both natural and fitting. To give the Gospel to all the nations is an obligation from which the church can escape only by way of cowardice and open rebellion. If the Christ has any claim whatever upon our individual loyalty, then this claim must be equally honored by the whole church. In other words, if our Lord has the right to command the individual, he has the right to command the entire host of the redeemed. The work of foreign missions is not only a test of our obedience, but it is our salvation from narrowness and provincialism. Until we have seen, with some sort of appreciation, the tremendous sweep of the church's task, our energies, even in our home work, must be contracted. The great vision enables us to do the ordinary things in an extraordinary way. With the mighty appeal of the crucified and risen Christ ringing as a trumpet-blast in our ears, let us not be unfaithful in this great day of opportunity.

A New Russia.

It may be long in arriving, but a new Russia is in the offing. Somewhere out of the chaos we may expect a ground plan for the creation of a constitution that shall mean a new freedom and a new country. Most of the active rebellion has been suppressed and the Czar has received a number of the laboring men in his palace and talked with them in a paternal way. It is true the speech was of a temporizing character and nothing definite in the way of reform was promised. But whipped abroad and with an empire at home seething with discontent, the Emperor must be forced to take the advance step so strenuously disapproved by the grand dukes and the Holy Synod. One element of Russia's internal problem which it is difficult for an outsider to weigh properly is the attitude and influence of the students. It is not easy to avoid either overestimating or underestimating it. Perhaps it is the censorship of the press as much as anything, rendering it impossible for Russian reformers and revolutionists to vent their energies in the manner familiar among us, that has sent the apostles of these disturbing doctrines into the universities to win among the educated young men not only followers but leaders for their cause. At any rate it has come about that a very large proportion of all the students at the Russian universities are more or less active propaganadists of revolutionary doctrines. Not infrequently the papers bring reports of student uprisings which are in reality nothing more than casual clashes with the police, though they are heralded as the beginning of sweeping revolution. It is easy to take them too seriously. The country is too big and the students too few for the outbreaks of the latter to effect much more than local disturbances of the peace. And yet it is a matter of real importance that the best trained young men of the country are enlisted in the struggle against the government. The significance of it lies not in what they can do as individuals, but in what they can do as leaders and spokesmen for the vast multitude of working men who share their discontent, though perhaps without any definitely formulated theory of government. At present the movement for reform is too much a mob movement. It has too little sane leadership and perhaps too little even if the capacity for following sane leadership even if it happened to have it. The young anarchistic priest, George Gopon, whose influence seems to be more potent with the strikers than that of any other man, has urged the assassination of the Czar and all his counsellors. The success of such a program would be the most crushing defeat to the real purpose of its movers. It is greatly to be hoped that the government will be frightened or forced into granting better laws and larger liberties, but the present overthrow of the monarchy in Russia would be a world-disaster.

Naval Supremacy.

Captain Richmond P. Hobson is continuing his propaganda in favor of a vast increase of the American navy, even to the point of making it "equal to the combined navies of the world." For considerably more than a year he has been lecturing and writing to this end, but recent events have furnished him with fresh arguments for naval increase. The undertaking of the Panama Canal of course lends itself very readily to this cause. The fact that it would call for a larger navy was freely used as an argument against the building of the canal, so perhaps it is entirely legitimate, now that that enterprise is actually under way, to use it as an argument for building more ships. It ought to be said in this connection, however, that the existence of the canal will almost double the efficiency of our present navy because it will make it possible for vessels to pass from the Atlantic to the Pacific, or vice versa, without great delay. Captain Hobson's other new argument for a greater navy is drawn from recent events in the far east. His theory is that, in the operations of the Russo-Japanese war up to the present time, "Russia has conducted a pre-arranged system of retreats" in order to awaken a general fear of the Yellow Peril and to win the sympathy of the European peoples in a raid upon China. He believes that that purpose has already been successfully accomplished and that the governments and peoples of Europe are ripe to join in such a movement. In other words, recent events in the Orient have brought about a new grouping of the powers with only England and Japan on one side and all the others against them. Such a grouping of course lacks balance, and it is of importance that the United States be prepared to join the weaker party and, by the weight of an enormous navy, overcome the preponderance of the other powers. In fact, Captain Hobson's theory is that our navy ought to be so much larger than any other nation's that no one will think of opposing it, and so peace will be assured. "The various European powers ought now to prefer that America, neutral, friendly, peaceful America, rather than one of their own number, should hold naval supremacy. But in any event they must realize that all combined cannot ultimately compete with America. [Do they realize it, though?] Therefore the proposed program in which America proclaims that she intends to be first, will prevent competition." Very simple. But is it so sure that Germany, for example, would at once see the hopelessness of trying to compete with America? We doubt it.

"We Need the Money."

Speaker Cannon, who stands pat on the Dingley tariff and is opposed to revision, sums up the argument for his position in the simple and homely phrase, "we need the money." We like to believe that the speaker of the House of Representatives is perfectly ingenuous in any statement that he makes, but it is scarcely conceivable that he would seriously maintain that the Dingley tariff is the greatest possible success as a revenue producer. It was not constructed primarily as a tariff for revenue, but as a tariff for protection. There are many articles upon which its schedule is absolutely prohibitory, and in such cases the revenue is cut off as completely as it would be by absolute free trade. It stands to reason that a revenue-producing tariff is one under which importation is both permitted and encouraged. The only revenue derived from a prohibitory tariff is that derived by the domestic producers who are freed from the wholesome necessity of meeting foreign competition. It is an interesting sign of the times that so staunch a protectionist as Speaker Cannon bases his defense of the existing tariff not upon the principle of protection, not upon the claim that the schedules of the present tariff represent the degree to which our various infant industries need to be defended against foreign competition, but upon the theory that the tariff exists for the purpose of raising revenue. Of course he would not say that explicitly, but "Uncle Joe" has too good a sense of humor to permit him to defend the steel schedule, for example, on the ground of protection.

"Spoiled Children." Hon. Theodore A. Bell, of California, in a recent discussion of railroad rates in Congress, made the following statement as printed in the Congressional Record:

> There are railroad men to-day by the score who declare that you have no right to touch a railroad schedule. They regard it as something sacred, and any attempt whatever looking to regulation or control in the interest of the public is condemned as sacrilegious. Thus the creature of the law assumes to be its master and defies legislative restraint. We are the victims of our own neglect and omissions in not exercising long before this our sovereign right of control over public utilities. The railroads are like a lot of spoiled children, who, having been given their own way for years, rebel against even the most wholesome discipline.

It is high time these "spoiled children" were being brought under wholesome discipline, and we rejoice to see evidence in the President's utterances, in Congress, and in recent Supreme Court decisions, that this is to be done. The public conscience has been awakened by recent revelations, and it begins to look as if existing laws were about to be better enforced, and that new legislation will be enacted seeking to bring not only the railroads, but the Beef Trust and other great monopolies under the control of just laws. If those who are in authority in the government at present do not bring about this reform, the people, at their first opportunity, will sweep them out of power, and put in those who will.

Our Relations With Venezuela. The daily press is telling us again of the strained relations existing between the representative of our government in Venezuela and President Castro. It was reported that the United States Minister, Mr. Bowen, has advised the severing of friendly relations with that country. The course of President Castro has been most unaccountable from any point of view which an American can understand. It will be remembered that our Minister to that country, Mr. Bowen rendered most distinguished service to Venezuela in the matter of securing arbitration with the powers which were seeking to collect their debts from that country, and in affecting a peaceable settlement of what promised to be a serious difficulty between that country and some of the European governments. Instead of manifesting any sort of gratitude towards this government, and its representative, Minister Bowen, he has displayed the very opposite kind of spirit. He has not hesitated to trample on the rights and interests of Americans in Venezuela, and has even quarreled with Minister Bowen because he sought to have justice done to his fellow Americans. He has seized the property of the New York and Bermudez asphalt company, an American corporation, and it is claimed that he has directly influenced the courts of Venezuela to adverse action in the case of this company. At a critical point in the diplomatic negotiations, President Castro left Caracas for the interior. This, of course, is construed as a defiance of the United States authorities, and as one of the papers puts it, has "invited the dispatch of an armed American force to Venezuela to present and support an ultimatum." It is to be hoped that there are wiser heads in the nation than that of President Castro, and that he will be influenced to more reasonable action.

"Heathen Enough at Home. One of the so-called strong arguments against foreign misssion work is that there is greater need of our efforts at home and that here they may be more profitable. Now that the March collection is coming on apace we hear some people talking about the foreigners who are crowding into our country. When we have converted these, say these people—who, if the experience of pastors is worth anything, help little in Christian work of any kind—it will be time to think of the claim of foreign missions. We are glad to quote some words from the Watchman in reply to this half-hearted kind of Christianity. It says:

> "The Christian program is the program upon which every great business is conducted. The able business man does not wait until he has utilized the last possibility in his own town or county before he broadens out his enterprise. Mr. Wanamaker does not say: 'I haven't all the trade that I can have in Philadelphia, and therefore I will not go to any other city.' While the Philadelphia trade is expanding he goes to New York with an equal enterprise, and the New York trade at the same time is expanding from a new center. There is not the slightest reason for expecting that China will be won to Christ by the direct labor of American missionaries. The hope is that our missionaries may gather native churches at strategic points through whose work China will be Christianized. The men who imply that that work should be delayed until we have done everything that can be done in our own country, set themselves athwart a program that they would extol in the conduct of any other world-embracing enterprise."

Holding the Fort. A British Parliament is elected for a period of seven years, but it seldom lasts through its legally allotted time. The one now in session, however, may go through the full period if Mr. Balfour lives. He is engaged in the policy of holding the fort, though he is losing at nearly every bye-election followers of his standard. He does not have to resign unless the sovereign demands, but it is customary for the government to retire whenever it is defeated on a vote in the House of Commons, or when it sees, by its losses in bye-elections—which are elections due to the retirement or death of individual members of Parliament—that its policy has become obnoxious to the electorate. These bye-elections are regarded as a very accurate barometer for testing the country, and when the results nearly all tend one way any government may take warning. Not so M. Balfour. He has the Salisburian superior obstinacy. The Liberals have been winning some important elections, but he has declared that this will not affect his policy. At present Mr. Balfour can afford to talk this way, for by reason of the jingo fever the Conservatives won a huge majority, which is still, despite the losses, more than enough to cope with the Liberals. If the latter had a great leader upon whom they would all unite Mr. Balfour would simply be driven to give way, so great is the discontent in the country with his regime. And they are religious and moral problems that are now the backbone of that discontent.

Some Good Laws. Governor Folk's policy is having good effect in suggesting some good laws. Without a dissenting vote the Missouri House of Representatives has passed a very much needed law, dealing with employment agencies. Everyone knows what a lot of fraud is perpetrated upon people out of employment who answer the fake advertisements in newspapers only to find that they have to pay a fee to some agency for the privilege of getting some advertised job. Nine times in ten there is no job of work but there is a "job" being "worked." The bill introduced by Mr. Speer and passed by a vote of 120 to 0, provides that unless an applicant is given employment in three days his fee, upon demand, shall be refunded. It also provides that any agency directing a female to an immoral resort shall be punished by a fine of from $100 to $1000 and a jail term of from sixty days to one year, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Another proposed law which has wide support is intended to remedy an evil which has been productive of much complaint in the large cities of the state, particularly St. Louis. The bill provides that no female under the age of 18 shall be admitted to any dance hall, beer garden, vaudeville theater or like resort where intoxicants are either given away or sold under a license. The penalty of violating the law subjects the proprietor of any such resort to a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500 for each offense.

Texas and Christian Benevolence.

If anyone has conceived the idea that the brotherhood of Texas is anyways near the rear end of the great procession, he will need to revise his opinion. We have not a more wide-awake, loyal-hearted body of members anywhere in the Union than is to be found in the "Lone Star State." In missionary work, in Christian education, and in benevolence, they are forging to the front. For many years they have had in contemplation a benevolent work such as they have now undertaken, and have done something in that line, but the recent bequest of Juliette Fowler, of Dallas, opened the way for them to carry out their purpose. This good sister left in her will fifteen acres of ground in the edge of Dallas, and $4,000 for a Home for orphan children and for the aged poor of our churches. The board having this matter in trust purchased a farm of 200 acres of rich soil, ten miles west of Dallas, and on it began the erection of "Faith Cottage"—so called because they had no money with which to complete the building. Soon after this the institution became affiliated with the "National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church," whose headquarters are in St. Louis, and the Association furnished the money for the completion of the building.

The dedication of the building was set for the 26th of January, and the editor of this paper was asked to deliver the dedicatory address. He and his wife were accompanied by George L. Snively, the General Secretary of the Benevolent Association, and Mrs. O. C. Shedd, treasurer of the Mothers' and Babies' Home and Hospital, and chairman of the committee on admissions in the Christian Orphans' Home—two of the institutions of the Association located at St. Louis—who also had parts in the dedicatory services.

Most of us stopped at Dallas with hospitable friends on Wednesday night, and on Thursday morning went out to the Home on the Interurban railway that connects the cities of Dallas and Fort Worth. The churches of Dallas were liberally represented, including their pastors, Davis and Ford, in the delegation. Fort Worth sent out, along with Hamlin and Inman, a good representation, and the church at Arlington, near by, was also well represented. In addition to these there were many preachers present from neighboring churches.

M. M. Davis, the Senior Bishop at Dallas, presided over the meetings both in the forenoon and afternoon, and of course that part of it was done well. After prayer and a song or two by the orphan children, Mrs. Shedd addressed the meeting, or as much of it as could be packed into the study or chapel, on the character of the work to be done. It was a very practical, helpful address from one thoroughly conversant with our benevolent work. Brother Snively read the constitution and by-laws of the Home, and President Davis asked all who wished to become members on the conditions named to indicate it by raising the right hand. A large number signified their desire for membership and subsequently signed the constitution. The nominating committee then presented the following list of officers which was unanimously approved: Mrs. S. A. Harwood, president; Mrs. Frances Blair, vice president; Mrs. Margaret Coke, vice president; Mrs. H. H. Smith, secretary; Mrs. R. H. Allen, treasurer; Miss Beulah Bush, corresponding secretary. After a few brief talks by different persons, the meeting adjourned for refreshments served in the dining room of the Home.

In the afternoon the tables were cleared away and the meeting was held in the dining room which accommodated many more people, but could not hold all who were present. After a beautiful solo by Mrs. Pitman, of Dallas, the editor of this paper delivered an address on "Christianity as a Divine Philanthropy," pointing out how Christ brought a new grace and power into the world and how this life of God, implanted in the heart of man, had expressed itself through various organisms for extending its blessings to others. This was illustrated by the history of the early church and in the development of our own religious movement, in which, as the life had deepened and widened, it had found channels for its outflowing to bless the world. Brother Faris, editor of the Christian Courier, followed in a historical address, showing the different steps by which the attempt to do benevolent work, in Texas, had reached its present stage. Chairman Davis then called on a large number of brethren present for brief talks, including Brothers Ford, Hamlin, Howard, Inman, Mobley, Mason, Bush, Snively, and perhaps others whose names we do not recall, who responded in a most hearty and felicitous manner, showing how close to the heart of the brethren in Texas is this benevolent enterprise. Brother Davis, presiding, closed these addresses with a few well chosen words and offered a most impressive and appropriate dedicatory prayer.

The officers and committees then tarried, and Mrs. Shedd and Mrs. Garrison explained in detail the duties of the officers and of the various committees. We doubt if any institution of this kind in the country has better material for officers and committees than has the Juliette Fowler Home. If there are any better people in any of the churches of the brotherhood than are to be found in Dallas, we have not met them. We do not know the members in Fort Worth so well, but we suspect that they are very much of the same type.

It was a great day for the cause in Texas. It means, we doubt not, a larger and richer ministry of love for the churches of that state. A. J. Bush, the superintendent, was of course, as near the third heaven as he is likely to be while in the body. George L. Snively seemed to be walking in the air, while all the brethren and sisters present seemed to regard it as a sort of Pentecost.

Standing on the broad veranda of "Faith Cottage" looking east over its 200 acre farm and the undulating hills beyond, one feels that this is an ideal location for such a Home, and it did not require any great effort of the imagination to see the other buildings which are to constitute parts of this Home, rising in a graceful semicircle, crowning this noble hill, and proclaiming to all the world the gospel of the helping hand, the grace of a divine philanthropy.

It was a delight to us to greet again so many of our Texas friends—M. M. Davis, who is now in his fifteenth year as pastor of the Central church, in Dallas, J. C. Mason, who is leading on the missionary hosts of Texas, A. J. Bush, the true and tried veteran who is crowning a useful life by this ministry of benevolence, our old friends, Doctors Johnston and Allen, Brother Faris, who has guided the Courier through some difficult places, into deeper current and smoother sailing, and a number of younger men whose faces are turned to the future and whose ministry will bless the world.

The churches must not forget in the midst of their enthusiasm over new converts that their responsibilities are greatly increased by the addition of this new element into their fellowship. These new converts are to be instructed and trained in Christian service and spiritually assimilated, and all this means probably, new methods and greater efforts than have been put forth hitherto in this direction. Churches cannot neglect their duty in this respect, and then blame the evangelist for apostasy among their converts. Even the converts of the apostles had to be nurtured and trained in order to be saved to the church, and no doubt some of them fell away in spite of all that. Edification must keep pace with evangelization, if our churches are to be permanently strengthened by these revivals.

Letting Down a Bar.

"God gave us the convivial note." Bishop Potter is right in this contention, but God never intended man to make either a fool or a beast of himself! We do not suppose for a moment that Bishop Potter believes he did, and it is doubtless because he agrees thus far with all temperance advocates that the Bishop lent his aid to what he believes is a real effort at solving the temperance problem. Bishop Potter has been very severely, and possibly in some instances, unduly severely criticized for his advocacy of the Subway Tavern. We, ourselves, were among his critics. But we see nothing in the defense which the Bishop has just made of his action to change our views as to the great impropriety in any great dignitary of the church lending his counsel to an effort, though well intentioned in its purpose, to minimize the evils of drink where the long metre doxology, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," finds a place on the program.

Bishop Potter disavows any financial interest in the New York venture. We do not think it could have entered the minds of many people that the Bishop was intending to speculate in a beer house, though, as a matter of fact, many churchmen have shares in breweries. But such criticisms of the Bishop are going beyond the facts. If he would know the real causes of the discussion arising from his action, it was simply that he should ally himself, in any way whatever, with the traffic which has long been recognized as the greatest curse we have among us. We are ready to accept the Bishop's statement that "there is a good deal of difference in some people's minds between a theory and a practical application of that theory" and would point out that the Bishop is an excellent example of his own statement. He admits that he has been in the Subway Tavern only once—on the opening day—and yet he seems to be still of the opinion that by means of such taverns is the best way to solve the temperance problem. He gives us no indication whatever of the practical application of his theory, but runs off into a general statement about the underlying causes of intemperance which will hardly be questioned. Insufficient nourishment, bad air, exposure to severe weather, no doubt have their effect, and says the Bishop "the convivial note is the one that is oftenest struck in connection with drinking. Now, the convivial note is in our physical and mental constitution—because—shall I shock you if I say it?—God put it there. Playing and recreation are not wrong, are not harmful. They are essential." All of which is true, but is no argument for beer-drinking or wine-bibbing even under the direction of a Bishop in a tavern where pure goods are sold without profit.

The same argument is presented in an article in the International Quarterly for January, written by Joseph Johnson, Jr., who discusses at some length the temperance problem and the Subway Tavern. Mr. Johnson's contention is briefly that Prohibition does not prohibit, that the drink is still with us without apparent signs of weakness and that the temperance problem is a recreation problem. He sets forth at length, the purposes of the Subway Tavern, which he admits is an experiment along the lines of "trying to eliminate the rudimentary danger—private profit." What so far has been the result of this experiment? For over a month it was not possible to give the tavern a fair test. The novelty seeking New Yorker shoved aside the working man to get a view of the "Bishop's Inn," but latterly the tavern has been running under normal conditions and has held an even way financially, and bids fair to stand on its own feet. It has closed its doors at the legal hours, and has been shut all day Sunday. So far, it has undeniably proved that it is preferable to the vast majority of saloons in New York City. We doubt whether it was in the minds of any of the Bishop's critics that this scheme would not be preferable to the dens which flourish in all big cities. Yet the writer in the International Quarterly is frank enough to say that "the chances of success for the Subway Tavern would not have been over bright but for its fortunate location near the Subway stations, and for the publicity which followed the public exercises of the opening." On the whole, we are not impressed from the statement of either Mr. Johnson or the Bishop that they have discovered the way out of the drink quagmire. It is quite likely that the class of people who will visit this tavern are those who are not likely to drink in excess. It is true also that drunkenness is—ruling out the cases where it has become a disease—very largely a matter of social instinct, but the question is, shall the church put its seal on this phase of the subject, and thereby take the chance of fostering a habit it seeks to eradicate? We venture to say that Bishop Potter's single action in reference to this Subway Tavern has done more to subvert the cause of temperance than a thousand taverns conducted on these lines can do good. They benefit the man chiefly who can control himself, and needs not the Bishop's help, but they do nothing at all to solve the real question. There are over 250,000 licensed liquor places in our country, yet despite this awful fact the Prohibition sentiment has done a very great deal in preventing the ravages of intemperance. Mr. Johnson bases his argument on the statements of Mr. Sherwell and Mr. Rountree whose figures were collected for a special plea. But Governor Hoch, of Kansas, speaking the other day for Prohibition, after its twenty-four years of experience in that state, said: "The conditions are not all that good citizens desire every where in the state, but with all its defects in operation, the conditions are much better here than in states sustaining a different attitude towards the subject," and he expressed the hope that the legislature would take no backward steps on this subject. As for the argument for conviviality, would it not be far better for the church to continue with all the power of its great resources to contend that a man can be a man, in every sense of the word, without any use of liquor, rather than to let down a single bar that may let in a flood that cannot be stopped?

Editor's Easy Chair.

A little dip into Dixie Land, at this season of the year, even when the cold wave follows one, serves to emphasize the influence which latitude exerts on climate. Our journey south led us through the Indian Territory, and the beautiful and fertile lands lying there yet in a virgin state afford a striking contrast with the populous districts in other parts of the country, on soil not half so fertile, and with climatic conditions nothing like so favorable. Texas has suffered no contraction since we last saw it, but it does not have that out-of-doors appearance which it once wore, as its broad prairies are rapidly coming into cultivation. Dallas has made great growth since we last saw it, both in population and in general improvements. Our cause in that city is probably keeping pace with the growth of the city, and the recent dedication of Faith Cottage, as a part of the Juliette Fowler Home (of the dedication of which we give an account elsewhere), is likely to be a factor in the more rapid growth of our cause there and throughout the state. Dallas always has for us a delightful social atmosphere, which we like to breathe, but, in this case, we were compelled to decline urgent invitations to tarry, and to hasten on.

In southern Louisiana, through which the Texas-Pacific carried us, we were journeying in the land of cotton and cane. The old-fashioned southern mansion on the old-fashioned southern plantation, was in evidence along the way, recalling pictures and descriptions which one reads and sees in stories having their scenes located in the south. In some of the cotton fields there remained much cotton on the stalks, the result, perhaps, of the low price of that article now prevailing. A great convention of cotton growers closed its sessions in New Orleans the day before our arrival, in which it was resolved to reduce the acreage and the fertilization of the crop 25 per cent and to hold present supply for higher prices. Already the negroes were plowing the fields for the spring crops, of which there is likely to be a greater variety the coming year than usual.

The southern people will learn, eventually, not to put all their eggs into one basket, and they will no doubt hatch more chickens in that way, than by their former method. One sees in these great cotton and cane fields, with their great mansions and negro cabins, a characteristic phase of the social and industrial life of the south. On the Pullman car in which we rode four men engaged in a game of cards for money. We hope this is not characteristic of southern civilization. Has Louisiana no law against gambling?

Coming into New Orleans from the west, the train runs onto a great ferry-boat, and you are floated across the broad current of the Mississippi, which at this point assumes the dimensions of an inland sea. Although this was our first visit to the old historic city, a familiar face greeted us on landing. It was that of R. M. Denholme, manager of the New Orleans Item, formerly of St. Louis, who took us to his home, and who, with his good wife, made us their guests during our brief stay in the city. The weather while we were there was not favorable for sight-seeing, and this was said to be a very unusual thing, but we have been accustomed to unusual weather, and so rather expected it! There is much in New Orleans to interest the visitor, but we had little time and opportunity for sight-seeing. Of course, we saw the Cabildo, the scene of the historic transfer of the Louisiana Purchase from one flag to another; the old church, and the court standing hard-by, and Jackson Square. There are really two cities of New Orleans—the old French city, and the modern American city. The one is quaint, historic, antique and filthy. The other is modern, with broad streets, with many palatial homes, and beautiful lawns, and parks, and splendid public buildings, and is as clean as any American city we have visited. Nestling in a bend of the great Mississippi, fanned by the breezes of the Gulf, and a port of entry into which the great steamers of all countries come with their cargoes, New Orleans seems destined to a great commercial future. The Panama Canal insures its commercial primacy among the great cities of the South.

The cause of primitive Christianity has had hard sailing in New Orleans. Roman Catholicism shadows the city like the state church in Europe. Nevertheless Protestantism has a good hold here and a fighting chance. We have had a church in the down town district of the city for more than a half century, but the removals, and losses from other causes, have about offset any growth which it has made. Less than a year ago it became obvious to a number of the brethren that a work should be begun in the up town district, among the resident population, and a lot was secured on Soniat avenue and Camp street, an old church building on it was remodeled, enlarged, and made new. Beginning with seventeen members the church now numbers something less than fifty, and is full of enthusiasm. Recently the new church called Bro. Marcellus Ely, of Joplin, Mo., to become its pastor, and he began his work the first Lord's day in January. The church is delighted with its new pastor, and he is equally well pleased with the church, and with his field of labor. He is a young man of fine character, training and ability, and has before him the promise of great usefulness. Brother Denholme is the wide-awake and capable superintendent of the Sunday-school, and one of the pillars of the congregation, with whom are associated a number of business brethren, of ability and influence, besides a large number of earnest young people.

We had the privilege of preaching for this young congregation morning and evening, on Lord's day, Jan. 29. In spite of a downpour of rain in the forenoon, at the hour for beginning the service, the house was well filled, and there was about the same audience at night. In the evening a number of the leading members of the First church were present. We were glad to notice that the most fraternal relations exist between the two congregations. Brother Denholme invited a number of the members of both churches to meet us in a social way at his home one evening and we had the opportunity in this way of getting better acquainted with the leading members. The First church was without a pastor, at the time, but expected a Brother Harris to begin work with them on the following Sunday. Brother Larimore recently closed a meeting with them, with five or six additions. We were greatly pleased with the spirit of enthusiasm which prevailed in the Soniat avenue church, with the character of its membership, with its snug little church neatly and tastefully fitted up, and with Brother Ely, who, though a doctor of osteopathy, and a graduate of the school of oratory, has subordinated everything to the work of the ministry.

After a three days' sojourn in New Orleans, we turned our faces northward, and met in St. Louis, on our arrival, one of the worst blizzards of the season. Think of moving, in such weather, such an establishment as the Christian Publishing Company! We are writing these lines in the midst of that interesting process. This is probably the last day in the old quarters. Here, in this third-story room, and by this very window, we have carried on our work, when in the city, for many years, and we can never think of it without calling up many of the scenes and incidents of the past, which are connected with it. And this leads us to say that another one of those pesky little mile-stones, which stand along the way to remind one that another year of his life is gone speeding away into the past and one year less remains in which to do the unfinished work, has been passed. It is when one compares what remains to be done to finish up what he conceives to be his life-work, with the rapidly flying years, that time seems so brief, and so precious. If we might presume to change a verse in Longfellow's "Psalm of Life," we would make it read,

> Art is long, and time is fleeting,
>   And our hearts, yet strong and brave,
> Still, like throbbing drums are beating
>   Notes of victory o'er the grave.

Notes and Comments.

We present this week the first installment of our symposium on the relation of prayer and the Holy Spirit to the work of evangelization. There will be two or three other installments to follow. When we have completed the symposium, we may have some general conclusions to draw from the consensus of opinion on this subject. At present, we only call attention to the fact, which we have no doubt will become still more apparent as the symposium continues, that there are two types of thought among us in relation to the subject of the Holy Spirit, and these, more or less, affect the question of prayer. It was our purpose in selecting the contributors to this symposium to bring out these two phases of thought. They are not necessarily antagonistic, but the one supplements the other. One of these types of thought is, that in correcting the erroneous ideas that have prevailed on this subject as to the direct operation of the Spirit in conversion, and a proper emphasis of the gospel as the power of God unto salvation, we have accomplished all that is practicable or desirable. The other view is that with the correction of existing errors, we have only laid the foundation for affirmative teaching on this subject, and that this teaching is greatly needed in order to the deepening of the spiritual life of our members, and in equipment for efficient service. According to the former view, there remains little to be desired in addition to our present teaching on the subject. According to the latter view, there remains yet much to be done in order to the presentation of the full-orbed New Testament view of this subject.

It would be strange indeed if we had exhausted a subject so profound and so vital as that of the Holy Spirit. The latest historical manifestation of God, the Holy Spirit, is confessedly the most difficult to understand. If this subject comes last in the development of God's plans and in the process of His self-revelation, it is easy to see how we have only touched the borders of this great theme.

Must the Prayer-Meeting Go?

By Francis E. Clark

"The prayer-meeting must go," said a minister talking to other ministers recently. "People no longer wear their hearts upon their sleeves. They are not going to tell their religious experience much longer. The prayer-meeting was well enough for the half-civilized, pioneer days of the church, but people demand something more esthetic to-day, something that appeals to their sense of the beautiful and symmetrical rather than the ragged utterances of ignorant or half-educated men and women."

Such in substance was the gist of a tirade against the prayer-meeting, received, I am glad to say, by the brother ministers with few expressions of approval and many marks of disapprobation. Less outspoken attacks on the prayer-meeting are not infrequent. and still more common and deplorable is the indifference to it as a vital, essential, necessary part of the life of the free churches to-day.

But what is the prayer-meeting?

It is the chief expression of the devotional life of the church. The morning and evening church services are for instruction and for worship; the Sunday-school is pre-eminently for instruction; the missionary societies and like activities of the church are for service. Most church members have almost no other way of verbally expressing their devotion to Christ before men and of acknowledging their allegiance to him except in the prayer-meeting.

I am not unaware of the glib and ready answers that are made to such a statement, that we best witness for Christ by our lives, that to be honest and straightforward, clean and true, to pay a hundred cents on the dollar and to give a full peck measure, not to "deacon" our apples or sand our sugar, is the best expression of the religious life.

But after all, this is only a half truth and a dangerous half truth at that. It undermines the very foundation of experimental religion.

Many a man who has no more conscious love for Christ in his heart than his thoroughbred horse or his collie dog is honest and clean according to all worldly standards. He pays a hundred cents on the dollar and never sands his sugar; he drops something into the contribution box out of his abundance when it is thrust upon him, and he is a very decent, nay, highly honored father and friend and citizen, but his influence is absolutely nil on the side of evangelical religion; perhaps he is bitterly opposed to it, and the church is not a whit the stronger, possibly far weaker, because he lives in the community.

Even a man who is known to favor the church, who belongs to it, who contributes to it, and who pays a hundred cents on the dollar, robs himself of half his influence for the right, by never confessing with his lips his allegiance to the Lord. There are depths of experience to which an upright, benevolent life alone cannot testify. There is a love and devotion which can be expressed only in words backed up by a godly life.

Besides, the prayer-meeting is one of the few avenues for the lay activities of the church. In the Sunday church service the minister is the priest. He offers the sacrifice of devout hearts for all the people. He leads the devotions. He opens the scriptures as they have been made plain to him. The people are only passive listeners.

But we are all priests unto God. Every man who studies the word has a message given him. Everyone who draws near to God himself can help others to him in prayer.

To destroy or minimize the prayer-meeting is to wantonly cripple the lay activities of the church; it is to destroy the one opportunity for the expression of the religious life of the majority; it is to do serious harm to the church of the present and to weaken if not to destroy the church of the future.

If that is considered too strong a statement, let me appeal to the facts that are patent to any one who keeps his eyes open. I do not profess to have any more insight into religious problems than others, but I have had more opportunities of seeing at first hand the religious life of the country than many. During the last ten years I have been in every large city in every state, territory and province of North America, and with few exceptions, in Europe, Asia, Africa and Australasia as well, and without exception, the live, active, spiritually-minded, non-liturgical churches have been those that emphasized the prayer-meeting and made much of it.

I qualify this statement with the adjective "non-liturgical" because Episcopalians have their own means of confession and participation in the service not common in other churches, though many Episcopal churches find help and strength in a prayer-meeting.

As a rule the activity of the churches which I have known has been in direct proportion to the vigor of the prayer-meeting, and when the prayer-meeting has languished and died, the church, as a rule, has languished, and if not died, has lived at a poor, dying rate.

This is entirely natural and altogether to be expected, for the prayer-meeting is the expression which the church can give to its devotional life, and everything that does not express itself sooner or later dies. We can kill the trees of our forests by destroying the leaves for a few years as they begin to show themselves, just as well, if not so quickly, as by hacking away at their roots. The flower that lives is sure to bloom. The bird that lives is sure to sing, the Christian who lives will express his devotion to Christ in some way, by his words as well as his life. He smothers and kills his spiritual life when he does not give it expression.

What is true of the individual Christian is true of the church, for the church is only an aggregate of Christian men and women who band themselves together to fulfil Christ's commands, one of which is to confess him with the lips as well as to love him with heart and mind and strength. No other activities on the part of the church can take the place of the weekly gathering for prayer and conference. All these other activities are strengthened and vitalized by it, for the prayer-meeting is not so much the thermometer that registers the heat of the church as the furnace which generates the heat and radiates it out into all church activities.

A striking example of this is given by the Grace Baptist temple, of Philadelphia, a church whose activities are so multifarious, whose membership is so large, and that touches life at so many points that one might say, "Here is a church that can get along without a prayer-meeting if anyone can, so many avenues are open for the activities of its people that they will be kept at white heat without a prayer-meeting." Yet, as a matter of fact, probably no church in the country has so many prayer-meetings as the Grace Baptist temple. The young people alone have fourteen each week, being grouped into no less than fourteen societies of Christian Endeavor, which hold their meetings, some on Sunday, and some on other days of the week, so that there is scarcely a day without its meeting of prayer throughout the whole year. From these reservoirs flow the many streams which make glad this city of our God.

The democracy of the prayer-meeting makes it peculiarly fitted and peculiarly necessary to the free churches of a free land. Here, if anywhere in a church, the rich and the poor meet together. Here the brother of low degree, if he has a message, and a genuine testimony, is of more importance than the one with the gold ring and the fine apparel who has no experience of God's love to tell and no prayer in his heart which he can voice with his lips. Here Christians learn to work with one another as well as for one another, and the snobbish condescension that patronizes the poor has no place. It is exactly this spirit which has killed the prayer-meeting in many an ultra-fashionable church; it is the opposite spirit of love and good will and common service that makes the great majority of our churches homes of spiritual refreshment, meeting-places for the different members of the family of God.

But for the prayer-meeting there must be a training school as well as for every other department of church life that is to be vigorously and effectively carried on, and the young people's prayer-meeting is as necessary for the future of any church as the primary and grammar schools are necessary to the university. Much foolish talk is indulged in in some quarters about severing the young from the old. Just as sensible would it be to argue against a grammar school because it kept the pupils for a time from going to the high school. They cannot go the high school properly until they have been to the grammar school though, as a matter of fact, the analogy does not hold in regard to the young people's prayer-meeting, for it has been found repeatedly by gathering statistics from the country over, that the young people who attend and participate in the young people's meeting are most faithful to other church services, and are the very ones who, far more than the average church member, attend the midweek meeting. The young people's meeting answers all the requirements of sanity and common sense. If we are to have prayer-meetings in the future, we must raise up a generation of prayer-meeting lovers and prayer-meeting goers. God grant that "Ichabod" may not be written over any of our American church goers because the prayer-meeting has fallen into disrepute, and because God's people have neglected the assembling of themselves together.

China's Call for Workers

By A. E. Cory

The call of the mission in China to double the force, which was made in 1903 and which has been repeated many times since, may appear to those who are not familiar with the facts, a call of sentiment rather than one coming from a crying need. For many years the China mission has desired to strengthen its present work, but for ten years the number on the field remained the same, those that were sent out only filling the places of those who died or had to leave the work. In 1902 there was an appeal sent out calling for a few workers to fill urgent needs but it was felt then that the call was too limited. In the summer of 1903 there was a general movement of prayer in all missions for workers. This feeling found definite expression when Dr. Griffith Johns, one who is in his fiftieth year of mission work in China, led a call for a three years' enterprise ending with the centennial of Protestant missions in China in 1907. It is a movement of confession, thanksgiving and prayer. The prayers were to be for revival and for the doubling of the forces in China. Our mission in China did not rush into this but spent much time in prayer before the call was made. The whole field was gone over and then we made our petition. Not one-half of the time has gone by, yet our prayer is nearly half answered. We include in our prayers the workers in west China, on the borders of Tibet. The natuaal question is, what are you going to do with these workers? That is the question above all others that we are glad to answer. When the call was made there were twenty-eight workers in our mission. Since then thirteen have come and are located as follows: Dr. and Mrs. Shelton and Mrs. Rijnhart were sent to Tibet, Miss Favors to Lu Cheo Fu, Miss Clark to the Nankin girls' school, Mr. and Mrs. Dannenberg to Lu Cheo Fu, Dr. and Mrs. Layton are assigned to the new station at Bo Cheo, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson to the new station at Tong Cheo, Mr. Settlemyer to the Nankin college work, and Mr. Brown is yet unassigned. This leaves us to answer the question, what will you do with the other fifteen? The time has come when we must open up other work and also reinforce the growing work at other stations. We must have another family for the west or Tibetan mission. Brother and Sister Johnson are waiting in Nankin until some one can go with them to Tong Cheo; there should be another family appointed to Bo Cheo at once, while Mr. Settlemyer's coming makes it possible for Mr. and Mrs. Cory to go to Bo Cheo. In a station so far removed there should be at least three families. We already have property rented in these two large cities where there is no one in charge as yet, and we have in no way commenced to expand and to answer the demands, for between Bo Cheo and Nankin there are two cities where our workers have been going for a long time and where there is a great demand for us to go. These two cities are on our direct route to Bo Cheo and if we are to have a connected work we must enter into these places; they are Feng Iang Fu and Nan Su Cheo. It will take at least four workers for each place.

The above call for workers is for work in three important parts of China where no mission work has been done to any great extent. It is new ground and the demand is immediate. To answer these demands our forces must be doubled. In addition to these eloquent facts remains the problem of our old work. It is growing. When a church at home grows there is a demand for more workers, so in our foreign policy we must be as wise as the children of this generation and provide for the present needs. The following are some which are most urgent and where the workers are most overworked.

Another school man is already under appointment and he is needed; the Nankin hospital must have a nurse, and another lady worker is needed in Nankin to take up work that has been unprovided for for years. The great call that has come from the Nankin station for a number of years is for an evangelist, this need grows greater every day. The woman's work in Wuhu needs another worker and there is a like call from the work in Shanghai and Chu Cheo for a lady worker in each place. To answer the above needs, at the very least it will take twenty-two more workers, and they are needed now. To fill the terms of the call there will be only fifteen to come and they will be until 1907 in coming. As we look over the present needs we feel that we have been most conservative and within the limit of the ability of our great brotherhood and considerate of the needs of the other fields. We have entered into this call in faith and we believe that by the time a hundred years of Protestant missions and twenty-two years of our history in China has been fulfilled we will have our fifty-six workers. The very future of our work in this empire is at stake. The above are the demands on us from a geographical standpoint but back of this there is the changing condition of affairs in the whole empire which gives us opportunities which if we delay will never come to us again. We believe that the Father knows these things and we are praying that the church will awaken to the need ere it is too late.

Winners of Souls.

By Mark Wayne Williams.

Ask not the Lord
Triumphs of shop and sword;
Far other your reward;
Win souls to God!

Seek not on earth
Bald ease and jaded mirth;
Be knights of nobler birth,
Winners of souls.

Vex not the skies
With vague and vain surmise;
Strive for a worthy prize,
Winning of souls.

Curse not your age
With sin's fast withered wage;
Souls be your heritage,
Winners of souls.

Weave fair your youth
With righteousness and ruth;
Woo the world up to Truth;
Win souls to God.

A Symposium on Evangelism

As a further contribution to the present widespread interest in evangelistic work, we sent the following questions, along the line of our leading editorial last week, to a number of our most experienced brethren, and some of the replies are published herewith. Others will follow.

1. Is there, in your judgment, based on your experience and observation, a lack of the proper use of prayer or reliance on Divine aid in our evangelistic and other efforts to extend the kingdom of God?

2. Have we restored, in our evangelistic work, the New Testament teaching concerning the Holy Spirit, especially as presented in the Gospel of John, and in the Acts of the Apostles?

3. What means, if any, have you to suggest to make our evangelism even more successful and permanent in its results than it has been in the past?

By J. W. McGarvey.

To the question, Is there a lack of the proper use of prayer in our evangelistic efforts? I answer that in my judgment there is no lack among evangelists who are successful. Every successful protracted meeting that I have known has been preceded and accompanied by a great deal of earnest prayer. There may be exceptions.

As to the work of the Holy Spirit in conversion, the chief work of our evangelists consists, as it ought to, in removing from the minds of sinners prevalent conceptions of this work which stand in the way of their conversion. If we do our part the Holy Spirit will do his.

As to means of making our evangelizing more effective, I suggest stronger presentations of sin and its punishment. I think this our weakest point at the present time.

1. I think it is plain that very much use should be made of prayer in our evangelistic efforts. Our Lord prayed earnestly and often. Indeed the record shows that he approached every great undertaking with deep and fervent prayer. Mighty as is the gospel and important as is human agency, the apostles looked to God to give the increase and grant prosperity. While we should not depend on divine aid in lieu of human effort, or in place of the clear gospel message and the exercise of common sense, we should seek God's guidance, power, co-operation and blessing very zealously, for without them we can do nothing. Paul may plant, Apollos may water, but God must give the increase. We must not forget that our strength and hope and success are in God, not in us. But I would emphasize fervency rather than frequency, faith rather than formality, reality rather than appearance in prayer.

2. We have not restored generally in our evangelistic work the New Testament teaching concerning the Holy Spirit. I do not mean by any means to adopt the current denominational views of the abstract operation of the Spirit on the unbelieving. I do mean, however, that we ought to regard the bestowal of the Spirit as God's greatest gift to his adopted children, and the fulness of the indwelling Spirit in the ministers and Christian workers as essential and possible in evangelistic service. One of Paul's greatest prayers was that the Ephesian brethren might be strengthened with might by the Holy Spirit and filled with all the fulness of God. God by his Spirit is able to work in his servants mightily to do his will and to do exceeding abundantly above all we can ask or think.

3. I would suggest a greater fear of God on the part of Christians. I think there is too much ease in Zion relative to the danger of the unsaved. I am impressed with the practical skepticism concerning the great fundamental teaching of the New Testament. Christians neglect the word of God. Many do not know its teachings. Multitudes do not realize the awful significance of living without well-founded hope in God, and without any promises of salvation. A practical universalism, due largely to ignorance of the word of God and the heinous and disastrous nature of sin, prevails to an alarming degree in the churches. If Jesus died that whosoever believeth might not perish but have life, what ought we to do?

To your first question I would make answer, that in some instances I have thought there was "a lack of the proper use of prayer, or reliance on divine aid," but in the great majoriry of protracted meetings which I have attended I have discovered no such lack. On the contrary the evangelists have emphasized the statement that while "Paul may plant and Apollos water, it is God that giveth the increase." They have insisted that "without him we can do nothing." At the same time great emphasis is laid on the fact that "the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

To the second question I would answer: The Disciples, as far as I have heard them, are the only people who understand and present to the people clearly the teachings of the scripture on the Holy Spirit in conversion and sanctification. In my judgment "the fundamental error of Christendom" is not so much a mistake about baptism, but a failure to discriminate between the promise of the Holy Spirit: (1) To convince the world of sin; (2) To "dwell in and abide with Christians;" (3) To inspire men to preach the gospel infallibly. These distinctions I do believe the Disciples understand.

Just now when the greater leaders of Christian thought are conceding that in the conversion of sinners the Holy Spirit (ordinarily) operates through the truth, the word of God, and that we shall have so much of his power as we have of the gospel preached, there are to me indications of going back to the confusion of other days and a revival of "the doctrine of immediacy." Yes, I think our evangelists are preaching the doctrine of the "Holy Spirit as taught in the gospel of John and in the Acts of the apostles" as no other people are now preaching it and I do therein rejoice.

To your third question I would answer: (1) More reliance on the word of God faithfully preached and perfect confidence that, this done, the Holy Spirit will, through the preached gospel, convince the world of sin. (2) More consecration and less professionalism on the part of all our preachers.

I write from the midst of the great simultaneous interdenominational revival in our city, and I have opportunity to note the immense advantage of our people in a more scriptural evangelism.

1. Yes, one element of our strength as a people has proven to be a source of weakness. Reliance upon our great plea, of loyalty and divine simplicity, and the consequent remarkable success attendant, has contributed to make it the talisman of our forces militant, rather than the promised presence of the Lord. The "Lo, I am with you alway," has been too long ignored, or else interpreted to mean that he is hidden in his word. Your recent editorial is just in its strictures and timely in appearance. If we believe in prayer, let us pray more.

2. No. Our reaction in this particular has drawn a line of demarkation between us and some of the denominations, and we fear to press into the Spirit's realm and workings, lest we be regarded as advocates of all they teach. But if we are to restore the church of the first century, we should not permit any church or sect to monopolize a single one of its essentials. The New Testament throbs with the vital energy of the Spirit. Our Restoration might be a little more complete.

3. I want to compliment our present evangelists. They are good men and strong. However I would suggest three things: (1) That every evangelist strive to keep his life pure. That he be godly within and without the sanctuary. (2) Less sham and claptrap and abuse of our religious neighbors; more reliance upon the gospel, song, prayer and personal work. (3) Perfect harmony between evangelist and pastor, with frequent instructions of latter by former in the care of new converts.

1. Yes, there seems to me, in many quarters, a lamentable lack of prayer, and reliance upon divine aid in our evangelistic work. In our protest against extravagance in prayer, as seen in the mourner's bench and other machinery of revival effort, we have swung too far away from the scriptural ideal of unceasing and believing prayer.

2. There is little doubt that we have failed to a considerable degree in the past in recognizing the place of the Holy Spirit in our evangelistic work. It seemed so necessary that the religious world should have its attention drawn to the necessity of preaching the word in order to producing faith in the hearer, that we failed to seek the presence and power of the Spirit of God as had been promised in the scriptures. We are learning better very rapidly, I think; and are perhaps learning from the example of our religious neighbors.

3. I have no suggestions to make for making our evangelism more successful other than this: to pray more earnestly and persistently, seek more sincerely for the presence and power of the Holy Spirit upon the church and her ministry, and keep on preaching the simple gospel of Jesus Christ and him crucified, making the way of salvation plain by declaring the terms of pardon as delivered to us by the inspired apostles of our Lord and Savior. The "New Evangelism" we need is a new fervor in prayer, a new endowment of spiritual power, and new fidelity and zeal in pressing upon men the claims of Christ.

The Spell of Jesus[*]

By E. L. Powell

The name Jesus has been placed above every other name in the realm of intellect. He never painted a picture. He never enunciated a scientific dictum. He never gave to the world a single mechanical invention. He never wrote a book. He wasn't what you call in this age and generation a scholar. His supremacy is not pleaded for to-night in the realm of science, in the realm of invention, in the realm of physical achievements, but his intellectual supremacy is discovered in the fact that he alone of all the world's religious leaders discovered the human soul, interpreted that soul unto men, explained its longings and its aspirations, recognized its needs and its possibilities and lifted it up to its proper eminence so that for one to think of himself as a man made in the image of God is to think of man as little lower than God here and having within him possibilities that shall presently bring him unto the perfect image of the Son of God.

Marvelous, indeed, is the reign of Christ in the realm of the soul. His words are indorsed by universal consciousness. When he speaks men say with the scribe of old: "Well, Master, thou hast said the truth." When his word comes to us in the form of some gracious invitation we suddenly discover music in ourselves that we never dreamed of. When that word comes to us in the form of condemnation we come to hate ourselves because of the sin that has been revealed. When that word comes in the form of some lofty ideal bidding us leap forward to claim it, it seems that our strength is as the strength of ten.

Mark in proof of his intellectual supremacy the note of certainty in all of his utterances. Jesus is never tentative; he is never timid. His touch is always bold. When he speaks of God it is as one who has come from God. When he speaks of the spiritual world it is as one who has lived and breathed the atmosphere of that spiritual world. He speaks not as the scribes, but in a tone of absolute assurance. He never doubts. How shall we explain this? And, furthermore, his words command us. We can no more get away from the words of Jesus Christ than we can get away from our own souls. When you have once gazed upon a magnificent painting if there is in you artistic appreciation you shall never get from under the spell of it; it holds you; it dominates you; it commands you, and all else is as moonlight unto sunlight or as water unto wine. Get before you a grand, glorious, splendid conception, a thought that fills every nook and corner of your being, and evermore you are a slave to that conception. It holds you; you are mastered. Jesus Christ has come into this world and he has laid his mind upon the centuries through which his spirit has passed, and that mind is laid upon the twentieth century no less surely and certainly than upon the first century. We think in terms of Christian thought. When we speak of home his spirit is there or it is no home. When we speak of marriage Jesus is once again at the wedding feast, even though he be not there as a physical presence to convert the water into wine. When we speak of childhood we hear the music from the long ago breathing upon us in dulcet tones sweeter than any note of flute and sublimer than the grandest peal of organ: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

We are under the spell of Jesus Christ, however materialistic our age. I do not say that all our civilization is permeated with an appreciation of his character, but I do mean to say that you cannot date a letter without recognizing his birth; you cannot write 1904 without admitting that something extraordinary happened about 2,000 years ago. You cannot get away from Jesus Christ. Here is intellectual supremacy that must be explained.

And he is supreme in the realm of leadership. Splendid have been the leaders of the world in their respective fields of activity. Shakespeare is preeminent in the realm of dramatic genius. Darwin, perhaps, is pre-eminent in the realm of science. Plato unquestionably is pre-eminent in the realm of philosophy. Alexander or Napoleon is pre-eminent in the realm of military science, but Jesus Christ, while claiming for himself leadership in the moral realm alone, because of the intimate relation between moral and all other life, leads mankind in every department of thought and endeavor.

Every man who has been trying to make the world better has been breathing silently or audibly the prayer, "Thy kingdom come." Oh, God, hasten the day when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Sometimes it seems that the prayer will break out into a jubilant strain of victory and then it dies away in a pathetic moan, but so sure as Jesus Christ lives and reigns, so sure the day shall come when that prayer shall be answered, and all kings shall bow before his crown, and all nations shall recognize him as Lord. I believe in the ultimate and final supremacy of righteousness. I believe that this name which is above every name shall come into its own rights bye and bye; that every tongue shall confess, that every knee shall bow before, that all the world shall, willingly or unwillingly, acknowledge him as Lord and Christ. Jesus Christ is no figure of speech. He is no character of fiction. He is here in the world now to demand his rights. You cannot get away from him. He owns you. He has paid for you. He has justified every claim which he makes upon you. Give him your love, willingly and joyously, and help us to sing that song over and over again:

> "All hail the power of Jesus' name,
> Let angels prostrate fall,
> Bring forth the royal diadem,
> And crown him Lord of all."

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

The Wyoming Valley is one of the most beautiful regions in the Keystone state, lying between romantic mountain ranges and watered by the Susquehanna which winds through it. It is the seat of the most famous anthracite coal deposits in the world. In 1903 the production of coal here was 67,171,951 tons, and the men employed in its collieries were an army of 151,827, and but one life was lost for every 129,675 tons of black diamonds dug from the depths. In fifteen years over 715,000,000 tons of this precious carbon have been mined in the ten counties that constitute the anthracite region, and we remember it was as late as 1814 when the virtue of "stone coal" became known, and in 1871 the output was but 14,000,000 tons from this wonderful diamond zone. One sees on every hand the mines, and great dumps, and breakers, and the swarms of workmen of every nationality under the sun. In a single county, Luzerne, it is possible to preach the gospel to 257,121 people speaking twenty-three different tongues. They are drawn from all the ends of the earth to open up these treasures of buried sunlight once more to the light of the sun. "Man is a tool-using animal. He digs up certain black stones from the bosom of the earth, and says to them, 'Transport me and this luggage at the rate of five and thirty miles an hour,' and they do it."

It is a historic region—this Wyoming Valley. Such names as Catawissa, Nanticoke, Shickshinny, Tunkhannock, and Wapwollopen take the visitor back to the times of Count Zinzendorf, and the Connecticut settlers of 1756, and the red men. Wyoming itself is a corruption of the Indian Waugwauwama, which meant "large plains." The valley was purchased from the "Six Nations" in 1754, and it was in 1778 the 400 British provincials and 700 Indians entered the valley, and July 3 of that year the Forty Fort, so called from the forty Connecticut pioneers, was summoned to surrender. Its 300 defenders under Col. Zebulon Butler gave battle and were defeated and massacred by the Indians and Tories with savage cruelty. Campbell's "Gertrude of Wyoming," and the monument on the battlefield, and the descendants of these early settlers are witnesses. Men, women, and children were tomahawed, shot down, tortured, or fled to the swamps and forests and perished. The Wyoming massacre was one of the most frightful episodes in our early history, and the stories of "Queen Esther," and of the spider's web in the end of the log, and of Frances Slocum come to us with every mention of this blot on Britain's history. While we recall, however, that the British secretary of the colonies praised the savages for their bravery and humanity, and that in the appropriations for the support of the army that did this bloody work was one for "scalping knives," we should not forget that "whisky" had much to do with the overthrow of the Colonials, having been freely distributed among the defenders of "Forty Fort," and so knocked out the patriots that they were unable to meet the foe with their best powers ready for the emergency. One sees evidences of this greater enemy than Tories or red men still in existence in the beautiful Wyoming Valley.

It was my privilege to visit this section last week to assist in the dedication of the new Christian church at Plymouth. This town is next to Wilkesbarre and Scranton in the anthracite region. Here we have perhaps the strongest congregation in eastern Pennsylvania with the exception of the first church, Philadelphia. The organization dates back to 1825. It began as a church of "New Lights" and was gradually evolved into a church of Disciples of Christ. L. B. Hyatt, and J. H. Gordonier, L. S. Brown and C. W. Harvey have been its pastors, the last two serving nine years each. L. O. Knipp succeeded Harvey three years ago and under his efficient administration the house has been remodeled and rededicated. The old structure was built in 1857. The church has been completely rebuilt at a cost of $20,000, and is one of the handsomest and most convenient now in the Crotherwood. The improvements comprise electric lights, pipe organ, kitchen, parlors, choir and class rooms, beautiful auditorium and Sunday-school room, and all in elegant and up-to-date decoration and furnishings. From the oldest church in Plymouth it has been converted into the most modern and attractive house of worship in the city. This congregation has been an active one in all good works. The church in Scranton was one of its missions and it has two others, Wilkesbarre and Berwick. L. O. Knipp, the preacher, is a son of Harlem avenue, Baltimore, a graduate three years ago of Hiram, and a hustling, wide-awake pastor. He had raised all the money needed before the opening service, so the work on dedication day was an easy one. The arrangements were admirable and the three services will be long remembered. The music was in charge of Miss Dora Dudley, a recent Hiram graduate. At the afternoon service Richard Martin, our evangelist, now preaching with such success at Wilkesbarre, and E. E. Cowperthwaite, in charge of the mission there, J. M. Smoot, of Scranton, and M. B. Neiter, of Berwick, made congratulatory addresses. The membership of the church is 400 and the Sunday-school had an attendance of 318. Allen Dungan, a son of David R. Dungan, is one of the active members of this congregation. An interesting incident of the dedication was the presence of Miss Margaret Knipp, of Baltimore, who first led the pastor to the Harlem avenue Sunday-school, Mrs. J. H. Rosenau, also of Baltimore who influenced him to enter the church, and F. D. Power, who encouraged him to enter the ministry. The church has a splendid opportunity with its new facilities for work and should make itself felt far and wide in this most important field of service.

The Fifteenth street church, Washington, was set apart to its purposes January 22, G. W. Muckley preaching the dedicatory sermon, and our Washington pastors sharing in the service. The chapel cost $5,000 and is a very neat and attractive house of worship. It is largely the work of our united Christian Endeavor Societies in the city, and is well situated and promises to be a center of usefulness. J. E. Stuart, of Harriman, Tennessee, a faithful and efficient man, has been called to lead the new congregation and is in a meeting with them. He is a native of Pulaski county, Virginia, the home of that eminent pioneer, Dr. Chester Bullard; is thirty-five years of age; a graduate of Milligan college; and a preacher of thirteen years' experience in the ministry. We feel that he is the right man in the right place. This is our sixth church in Washington. Our churches here all work together and the outlook for all is most encouraging.

J. Murray Taylor just closed a meeting at Beaver creek with twenty-two added. This makes sixty-seven he has recently brought into the churches in Washington county, Md. The pastor at Beaver Creek, Walter S. Hoye, was married, January 25, at Rockville to Miss Annie Owens, J. A. Hopkins and W. B. Taylor officiating. This thing was "done in a corner" as none of us on the Dome knew a thing about it. Our congratulations, however, are none the less sincere. Rockville's loss will be a great gain to historic Beaver creek. Hopkins still remains with us an unappropriated blessing. F. M. Green is sojourning for a time at the capital, hobnobbing with the great men of the republic. He grows old gracefully. It is a quarter of a century since he was with us and he is getting reminiscent. With the dews of eternal youth upon him he is a very welcome visitor. E. B. Bagby begins a meeting in Columbus, O., for W. S. Priest, February 5; and our vivacious brother, who alone amongst us has a right to this title, will bring his benediction to the dwellers under the Dome as soon as the ides of March have passed and the Rough Rider has been installed.

The Mission of the Church College.

By C. C. Rowlison.

The Disciples of Christ need the method of contact in our educational system, as illustrated in the former article, to give us breadth; we need the church colleges to give us depth. However obnoxious sectarianism may be, depth must always precede breadth. It is very important for us to test our religion by bringing it into the closest contact with the results of scientific investigation, and with other phases of religious belief and expression. But it is of first importance that our religion should be so vital, so all-absorbing, so evangelistic, that all else is subordinated to it. As a matter of fact, we must seek the kingdom of God first, or we do not seek it at all. Therefore religion must become the predominating influence in life. And it is to the church college that we must continue to look for this emphasis upon the supremacy of religion.

The decline or neglect of our church colleges, therefore, would mean, not simply "a disappearing brotherhood," but also, in the measure of their influence, a disappearing Christianity. In Professor Shaler's interesting volume entitled, "The Neighbor," he indicated that the prevailing scientific culture tends to provide the educated man with a great mass of information, but does not vitalize this mass with a sympathetic imagination. And in speaking of the unsocial and unspiritual conditions of the day, he goes on to say: "There appears to be no chance that the betterment will be attained by any formal teaching of science; of that there is now more than enough; for science is evidently displacing those forms of education which helped to quicken the imaginative sympathies of men on which all truly human culture depends" (p. 221). It is to the church college that we must look for the influences which will quicken these imaginative sympathies which are the basis of the highest culture. If, as some one has said, "It is a striking fact that sixty per cent of the brainiest Americans who have risen to prominence and success are graduates of colleges whose names are scarcely known outside their own states," then this is true largely because most of these colleges are church colleges, and in these colleges the religious influence gives purpose and motive to life, develops the imaginative sympathies, and encourages the soul to become master of its environment. This spiritual pre-eminence is unquestionably more important than microbe-chasing or exact analysis, even though we all admit that it is only more important.

We therefore owe it to our colleges to give them the best possible equipment, first, because the vitality of religion in our churches and in our homes depends largely upon the extent of their influence; and secondly, because the progress of our country and the redemption of the world are dependent finally upon those who have given religion and its attendant sympathies the pre-eminence in life.

There is danger that the establishment of Bible chairs, Bible seminaries, etc., contiguous to the great universities, shall so appeal to our almost abnormal sense of economy, that there shall ensue the neglect of our most important ecclesiastical activity—the education of our young people in our church colleges. Bethany, Hiram, Butler, Kentucky university, Eureka, Drake, Cotner, to name only the most prominent, should be the chief objects of our centenary beneficences. They ought to be dear to the whole church. Every child in the Sunday-school ought to know of their work as he now knows of our missionary work in Japan and China. Every young man and young woman in our Endeavor societies ought to be invited personally to their halls of learning. And every individual member of the church should be taught to contribute regularly to their support.

Mr. Stead on Revivals.

W. T. Stead has been investigating the revival in Great Britain.

"The result," he says, "has been excellent—everywhere excellent. However we may explain it, the veriest skeptic must admit that what the revivalist seeks to effect is of all things the most important object of human endeavor. No political or social change can be regarded as having any serious importance, excepting so far as it tends to facilitate indirectly the achievement of the same result which the revivalist seeks directly.

"The aim of all reformers is the regeneration of the individual. To make a bad man good, a cruel man merciful, a lazy man industrious, a drunkard sober, and to substitute unselfish struggle to help others for a selfish scramble to seize everything for one's self—that is the aim-all, the be-all, and the end-all of all those who seek the improvement of society and the progress of the world.

"It is not necessary to credit the revival with all the results which it reveals, any more than we may credit a day's sunshine in spring with all the flowers it brings to birth. But it brings them out. So does a revival. And if there had been no revival, the latent sainthood of multitudes would never have been born, just as the flowers would never have come out in May if there were no sun.

"It is often argued that revivalism is ephemeral. But as our brief historical retrospect shows, the fruits of revivals are among the most permanent things in history."

The Upper Room.

By Mrs. Princess Long.

[This beautiful song was written by Sister Long with the view of singing it, at Bro. Carey E. Morgan's request, at the great communion service held in the Coliseum, St. Louis, at our last national convention. By some misunderstanding on the part of the presiding officer, who was not informed of the arrangement, the song was not sung, but it is good for use on similar future occasions.—Editor.]

The busy day had passed and gone,
The night came down in gloom,
When Jesus gathered with the twelve
Within that Upper Room.
He longed with them to be alone
Before the morning's doom,
Oh, what a sacred hour was that
Within that Upper Room.

"A little while you'll see me not,
A little while I go;
But I'll not leave you comfortless
Because I love you so;
And if I go, I will return
And take you to my home."
These were the loving words he spake
Within that Upper Room.

He took the bread, He blessed and brake,
Then said so tenderly,
"This is my body, take and eat
In memory of me,
For as ye do, ye show my death
Until once more I come."
Surely the very air was blest
Within that Upper Room.

He left no work of love undone,
He suffered every woe,
That we might know, whate'er our griefs,
That He has borne them too.
Oh, sad was dark Gethsemane
And Calv'ry's awful gloom,
But what sweet mem'ries cluster 'round
That sacred Upper Room.

And now we come with tendered hearts,
Our eyes with tears made dim,
To eat once more this sacred feast
In memory of Him.
Oh, may each heart be filled with love,
That casts out fear and gloom,
And may each heart enshrine him now
Within its Upper Room.

The only wealth is life; the only way to make the best of this world is to make the best of the other. For the two are one. The highest gleams ever through this lower. The pilgrim to the better country is the man who, living or dying, knows the bliss of perpetual youth.—J. Brierley.

Some time ago, when in a mine, looking through its dark corridors I every now and than saw the glimmer of a moving lamp, and I could track it all through the mine. The reason was that the miner carried it on his hat—it was a part of himself, and it showed where he went. I said, "Would that in this dark world every miner of the Master carried his lamp to show where he walks."—T. L. Cuyler.

—The semiannual convention of the North Texas Christian missionary society will be held at Paris, Feb. 21-23. The program is a very interesting one, and we trust there will be a large and helpful meeting.

—After March 19, the pulpit of the Constitution St. Christian church at Lexington, Ky., will be vacant, G. C. Campbell having given notice that he will retire. Any preacher who wishes to correspond with respect to the pastorate, may write to A. W. Redd, 412 Constitution St.

—The third convention of the Religious Education Association will be held in Boston Feb. 12-16. A very full program has been arranged, and many of the leaders of religious thought and work will take part.

The society also received a second gift on this plan of $200 from a friend in Kansas and a third of $100 from a friend in Indiana.

—We are requested to remind the churches of a foreign missionary rally in all the churches Sunday night, February 19. It is hoped every church will have an enthusiastic rally on that date. The Foreign Society will send a suggestive program to any who may request it. Such a meeting can be made a national convention in miniature.

—On June 26, 1904, I organized the Central Christian church of Eldorado Springs, Mo.; on Oct. 2, 1904, laid the corner stone of a house of worship, and on Jan. 29, 1905, preached the dedicatory sermon setting it apart to the service of God. It is a modern up-to-date structure and was dedicated free of debt.

W. W. BLALOCK.

—The Board of Church Extension has just received $1,000 from a friend in Missouri, and $200 from a friend in California, on the annuity plan. This last is the one hundred and thirtieth gift on the annuity plan. Persons desiring information concerning the annuity plan should address G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

The aim is to realize $5,000 this year from 500 Christian Endeavor societies for the Porto Rico work.

—McLean, the inimitable, was the center of interest at the missionary rally in St. Louis last week. Though not largely attended the rally was of deep interest and the speeches were all good. Brother McLean, in a talk packed with information, showed that the best churches are the missionary churches. The others, he declared, "are headed for the valley of dry bones and they'll reach there in schedule time."

—The work at South Haven, Kan., where the remodeled house has just been dedicated by L. L. Carpenter, progresses nicely. The cost of the improvements was over $1,600, and the building now has a seating capacity of 200, with a Sunday school seating 150 There is a raised baptistry, and two convenient robing-rooms which can be used as class rooms. At Hunnewell, Brother Morris's former field of labor, the house is also freed from debt.

Address,
F. M. RAINS, Cor. Sec.,
Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

—We have received a copy of the twentieth annual report of the churches of Christ mission in Japan, containing cuts of the homes of some of the missionaries, of Drake college at Tokio, some of the mission chapels, some of the missionaries, and of the Japan convention, besides excellent useful information concerning the work in Japan. The missions have had a prosperous year in spite of the war, and the outlook is excellent.

—J. E. Stuart, of Harriman, Tenn., has taken up the work at the Fifteenth St. church, Washington, D. C. The Disciples of Tennessee will be loath to part with him, and his leaving is sorely felt by the local congregation with whom he has labored for six years, endearing himself to young and old. The past year was the best in the history of the church, and both he and the membership hesitated at severing their congenial relations. He carries with him the best wishes of the entire congregation and the brotherhood of the state to his new work.

—J. W. Harrison, of New York city, who with his wife, made a journey through the southern states and returned in a wagon, preaching the gospel along the way, as he had opportunity, by roadside or in crowded street, writes that he is planning another journey of the same kind, beginning in March next, in which they will be absent about a year. They expect to come to St. Louis en route to San Francisco, and will probably aim to take in the national convention. Brother Harrison is an earnest Christian man, who has adopted this method of improving his health and preaching the gospel at the same time.

—We are glad and yet regret that Bro. Thos. H. Bates, a native of Australia, a graduate of the College of the Bible in the class of 1872, who has done most faithful and efficient service in Australia, his own native south land, and in England, contemplates coming to America in the spring and desires to secure work with any church looking for a preacher of experience who is not afraid of hard work. Brother Bates will come with the highest commendations of his brethren both in Australia and England. He may be addressed for the present at No. 38 Wyresdale Road, Lancaster, England. Our regret is that the work in England may suffer.

—R. W. Clymer, of Scranton, Pa., recently read a paper on Alexander Campbell at the request of the Abington association of the Baptist church. It was very kindly received, and many expressions of hearty approval of the reforms begun by Mr. Campbell were made. In this issue we print a reminiscence of Mr. Campbell by Colonel Switzler, an authority on Missouri history. We are glad to announce that Colonel Switzler purposes to let us draw on the fund of information and recollection that he has of the early pioneer preachers in Missouri for some special biographical articles.

—The evangelistic enthusiasm has gone as far south as Jacksonville, Fla., where a big union meeting is being held under the leadership of Dr. Munhall, of Philadelphia. Both of the Christian churches are represented, and from the indications at the start, there is promise of large good being done. A note from Bro. J. T. Boone requests that we announce in the Christian-Evangelist that any brethren who contemplate being in Florida March 1, when the state convention will meet with the First church at Jacksonville, will please send him their names so that they may be used on the program. There were no less than six Cincinnati members in Brother Boone's congregation the Sunday before he wrote to us. An effort is being made to finish the building of the new church there by the time of the convention.

—The indebtedness to the Church Extension Board on the part of the Christian church at Alameda, Cal., has been wiped out. Eight years ago the amount was $1,900 and it was only about two and one-half years ago that the congregation really became earnest in meeting this obligation. There are no wealthy members, but the numbers have been growing steadily. Something has been paid in on the debt in some way every month and the largest sum given by any one person at any one time was $25. The old chapel will now be repainted, recarpeted and decorated and made as attractive as possible for the year or two they will make use of it, pending the erection of a new and more commodious structure. We congratulate Bro. P. C. McFarlane, the pastor, upon getting rid of this drag, and upon the bright prospects before him.

—In a recent letter from Dr. French, an agent of the American Bible Society, to the editor, he inquired what plan our churches had adopted for aiding the American Bible Society. We were compelled to say that we knew of no definite plan, but that our churches were, of course, in sympathy with the great work of Bible distribution which is being carried on by that organization, and made offerings to it when some agent was present to ask for them. This, of course, is not a very satisfactory way of helping on a good work. Other leading religious bodies request their churches to make an annual offering for the benefit of the Bible Society. How can we do less than this and act consistently with our belief that the Bible is the great medium of spiritual illumination, through which God speaks to men to-day? Surely we ought to bear our share of the work of this society in sending the word of God to all parts of the world.

—E. W. Brickert, writing from Newkirk, Oklahoma Territory, says: "There are many people living here who were members of the church in Missouri but cannot be induced to take fellowship here. Brethren, is there a quarantine preventing our Missouri people from bringing their religion with them? If so, perhaps we could get it repealed under this reform administration." It seems to us that that quarantine matter may apply to a great many besides Missouri people. Let them take the medicine if they deserve it, but the disease suggested by Brother Brickert is altogether too widely scattered. It merely suggests again the importance of pastors and churches applying the follow-up system to those of their membership who move into other fields. When a church letter is given, the church to which it is given ought to be informed of that fact where any particular place is designated, and when this is not the case, the preacher who is responsible for the letter should make a point to learn where the departing member intends to locate.

—We have received communications from two localities in Missouri during the past week, where members are desirous of building a new church. One of these is at New Bloomfield, Callaway county, and the other is at Dongola, Bollinger county. The friends at both these places ask us to make an appeal for assistance in their behalf. We have written them both, privately, suggesting a different method of procedure, viz.: that they secure an evangelist to hold a meeting, obtain what subscriptions they can on the ground, and if necessary, apply to our Church Extension Board at Kansas City to assist them in the enterprise. We mention this fact here by way of suggestion to brethren in other localities who may be thinking of building houses of worship. The old method of appealing to the brethren for dollar subscriptions or other amounts has gone out of date with the coming in of our Board of Church Extension, and a more businesslike way of assisting churches in need of help through that ornanization. Let these brethren do the very best they can on the ground, and in their own communities, and only apply to the Church Extension Board when they find it necessary to do so. In all such cases this is our advice to the brethren. We have ceased publishing such appeals because we know our churches prefer to assist their brethren through the Board of Church Extension.

—G. B. Van Arsdale has resigned at Peoria, Ill., to accept the work at the First church, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

—The church at Wolcott, Ind., is moving with the times. R. H. Lampkin, the pastor, has out a neat card announcing the subjects for February. Mornings, "The Kingdom" (missionary); evenings, "The Great Reformers": Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and Campbell. He gave an interesting address on Physical Culture to the high school, and the citizens, Jan. 31, in the church. Brother Lampkin was formerly physical director in Kentucky university, at Lexington, Ky.

—L. E. Sellers has rounded out five years of service as pastor of the Central Christian church, Terre Haute, Ind. During this time there have been 550 additions to the church, and this without any assistance from the outside. During these five years two churches have been organized in Terre Haute directly through his leadership. One of these new congregations has built its house and the other, the College street church, of which L. V. Barbre has just become pastor, will build in the spring. Besides having made this splendid showing for the five years, Brother Sellers spent four months of the current year in the Orient, thus preparing himself for larger service. The outlook for the work in Terre Haute is exceedingly bright. Allen Wilson has just held a successful meeting at the Central church and Brother Sellers begins another term as leader, with bright prospects. Miss Madge L. Kent, a graduate of the School of Pastoral Helpers, has been the assistant pastor during the past two years.

—We have received several responses from brethren to the request of the brother who asked for the verification and whereabouts of the quotation from Martin Luther, concerning the name. Among these, the one following gives the desired information, and in addition the quotation in fullest form: "The quotation which your querist seeks will be found in the life of Luther by Michelet, page 262. The following occurs: 'I pray you leave my name alone and not to call yourselves Lutherans but Christians. Who is Luther? My doctrine is not mine. I have not been crucified for any one. St. Paul, 1st Cor. 3, would not that any one should call themselves of Paul nor of Peter, but of Christ. How then does it befit me, a miserable bag of dust and ashes, to give my name to the children of Christ? Leave, my dear friends, to cling to these party names and distinctions. Away with them all and let us call ourselves only Christians after him from whom our doctrine comes.' I hope this will help the brother out. "I. L. WHITE."

Montpelier, Ohio.

—We very much regret to record the death of Judge White, a prominent citizen of Cleveland, Ohio. He was a member of the Christian church and a man of intellectual attainments, of fine spirit and of noble character. In his breast was the milk of human kindness. In settling family disputes, especially, did Judge White do a great work. With lawyers whose methods are not up to the standard of ethics of the profession, Judge White was not always popular. The following incident explains the reason why: A poor man had died and his will had come for probate. The family appeared in court accompanied by a lawyer. He was their "adviser," though there was no particular need of one. Judge White took the matter out of the lawyer's hands, and he and his assistants, who were paid by him, did the "advising." For this no charge was made. The lawyer protested. "You've knocked me out of a $50 fee," he said. "I am glad of it," the judge replied. "There is no particular doubt as to where your next meal is coming from, but these people I know, and they are poor." And he treated himself in the same manner, and refused to receive fees from people he thought were poor. Of course he was imposed upon. "Well, let them impose upon me if they want to," he would say to protesting friends, "so long as I don't know it I don't care."

—We have just learned with profoundest regret of the death of our venerable brother, and friend, Dr. S. R. Woods, an elder of the church at Bowling Green, Fla. Brother Woods was formerly from Missouri, where he spent the larger part of his life, and where he is widely known as a physician and as a man of God, of unusual intelligence and zeal. He has been a steadfast friend and a most appreciative reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for many years, and never failed to visit our office when passing through the city. He was the leader of the little band of Disciples at Bowling Green, where he lived, for many years and they will miss their beloved leader. In our next issue we will publish the notice which we have received from Bro. D. D. McLean, of that church. We tender to Sister Woods our sincere sympathy in her great bereavement. The earth is better for the lives of such men, and heaven is dearer because such as he have gone on to be with the Lord.

—"It is a great blessing to have these men of God to come and stir us up, and to lead us into larger things. Our members here feel that it was one of the greatest days we have ever had." So writes W. F. Turner of the visit of Brother McLean and Brother Corey at Joplin, where one of the finest missionary rallies ever held greeted the president of the Foreign Society. In another column will be found some reflections of Brother Corey suggesting some reasons for the success at Joplin. They are very patent. Enthusiasm and determined effort are the basis of all that has been accomplished at Joplin in recent years. There are pastors there who have a passion for souls, and have put all their thought and time into winning them. Too many of our preachers depend on the officials of the Foreign Society to create the interest. We have evidence that quite a number of ministers who had promised to take part in the rallies failed to do so and sent neither word of explanation nor substitutes. This is not right. When a preacher makes a platform engagement he is under obligations to meet that engagement, if possible, just as much as to meet any financial promise. We trust that there will be no failure in the rallies still to be held on the part of the speakers who have promised the society to lend it their support.

—Something of a sensation has been created in Osceola, Iowa, by B. F. Baker, pastor of the Presbyterian church, announcing himself as a convert at the revival meeting being held by R. A. Omer at the Christian church. Mr. Baker's wife comes with him. From a statement which he has issued, it would appear that he was raised in the Christian church, of which his only child is still a member. Going west, and finding no church of our order, he associated in the work of other churches, and through the help of a gentleman of means, was able to prepare for the ministry. Going back to Iowa, he became a member of the Des Moines presbytery, but says he has not been wholly satisfied, and for some time contemplated the change he has just made. He says:

> I found myself out of harmony with portions of the teachings, doctrines and practices of the Presbyterian church, and I could not, feeling thus, do the work in harmony with the usages of the church. I felt that I wanted to be unhampered by any rules save the Bible only. I finally took my present stand for conscience' sake, and what I understand to be for truth's sake. I have not been persuaded or proselyted to this step by any one. I took the step wholly of my own accord and free will. I expect to take a pulpit somewhere in the Christian church, just where or when I cannot say, as I have corresponded with no field yet. With charity and kindly feelings for the Presbyterian church in this place, I resigned the charge and withdrew from the presbytery before taking this step.

Brother Omer testifies that Brother Baker is a man of ability who will make a valuable acquisition to our preaching force. Up to date, there have been sixty additions in Brother Omer's meeting. H. E. Van Horn is rapidly making this one of the best churches in the state.

A Noble Bequest.

We understand that large bequests have been made in the will of Thos. E. Bondurant to the American Christian Missionary Society, the Illinois Christian Missionary Society, the Foreign Society and the Church Extension Board. These are to get each a quarter of certain property at the end of ten years, the value of which at that time may be between $300,000 and $400,000. Eureka college gets 200 acres of land outright.

An Urgent Word.

We hope the churches will remember that they are asked for only one offering during the whole year for foreign missions. We ask them to bear in mind also that our obligations this year are much larger than last. We have a greatly increased missionary force. There are more newborn babes in the Christian life to care for on the foreign field than at any other time. Our school operations are larger. Our present payments are about $18,000 per month. Our army of missionary workers numbers 438. They must be fed and clothed and housed. They must have proper facilities for effective service.

We beseech the churches to do their best; to break all previous records in their gifts; to go far beyond what is asked from them; to solicit an offering from every member; to raise their apportionment and to pray constantly for the enlargement of the work both at home and abroad.

We ask the churches and preachers to throw themselves unreservedly into the March offering. Mighty things can be done. Mighty things are expected of us.

We are living in stirring times. The world is all astir as never before. Nations are in commotion. Empires stand in nervous suspense. Above the tumult and the roar of battle the God of Nations reigns. His gospel is to solve all uncertain problems. There is but one question, and that is the gospel. There is but one duty of the church, and that is to preach the gospel.

The March offering will help to reflect the interest each church has in the solution of the world's problems; the loyalty of each church to the spirit and teaching of the New Testament, and the love each church has for lost men everywhere.

Quit you like men! A. McLEAN,
F. M. RAINS.

The Work in England.

PREACHERS WANTED.

The English committee are desirous of entering into correspondence with one or two good men, with a view to work in England. The pastor at Chester, R. H. Newton, has resigned and the vacancy must be filled at once. There is likely also to be another vacancy to be supplied in June or July. The Chester work is promising and important, and will require a man of first rate ability. Of course, no one who is seeking a holiday will apply.

Correspondents are asked to give references and to state what salary they would require, and to give any other information that will be of use to the committee in coming to a decision.

Address, Earle M. Todd, Cor. Sec'y, 94 Hampden Road, Hornsey, London, England.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Northern California.

Evangelism seems to be the thought of the church at this time of the year and it is perfectly proper that it should be so. The first thought in the mind of every Christian should be the church and evangelism and hence in the beginning of the new year we should bend every energy to the advancement of the cause of the Master.

T. H. Lamson is in a meeting with the Santa Cruz church. J. D. Hart, the pastor, is in a meeting at Bakersfield, assisted by Mrs. M. M. Shields, a sweet singer in Israel. D. W. Howe is in a meeting at Gilroy, with J. C. Williams. N. C. Shropshire has just closed a good meeting at Sanger where C. S. Needham ministers.

W. W. Pew, state missionary at Porterville, is getting things ready to start a tent meeting there soon. F. S. Ford, pastor First church of San Francisco, begins a meeting next week in the newly finished house of the 10th avenue mission, and at the conclusion of the meeting will organize the church.

Bro. L. E. Scott is now laboring efficiently there, supported by the American Christian Missionary Society and the West Side church through the state board. This will make the fourth church in San Francisco and all now housed.

Bro. John Trebor came from Michigan last week and we sent him up to Wheatland to try to unlock the doors there. They are open for three months anyhow.

If any preacher comes to California now expecting to find doors open and waiting with a good fat salary he will be disappointed, for our pulpits were never so well supplied as at present. However, there are a few places where a man of nerve is needed to take hold and unlock the doors and revive the work. Leaders are needed. Board would be sure for such men and opportunities for men who have ability and will start out on faith.

The carpenters are just completing a bungalow in the Christian colony for the writer and we move in Jan. 12.

Bro. B. W. Herndon, from Marshall, Mo., is on the ground and the carpenters begin a good house for him on lot 24 this week.

S. L. Larned, from Wellsville, Mo., is here and getting ready to build. Two more families are coming this month.

Twelve lots were sold in December and three the first nine days in January.

It is simply beautiful and we are glad to be out here. Correspondents will please take notice of the change in our address.

Acampo, Cal. J. P. Dargitz, Cor. Sec.

Indian Territory Letter.

The writer is just home after an absence of twenty-two days. This time was spent visiting points in the Creek, Cherokee and Peoria nations—in all fourteen, as follows: Pryor Creek, Wagoner, Ft. Gibson, Tahlequah, Westville, Stillwell Grove, Afton, Miami, Vinita, Tulsa, Broken Arrow, Coweta and Muscogee. These cities range in population from two to fifteen thousand. Most of them have existed but a short time, some of them less than two years. For substantial appearance, up-to-dateness, thrift, and push, it would be difficult to find the equal of these cities within the same radius in any of the states. We found members in all these cities, the representation ranging from about thirty to three hundred. We found organizations in eight and church buildings in seven of these fourteen cities. Notwithstanding the rain, sleet, snow, ice and severest weather in several years, we preached every night except five, and delivered seven day addresses. We took a collection for territorial missions at only a few minor points, as we thought the season and particularly the weather rendered it inopportune for taking these collections. Hence we received only $63.15 in cash and pledges. We also located one preacher, organized one C. W. B. M., and reorganized one church, talked up the northern district convention, to be held at Wagoner, Feb. 13-15, arranged definitely for six revivals, and probably others, besides doing much incidental work which will help the cause in these several cities.

Nebraska.

L. F. Harmon has preached at Louisville, for Brother Youtzy at Plattsmouth and at Broken Bow.—Humboldt church, Bert Wilson pastor, is trying to get the money together to build a parsonage.—Two confessions at Overton, where O. L. Adams is the preacher.—B. H. Coonradt and wife, of Edgar, will hold a meeting there in February. Overton wants the No. 10 convention. It ought to be said that No. 10 now includes the tier of counties along the Platte river that formerly were in No. 8, and also Buffalo county, which would put Kearney into that district. This change was made at the solicitation of the district convention. J. H. Darner is president of the district.

D. L. Norris, of Clarksville, Iowa, spent four days at Salem and they asked him to take the work half time. If another nearby point could take the other half this arrangement might be made.—R. F. Whiston and wife are at Kearney in a meeting.—The state secretary spent the 15th of January at Falls city.

It is due the Bennett church and its former supply preacher to say that while there have been no baptisms in the baptistry for nine years, as stated in a recent note in this letter, there have been baptisms in the creek which would alter the whole force of the note in question. A half truth sometimes is more injurious than pure falsehood. This secretary and his informant were evidently given one of these half truths, and it is hoped that everyone who saw and noted the former statement may see and note this correction. Bro. Geo. Jones reports several baptisms in the period of his preaching there. Services were held only in the morning every other Lord's day. The church is now trying to have regular preaching every Lord's day morning and evening.

The meeting at Bennett resulted in five baptisms, and two who were formely members of the Baptist and United Brethren churches, but had fallen away, were restored and added to the Lord. The promise of seven of our own people who had not been affiliated with the church, was received, that they would put in their membership and go to work. The church was much encouraged and if a suitable supply can be had for them the work will go forward. A number of indifferent members went to work again. We count this a victory for the cause of Christ not less in importance than the addition of numbers. Owing to conditions the meeting should have gone on a couple of weeks.

The following committee has been named to investigate and report on the feasibility and advisability of building a frame dining hall on the campgrounds, to be run by the state society until it has been paid for by the profits: W. A. Baldwin, H. J. Kirchstein, J. W. Hilton. Suggestions as to form and general plan will be received and considered by the committee. A report is to be made at the April meeting of the board.

Let the secretary remind the delinquent churches and Bible schools and C. E. societies that much precious time is slipping away, and the work of the N. C. M. S. is just now at the place where it needs the most money of any time during the year. Two meetings are now in progress and some others pressing for an answer. This is the time for activity and we must push for success. We have appropriations running to McCook and Alma, and as soon as the men are located will have appropriations to Gross, and Pleasantview, and Kearney, and North Platte. Some of the churches have taken the pledges for this work and have not remitted. This is a good time to attend to it. W. A. Baldwin, state secretary.

Arkansas Missions.

A new church is ready for dedication at Garfield. The lot was obtained in September, now the house is finished. A beautiful and convenient house of worship is in course of erection at Clarendon, the county seat of Monroe county.

Arrangements are making to build at Blytheville, one of the most thriving new towns in eastern Arkansas.

A splendid lot has been obtained and a house will be built at Lonoke, another county seat and thriving town.

The writer preached last Sunday at Clarendon. One confession. The last three months of last year there were delivered by our state missionaries and missionary pastors, as far as reported, but reports not full: sermons, 397; baptisms, 40; places visited as far as reported, 44; churches organized, 4; Sunday-schools, 4.

I am not acquainted with any of these where we have not a Sunday-school, except those connected with a union school, or that are without a house, and several that have no house have Sunday-school.

Our great need is funds.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discovery of a positive cure for Asthma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo river, West Africa. The cures wrought by it in the worst cases, are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been at once restored to health by the Kola Plant Compound. Among others, many ministers of the Gospel testify to its wonderful powers.

Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., perhaps one of the worst cases, was permanently cured after many years' suffering. Rev. D. S. Hopkins, Wilson, Ind. Ter., writes May 25th, his wife was cured two years ago after eight years' suffering. Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Texas, writes, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years' suffering and had no return of the disease. Mr. L. H. Johnson, of Gainesville, Ga., Manager of the Gainesville Shoe Co., writes, the Kola Compound is a death blow to Asthma. It cured my daughter after all hope had gone and words are inadequate to express our gratitude to the Importers.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the Christian-Evangelist who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Kansas.

Kansas is enjoying the unusual yet delightful experience of a deep snow which is evenly distributed over the entire state, and causeth the heart of the husbandman to rejoice, and his face to wear a broad and beaming smile. He is dreaming of a bumper wheat crop.

D. Y. Donaldson's meeting at Nickerson, despite the stormy weather, is accomplishing much good. Eleven additions at the last report.—Perry D. Holloway and A. R. Shaffer have begun a meeting at Niotaze. They will make a strong team and we expect a good meeting.—C. S Early, pastor at Ottawa, is in a fine meeting with home forces. There were 27 additions up to my report, and the interest was intense. W. M. Mundell sang for him a few weeks, when he was called to Kansas City to aid in the union meetings there.—Neal Overman's meeting with the Central Park church, Topeka, was attracting considerable interest at last account. Brother Overman always does faithful work, and has results.—W. H. Scrivner, pastor at Girard, is in a meeting with the Center church, Cherokee county. This is a country church, and wide awake to the Master's work.—N. A. Stull is storming the fort at Bonner Springs. Several added, and a fine interest.

J. G. Slick stays with the splendid church at Yates Center another year. They dedicate their new $12,000 house soon.

The time for the district conventions is drawing on. Most of the districts have fixed their dates and are working on the programs. The list of dates and places will be published soon.

These conventions can be made very interesting and helpful when the churches of the respective districts take an interest in them, and send large delegations.

A great many churches have not yet remitted the apportionment for state work. We are waiting as patiently as it is possible for us to do. Some have raised the apportionment and remitted a part, but are slow in collecting the balance. This should be attended to at once. We are slowly reducing the deficit, and it will all be wiped out in a reasonable time, if the brethren do their duty by the work. The missionaries are having splendid success, the work is going forward, let us all lend a hand. Pray for the workers and their work.

W. S. Lowe.

Southern Texas.

The interest in southern Texas is becoming so universal, and letters of inquiry so numerous, that a few words of explanation and description may be of service.

First of all, the church in San Antonio is in a prosperous condition. Our new building cost a little over $30,000, has a seating capacity of 1,500, and is in every way well suited to our work. Our membership has steadily increased. The enrollment is now 425. For many years this was a mission point, supported in part by our national and state boards. With the increase in membership and improved facilities for work, we hope for great things.

We are "on the firing line." Brownsville is about 300 miles south, El Paso 600 miles west, and in all this territory there are only two or three preachers of the Disciples devoting their time exclusively to the work. A few preach on Sundays and devote their time to secular employment during the week in order to live; they are heroes in missions, unknown to fame, but truer, more faithful servants never lived.

San Antonio is a beautiful city and has a population of about 60,000. For pulmonary diseases it is almost a specific, if the person so afflicted comes in time. The cost of living is not greater than other places. There are splendid irrigated farms and gardens that furnish fresh vegetables the year around. While mercantile interests may be a little crowded, and some lines especially so, the country around is being developed at a rapid rate, and offers business for all. Lands that a few years ago could have been bought for $2.00 per acre, have advanced to $10, $20, $50, and in some cases $300 per acre owing to improvements and facilities for irrigation.

Two new railroads are just completed to Brownsville on the Rio Grande river, opening up a country as rich as the valley of the Nile. This section is equal to southern California for growing oranges, lemons and the celebrated California grapes.

The country from here to the southern coast on the San Antonio & Arkansas Pass railway, and the Southern Pacific railway, is fast becoming a garden. There are undeveloped lands that can now be purchased at reasonable rates; but the tide of immigration is so great the lands are increasing in value very fast. There is no place known to me where small investments will produce such wonderful results.

To those who desire spending the winter in the most delightful climate in America, let me say, come to San Antonio, and you can personally investigate what seems to be, on paper, an exaggeration. I am quite familiar with this country and shall be glad to correspond with persons who desire a location in our beautiful city or country. All I ask in return is, place your membership in our church, and help us build the greatest work in the south. Don't come here and keep your church letter in your trunk; we have enough "trunk members" now.

San Antonio. Homer T. Wilson.

Washington.

In harmony with the cry for evangelist enterprise, the Inland Empire churches of Christ are hard at it. Here is a list known to the writer: Victor Dorris, of Kentucky, at Pendleton (N. H. Brooks, pastor); J. V. Coombs, at Athena (J. W. Jenkins, pastor); S. G. Griffith, state evangelist, at Waitsburg (W. T. Adams, pastor); Morton L. Rose at Pomeroy (Harry Benton, pastor); M. A. Thompson holds his own meeting at Zillah; District Evangelist McConnell and Geo. Webb and wife, singers, at Albion (Brother Harrell, pastor); General Evangelist Romig at Garfield (Geo. Stivers, bishop); State Evangelist A. C. Vail at Waterville; B. B. Burton, of Iowa, at Central church, Spokane (B. E. Utz, pastor); R. L. McHatton, California, at Clarkston (W. L. McCullough, pastor).

A successful meeting has just been closed by J. V. Coombs in his own church, Milton, Ore., with 75 additions. S. G. Griffith, at Dixie, had 40 additions. Victor Dorris at Walla Walla, not reported, but large. J. A. Pine, Dayton, 24 additions, home forces; J. W. McConnell, Farmington, 17 additions.

Pullman is putting its energies into a $12,000 building, the basement of which will be ready for use Feb. 1, when a protracted effort will be inaugurated. It will be the finest and largest church building in all the Inland Empire outside of Spokane. We plan for a great work in this important college city with its 700 students. We have had 16 additions during the past three months.

We close, inclosing our renewal, for the best paper on earth, and wishing you abundant prosperity and great usefulness in preaching the great gospel committed to us.

Pullman, Wash. Ralph C. Sargent.

WHAT THE MINISTER SAYS

Is Most Convincing.

"I thought I would write you what Pyramid Pile Cure has done for me. I had a most aggravated case of bleeding piles; indeed I dreaded when I had to go to stool. One fifty cent box cured me. I feel like a new man. I have recommended it to others as being the most wonderful remedy known. It is indeed a great blessing to suffering humanity. You are at liberty to use this for all it is worth, and I hope it may do good." Rev. W. E. Carr, 355 No. Holbrook St., Danville, Va.

Clergymen (like all professional men who lead sedentary lives) are especially addicted to piles, in various forms, and are continually on the lookout for a remedy which will give relief, with little or no idea of obtaining a cure.

Recognizing this fact, Rev. Mr. Carr consents to the use of his name, in order that other sufferers may know there is a cure called Pyramid Pile Cure, which is sold by druggists everywhere for the low price of fifty cents a package, and which will bring about for every one afflicted with piles, the same beneficial results as in his own case. Be careful to accept no substitutes, and remember that there is no remedy "just as good."

A little book describing the causes and cure of piles is published by Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., and will be sent free for the asking. All sufferers are advised to write for it, as it contains valuable information on the subject of piles.

The Christian Temple, Baltimore.

On the third Lord's day, January 15, the chapel of the Christian temple in this city was formally opened and it was a great day in the history of our work here. Bro. G. W. Muckley was the preacher, and raised to our delight and satisfaction nearly $5,000. There were three services, 11 a. m., sermon and call for subscriptions; 2:30 p. m., fellowship meeting with brief addresses by Bro. B. A. Abbott and Bro. O. G. White, of this city, and Bro. C. C. Jones, of Washington, formerly assistant pastor to this work; 8:00 p. m. sermon.

The history of this work dates back to 1888, when 33 persons withdrew from the Harlem avenue church and organized the third congregation of Disciples in this city. In 1891 they built the present Calhoun street church for their home. In 1901 they opened their first mission chapel, which has now become the Twenty-fifth street church. In 1902 they opened their second mission chapel which now is known as the Randall street church. In 1903 by the aid of the Church Extension Board they bought a handsome lot on north Fulton avenue for the erection of the Christian temple as their permanent church home. When completed this will be one of the largest church edifices in the city. At present the chapel only has been built, but this chapel, which is built of granite, has a seating capacity of 500 and with the lot stands us about $23,000. The building on Calhoun street will not be sold, but on the fourth Lord's day, January 22, it will be opened as the third mission church from this congregation. Certainly the Lord hath done great things for us.

One might think that this was a rich church, but that is not true. It is a poor church, but like the church in Philippi it has been liberal and faithful. Frequently friends outside of our membership have made this work possible, but the work has been done and we do not care whether the credit comes to us or to another. Our joy is that the work has been done. The Lord has been the moving power and we have been his servants.

In three years we expect to begin the erection of the main building of the temple. The Lord is with us. Peter Ainslie.

Atwood and Gardner are in a meeting at Udell. The meeting is 16 days old with 30 additions. They are in the general evangelistic work and will hold their next meeting at Cunningham, Kansas.

F. E. Day, pastor of the church at Knoxville, is being assisted in a meeting by Miss Pauline Wambaugh of the University church. When the meeting was 10 days old there were 19 additions.

Evangelist C. G. Stout and Pastor C. C. Davis are in a battle royal at Iowa Falls and hope to add many souls to the saved.

J. P. Childs and D. A. Anderson are doing some needed evangelistic work in the northwest district.

B. E. Youtz is in a meeting at Spencer. He just closed a good meeting at Kalona.

J. A. McKenzie, the new evangelist for southwest Iowa, has just closed his first meeting. The meeting was held at Atlantic. At last report there had been 8 confessions. His next meeting will be at Missouri valley.

Eighteen confessions the first five days in Pastor C. L. Organ's meeting at Lake City.

Revival meetings are in progress in all parts of Iowa and a number of excellent meetings are being held.

Report is current that the church at Sioux City has employed J. K. Ballou for pastor.

Plans for our jubilee convention are taking shape, committees are being appointed, the commercial exchange and the people of Des Moines are uniting with us in inviting a great host to the convention June 22-28, 1905. We are making strenuous efforts to accomplish a great year's work. Including the corresponding secretary we have six evangelists in the field holding meetings, which, together with our missionary pastors, makes a large force of men under employment in the Iowa missionary work. Every Iowa preacher and every Iowa church is urged to put forth strenuous efforts to win souls for Christ in this our jubilee year.

Des Moines.

Brother McLean was apparently very much pleased with the missionary rally at the University church January 18, hence it will be clearly understood that it was a success. With Brother McLean, of "all the world," Stephen J. Corey, of New York, W. E Rambo and wife, of India, Mrs. Dr. Macklin, of China, and as many Iowa preachers within a radius of 100 miles as could be accommodated with a few minutes each on the program, a considerable out of town attendance and enough of the local workers to fill the large auditorium, it could not fail to be very profitable and will surely raise the gauge of the missionary tide hereabouts perceptibly.

President Bell, of Drake university, expresses his satisfaction with the fine increase in the number of students and the excellent work that is being done in all departments and is gratified with the marked improvement in the response from the churches to the appeal of the Educational Board.

The Central church, moving serenely on amidst all the difficulties of a down town church, has been engaged in an effort to recoup financial losses occasioned by heavy removals of its best members, and recently added $1,000 to the annual income in a single week, from members who have hitherto paid little or nothing—perhaps a useful hint for many other churches. The Central church has repeatedly illustrated Prov. 11:24, "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth," etc. It has grown to magnificent proportions while giving largely of its best to starting and strengthening the other congregations in the city. It is now sending some of its most indispensable workers as far as the Pacific coast, with no diminution of work in any line. The Central church is organizing for an evangelistic campaign, to begin February 19 under the leadership of Victor W. Dorris.

Brother Medbury has reported Brother Sharpe's short meeting at the University church, but does not report the almost continued "protracted meeting" at regular services. A service at which there are no accessions is exceptional and the aggregate for a year alone would make a pretty good congregation. The annual report shows that in 1904 81 were added by confession and baptiam and 210 by letter and statement, a total of 291. The missionary offerings by the church, as such, were $1,926, and, counting all departments, the total was about $2,800, which shows a very gratifying increase.

The other churches are all doing well. Brother Dow had a few days' meeting at the East side church, with eight additions. Brother Stevens, of Oregon, is assisting in a meeting at Grant Park with too much temperature on the wrong side of zero thus far.

It does not seem to be an evangelistic winter in Des Moines, but otherwise conditions are quite satisfactory.

S. C. Slayton.

A Denial—and Some Facts.

To Our Christian Friends —

Greetings:—In one of our board meetings held in December, our conversation turned to correspondence and criticisms that several of our members, received relative to the matter that a Christian church had been built here, and that it had in connection with it a bowling alley, a dancing hall and some other amusements that churches do not foster.

Our church not only feels hurt but indignant that such a condition of affairs should, for a moment, be believed by our Christian people.

Our church, individually and collectively and in a special session, hereby states that no such condition exists. The report, we think, started as follows: Some one had an idea of what a modern church should be. That idea was put in writing and sent to the paper for publication. Neither the church nor membership at this place are in any way responsible for the said idea put in writing.

We beg to say a few words of what we are doing. Five years ago six people met in a private parlor for the purpose of looking toward the organization of a Christian church. The next meeting was held in the G. A. R. hall. A few weeks after that a room was rented, and the organization of the church completed. There were 12 charter members. At the end of the year we bought a church building and lot. In the course of time, several of our members moved away and it seemed that even "the holding on" took much courage and faith and hope, as well as work. We had a minister but a small portion of the time till October, 1903. We now have a membership of about 35 and about 30 in the Sunday-school. About 75 per cent of the church membership attend Sunday-school and 90 per cent are in regular attendance at church services. For two or three years of our existence, nearly every member was a member of the board, as it took all to complete a church board.

The citizens of Concordia came nobly to our assistance last September and finished paying for our church and lot in the way of a silver shower consisting of a shower of silver dollars, halves, quarters and dimes, which was a happy and complete surprise to all the members. We believe we command the respect and good will and best wishes of every citizen of Concordia.

Truly, Christian friends, could you but know the efforts this people has put forth to start a church at this place; the sacrifices that have been made; the discouragements overcome, we surely think you could have nothing for us but words of praise and commendation.

By order of the board.

Bertha Marlatt, clerk.
W. E. Allton,
chairman of Board.

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

January Additions.

I submit herewith a tabulation of the results of the evangelistic effort for the month of January. If our brethren in making their reports would be systematic, state from what source the accessions come, and not say "— additions since I came" a more accurate tabulation can be given.

Six new organizations are reported. Four dedications. Four denominational preachers.

Farlin, Iowa.

CALIFORNIA.

Bakersfield, Jan. 25.—Our meeting which began January 1, closed Sunday, January 22. While we had only six additions, three baptisms and three by statement, the meeting did a great amount of good in getting our scattered forces together. We organized a Christian Endeavor society with 24 members. I did the preaching and Sister M. M. Shields, our singing evangelist of Fowler, Cal., conducted the music. I can recommend her to any church or pastor needing a singer. When I came here three months ago the church was very much discouraged. Now we are in good working order to advance. We have had eleven additions all together since I took the work.—J. D. HART.

CANADA.

Toronto, Cecil St., Jan. 18.—Two were baptized into Christ last Sunday. During the past three months there have been 19 additions. In the 15 months of Bro. A. T. Campbell's ministry 58 have been added to the church. The past year was one of the most successful in the history of the church. The church debt was reduced $1,000, missionary offering almost doubled, the grant from the Ontario home mission board reduced $100, and the finances generally very much improved. The church is harmonious and in good condition.

COLORADO.

Denver.—Additions, Jan. 1 to 29: Highlands (J. E. Pickett), 10; East Side (T. T. Thompson), 5; Central (W. B. Craig), 33; South Broadway (B. B. Tyler), 50 or thereabout; Berkeley (Flournoy Payne), seven. Half of these, or more, from denominations and the world. Highlands, Central and South Broadway have just begun meetings. Prosperity general.—FLOURNOY PAYNE, secretary.

Golden.—J. W. Maddox pastor, five additions.—FLOURNOY PAYNE, secretary.

Pueblo, Jan. 26.—The influence of the systematic work of our minister, J. H. Mohorter, is being felt throughout the entire community and there is a bright future for the Central church. The conditions in Colorado during the past year were not favorable to church work, but our reports show a substantial gain in membership, and a decided improvement in our financial condition. The number of additions through the instrumentality of the church and its pastor in the year 1904 was 83. Of this number 44 were added by baptism. We are planning great things for the future, and shall begin revival services with home forces January 29.—DANIEL WARD, elder.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, Jan. 30.—At the Washington ministers' meeting to-day, the total additions reported were 65: 33 by confession and baptism, 32 by letter or statement. F. M. Green, whose good work was felt in this city 25 years ago, delivered a helpful and feeling address.—CLAUDE C. JONES, secretary.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Durant, Jan. 30.—Splendid services yesterday. Four accessions by statement.—JNO. A. OVERSTREET.

ILLINOIS.

Danville, Jan. 30.—Our meeting at the First church has been in progress four weeks. We have had 52 additions. Prof. A. R. Davis is our singing evangelist. We will continue one week longer. A final report will follow this.—J. H. SMART, pastor.

Milton, Jan. 31.—One young lady made the good confession.—C. C. WISHER.

Atlanta, Jan. 30.—J. W. Kilborn, of Keokuk, Ia., has been with us in a meeting two weeks; 21 added to date.—S. S. LAPPIN.

Taylorville, Jan. 31.—Three fine young people have confessed their faith in Christ. This makes six at our regular services this month. We are beginning to plan for what we hope will be a great meeting in October.—Z. MOORE.

Flora, Jan. 30.—Revival closed last night with 50 additions. Every department strengthened. People enthusiastic. Ransom D. Brown, of Fairfield, Ill., did the preaching. Miss Anna Davis had charge of the music. This is the largest meeting held here for many years.—ROLLIN C. OGBURN.

Chicago, Jan. 28.—We have just closed a three weeks' meeting with the church at Austin Station in this city, which resulted in 44 additions to that church. Brother George A. Campbell is the pastor. I have never known a congregation to be more devoted to a pastor than this church is to him. He is building up a strong church. I expect to begin a meeting in Davenport, Iowa, to-morrow.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Alton, Jan. 28.—I am here gathering together the "scattered Disciples." Have found about 40. Preached nine sermons, had 10 accessions.—E. T. MCFARLAND, pastor Fourth church, St. Louis, Mo.

Stanford, Jan. 30.—Fifty added in our revival to date, mostly confessions. We continue.—EVANGELIST J. BENNETT.

Illiopolis, Jan. 27.—I began here with the pastor, A. M. Hale, January 8. Have had a fine interest. Three confessions last night. Have had 20 additions to date, 16 confessions. I go from here to La Porte, Ind., to assist Geo. E. Hicks, and then to Greeley, Col., to assist Pastor F. D. Macy. I recently had a call to Albuquerque, New Mexico, for May. April not yet taken. Address, Topeka, Kan.—V. E. RIDENOUR, singer.

Bloomington, Jan. 27.—In a meeting three weeks old, under the leadership of Bro. J. H. Gilliland, 54 have been added to this already flourishing church. Brother Gilliland has been here over 17 years and has been the means in God's hands of establishing two fine places of worship. The best of all the different blessings to me is the ingathering of whole families, both from the outside and inside of the church. We go on another week, perhaps two, should circumstances warrant it.—H. H. SAUNDERS.

Fisher, Jan. 30.—Last night we closed our third meeting in Fisher. These were all held within a period of 26 months and with no outside help. This meeting was conducted 24 days. There were delivered 29 sermons with 22 accessions to the church as follows: one letter, one statement, two reclaimed and 18 confessions and baptisms. We have had 85 additions thus far in our pastorate of 26 months. We are united and prosperous.—S. ELWOOD FISHER.

Streator, Jan. 23.—Assisted by Elwood McKinney as singer and by home forces the writer closed a series of meetings here last night. Thirty three came forward during the meeting—18 confesssions (17 heads of families). We expect to begin a short series of meetings next Lord's day. McKinney will sing and I will preach.—CHAS. D. HOUGHAM.

Champaign, Jan. 24.—At the annual meeting of the University Place Christian church F. W. Burnham, of Decatur, was present and delivered the address to the congregation. It was in his happiest vein and its message will be marked in our future work. The clerk's report showed a net gain in membership for the year of 157. Total membership, Jan. 1, 1905, 442. The financial report showed a total of money gathered for the year, in addition to money paid on new church pledges, of $4,011.02. Money paid on pledges makes a total for the congregation for the year of $6,000. There has been a total of 12 added to the church in January thus far. Our meeting begins Feb. 15. Bro. Jno. Marshall, of Waco, Tex., is the evangelist and Brother Millard is to be leader of song. Our people have "a mind to work." We are in the midst of a large residence community made up of people from all churches and they are hearing our plea gladly and are responding to its call, and we look to the future with faith and great hope. Our work is in the midst of the student community of the University of Illinois. To be able to touch these three thousand young men and women for Christ more adequately in the future is our hope. Our missionary rally early in January was a great blessing. It is the hope of this church soon to enter the ranks of the living links both in foreign and home work.—STEPHEN E. FISHER, pastor.

Lake Fork, Jan. 29.—In great meeting with home forces; 27 to date.—J. D. WILLIAMS, minister.

INDIANA.

Terre Haute, Jan. 30.—Glorious meeting; 184 to date. Hackleman compelled to leave for Columbus, O.—ALLEN WILSON.

Salem, Jan. 30.—In a meeting one week old; 18 additions. Great interest. W. Y. Allen is the beloved pastor.—R. H. CROSSFIELD.

Lowell, Ind., Jan. 27.—Our three weeks and two days' meeting closed last Tuesday night, with three confessions at the last service.—A. M. HOOTMAN.

New Lancaster, Jan. 28—L. C. Howe closed the meeting with 217 additions. The pure gospel had long been preached and this work rests upon a good foundation.—E. B. S.

Summitville, Jan. 30.—Meeting two weeks old with 8 confessions, and two from denominations—one from M. P. and one from Baptists. W. V. Nelson, one of our consecrated young preachers, directs the music.—CHAS. E. UNDERWOOD.

Plainfield, Jan. 30.—We have just closed a fine meeting with 17 additions. I. N. Grisso, the pastor, did the preaching. All the departments of the church work are in fine condition. The problem for Sunday evening here is, how to make room, we have to turn people away.

Flora, Feb. 1.—We closed a three weeks' meeting last night conducted by home forces. Ten were added—nine by baptism and one by letter. Also baptized two Presbyterian high school girls who reside elsewhere. They will hold their membership with the Presbyterian church for a while yet. The chorus choir directed by Mrs. E. J. Todd consists of thirty well trained voices. The future of the church is bright.—A. B. HOUZE.

Evansville, Jan. 25.—Three weeks' meeting with the Central church closed Jan. 22. Results 17 additions. N. S. Harkins, pastor, did the preaching. The field was a difficult one and the weather unfavorable, but despite this we had a splendid meeting, greatly benefiting the church, which is a small one. I begin a meeting with Evangelist Frank E. Janes, Feb. 12, at Marshalltown, Ia.—WILL F. LINTT, singing evangelist.

IOWA.

Des Moines, Jan. 28.—Preached at Charitan, Sunday, Jan. 22. There were four additions. The church was much encouraged and delighted with the results.—R. TIBBS MAXEY.

Keota.—The church has just closed a protracted meeting of nearly four weeks' duration with the assistance of Bro. A. P. Cobb, of Decatur, Ill., evangelist, and Mrs. J. M. Van Kirk, of Kinross, Iowa, singer. The number of additions was 13; two are awaiting baptism. The audiences were large and attentive and grow in size and interest to the last, although the weather was extremely cold and a part of the time stormy.—CHARLES EDWARD WELLS, pastor.

Lenox, Jan. 22.—There was a good degree of prosperity shown by the annual reports of the church and its auxiliaries. The financial reports showed all bills paid and a balance in the treasury. The Church Extension Board has not received anything from us the past year but we will forward it. I begin on the third year here, with an increase in salary. The church at Corning is still without a pastor. The church at La Monte, Mo., is also without a pastor. Bro. J. D. Corbett, of Sharpsburg, will begin a meetfng with the church at Blue Grove near that place, Jan. 8. Everything points to a good meeting there—good people, good preacher, good spirit prevailing.—I. H. FULLER.

Atlantic, Jan. 30.—Our meeting closed with three additions—one confession and two from Baptists. Six since last report.—W. B. CREWDSON.

Farragut, Jan. 29.—We have just closed a very successful three weeks' meeting at this place, Elder C. C. Spencer, the minister, doing the preaching. There were 37 additions, all baptisms except two who came in by letter. The majority were young men. A public reception, attended by half the town, was given the new members. The same evening there was a surprise worked on the pastor's family, and their larder was filled to overflowing. Brother Spencer has begun his second year with the Farragut church.—JAMES A. YOWELL.

Council Bluffs, Jan 25.—The additions to the First Christian church during the year were 70: by confession and baptism 30; statement and letter 37; from the denominations three, besides five others at Glenwood under my preaching. We began the year with a total debt of $1,850. This and all current expenses were paid except $150, more than covered by pledges. Included herein was the old church mortgage of $1,545. The church disbursed over $3,600, an increase over 1904 of more than $1,600. Missionary contributions were $109 97. Our ladies' aid made the great record of raising $587.83, of which $339 went directly to the needs of the church body. The pastor's record shows 380 members resident. We are planning an extension of our church through city missions. Every department shows hopeful gains.—W. B. CLEMMER, pastor.

Ottumwa, Jan. 30.—Our work in Ottumwa grows. Upon the conclusion of our great meeting in November, Bro. Isaac Elder, pastor of the South Side Ottumwa church, began a meeting which succeeded from the beginning and resulted in quickening the church in that section of the city and adding between forty and fifty new members to the congregation. There have been additions to the First church every Sunday in January. Twenty have been added at regular services since our meeting closed. We begin on our new building as soon as spring opens.—WM. J. LOCKHART.

JAPAN.

Tokyo, Jan. 2.—Baptized three men on new year's day, a soldier, a school teacher, and an Imperial university man. Twenty-six baptisms in last three months.—W. D. CUNNINGHAM.

KANSAS.

Lyons, Jan. 27.—Meeting still continues with unabated interest; 64 additions to date. It is a joy to labor with such a man of God as Geo. E. Lyons. We continue indefinitely.—HAMILTON AND WILKINSON, evangelists.

Leavenworth, Jan. 29.—Four additions since last report—three by letter, one by confession. The work is moving forward nicely. We are getting ready for the March offering.—E. J. WRIGHT.

Neodesha, Jan. 29.—We closed a 22 days' work here to-day. There were 16 additions—one reclaimed, one Baptist, one church of God, one United Brethren, three confessions, five by commendation and four Methodists. Over $200 was raised for all purposes. G. F. Bradford, of Eureka, Kansas, takes the pastorate immediately.—SIMPSON ELY.

Coffeyville, Jan. 30.—We are in a meeting one week old to date, five added, three confessions. A. P. Cobb is preaching and Zoe Pearl Park conducting the song service. We continue indefinitely.—ELLIS PURLEE.

Chanute, Jan. 25.—Good day Sunday; three additions—two by letter, one confession. Interest increasing.—R. E. ROSENSTEIN.

Caldwell, Jan. 30.—One confession yesterday. We are expecting a good meeting with A. E. Wrentmore and Miss Ruby Clark, beginning Feb. 5.—LEE H. BARNUM.

Oxford, Jan. 30.—We closed a two weeks' meeting last night, seven miles from Oxford, at a school house; six added; three from M. E.'s, two by confession and baptism, one reinstated. These will all hold membership at Oxford; five of these were heads of families, three of them men.—B. F. STALLINGS.

South Haven.—Five additions to my church here and at my former field, Hunnewell, not yet reported—two by baptism, two by letter and one from the Methodists.—J. M. MORRIS.

MICHIGAN.

Paw Paw, Jan. 30.—Closed a three weeks' meeting at this place last night, with 10 additions—nine baptisms and the pastor of the Baptist church at Burr Oak, who was ordained to the ministry and sent out to preach the "faith once for all delivered to the saints." C. E. McVay, of Nebraska, assisted in the meeting as singing evangelist to the satisfaction of all.—C. M. KEENE.

Detroit.—The annual meeting of the Central Christian church called forth favorable reports from all departments. During 1904 there was a net increase of 60 to the membership, and a marked growth in audiences and Sunday-school attendance. For home support, missions and educational work, the church and all auxiliaries and individual members gave a total of $16,903.40. Of this, about $4,000 went for home support, and nearly $13,000 for work beyond the central plant. Our various missionary societies received $2,250. Of this, $1,000 is an individual payment on a named loan fund in church extension. Educational work received $1,500 from one family.

MINNESOTA.

Redwood, Jan. 30.—Meeting closed here with 65 additions; 17 came forward the last day. Brother Neel, of St. Paul, did the preaching well.—H. S. SAXTON AND WIFE, song evangelists.

MISSOURI.

Joplin, Jan. 27.—Brother Moore and myself are assisting Brother Baker in a meeting. Have a chorus of 50 voices, and a children's chorus of 40 voices. Never saw such enthusiasm at the beginning of a meeting, and things bid fair for a big ingathering.—LORENZO DOW SPRAGUE, gospel singer.

Carterville, Jan. 30.—This is the fourth week of our meeting, with 57 added: 37 by confession, six from the Baptists, and the others by statement or reclaimed. Meeting was to have closed last night, but interest is such that we will continue this week.—R. S. CAMPBELL, evangelist; B. I. BENTLEY, singer.

Huntsville, Jan. 27.—Our meeting closed Jan. 22. There were 23 additions, all adults but one, though the children were not neglected. The Bible school has doubled itself in attendance within the past two months. Following the improvements on the church, the official board has declared that a parsonage is a necessity, and one will likely be erected ere spring is gone. A "business men's association" will be organized in this congregation the first week in February.—J. R. Perkins.

Burlington Junction, Jan. 26.—The Christian church is in excellent condition. Every department has taken on new life, and begun the new year's work with a will to win. Forty members have been added to the Junior Endeavor within the last three meetings, and there is good prospect for that many more. Members are added to the Y. P. S. C. E. every Sunday. And to say the least, no societies in the land are in deeper earnest and doing a better work than those of this church. The Bible-school is growing very fast in both numbers and enthusiasm. Three confessions were made last Sunday, and five at the prayer-meeting Wednesday evening, one was also added to the church by letter. After prayer-meeting eight were buried with their Lord in baptism. We expect to have a "revival" soon.—Wm. M. Thomas, pastor.

Richmond, Jan. 30.—Thirteen conversions and two added otherwise, in a meeting which closed last Wednesday night. It was led by the minister, assisted by H. A. Easton, gospel singer. Large numbers attended upon the preaching; the church was edified, and it is believed that the Christian religion was advanced in the community.—J. H. Hardin.

OHIO.

Painesville, Jan. 27.—Annual report of the church of Christ, J. P. Myers, pastor: Money raised for all purposes, $4,080; missions and benevolences, $528; debt on the new church wiped out. Additions to the church during the year 86, with a meeting at Carbon Hill; at Painesville, 58. Bible-school with an average attendance of over 230. All departments in a good healthy condition.

Cleveland, Jan. 28.—Will close our meeting with the West Madison Ave. church, Wednesday night, Feb. 1. Interest is good, and 14 confessions to date. Will begin at Saunemin, Ill., Sunday, Feb. 5. The brethren there are hopeful of a great meeting.—C. H. DeVoe, evangelist; S. K. Shields, singer.

Wilmington, Jan. 27.—Our meeting continues with unabated interest. The spirit of song, praise, prayer and gratitude pervades every meeting. We have made now over 80 additions in three weeks, three-fourths by conversion. We continue.—James Small.

Harrison, Jan. 26.—Meeting of 23 days closed with 25 additions, all baptisms but four; three from denominations. James S. Helm, of Cincinnati, led the music. The writer preached the first eight days, and all the Lord's days during the meeting. We were assisted by Geo. A. Miller, of Covington, the last two weeks on week days. The Harrison church is moving on to larger things. This is the fourth good meeting that we have had during the four years of my ministry.—M. L. Buckley.

Cleveland, Jan. 27.—Twelve additions tonight at Miles avenue church, all adults; 99 up to date. Meeting two and a half weeks old; great interest; house crowded. We are holding our own meeting. H. E. Parker is leader of song.—T. Alfred Fleming, pastor.

Ripley, Jan. 19.—We are holding our meeting but the severe weather is against us.—J. W. Garner.

OREGON.

Albany, Jan. 24.—The Harlow and St. John meeting continues, with 43 added to date, and others interested. Both men are doing strong work, and are giving the church and the community a truer view of Christianity. The meeting has already been a great blessing to us. Clark Bower, minister.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The Joplin Spirit.

A phenomenon either in the natural or spiritual world always has an explanation back at the base of it. Things do not happen, they result from efficient causes. On Wednesday, Jan. 25, there was held in the First church of Joplin, Mo., one of the most remarkable meetings I have ever attended. The influence of this meeting upon the Joplin churches, the churches of southwestern Missouri, and incidentally, the brotherhood at large, simply cannot be measured. This meeting was a foreign missionary rally conducted by A. McLean. I have been with Brother McLean in a month of these rallies. They have all been inspiring, many of them thrilling, but this one was phenomenal. Several remarkable things have happened at Joplin and we have wondered why. Let me give you the explanation. It lies in the lives of two pastors who live close to God and carry the burden of a lost world on their hearts. As soon as W. F. Turner, the pastor of the First church, received the news that they were to have one of the rallies, he began to work for it. He assumed that it would be the most important meeting the church had ever held, and he was right. He declared that the evangelization of the world was the chief business of the church, and he was right. He worked as though the salvation of any church depended on its missionary spirit, and he was right in that. In other words, he worked and talked as though a foreign missionary rally were the greatest and most thrilling service a church could possibly hold, and behold the meeting more than filled his expectations. He spoke of the meeting months ahead. He advertised it widely in the papers. He wrote personal letters to all the pastors and churches in southwest Missouri. He took the burden of the meeting to God in prayer. He laid it upon the hearts of his people until they saw it as he saw it. As a consequence the house was filled with a great congregation on a day when the thermometer stood at zero.

It would be impossible to describe the spirit that filled the assembly from the beginning of the morning session to the close at four in the afternoon. Suffice it to say that the compassion of Christ for the lost souls of earth swept the hearts of speakers and hearers until eyes were filled with tears and voices choked with emotion. Every man made a great speech because God spoke through him.

This rally will be the most expensive religious meeting ever held in southwest Missouri. A large number of pastors and workers from adjoining towns were present and they went home with the deep determination to assault the stronghold of missionary indifference until it falls. Brother Turner's church will be dissatisfied with anything less than a living link. A rally like that in every center of our churches in America would make the battle cry of the Foreign Society $500,000 for world-wide evangelization next year. After all, is not a missionary rally the greatest meeting in importance that a church can hold? Ought it not to be undertaken, worked for and prayed for as though it were? To have the missionary spirit in a church is to have everything else that is needful. Brother McLean is a genius in a rally. With him the spirit of world-wide evangelism is the Master's passion. One cannot attend one of his rallies and be the same man again.

Brethren A. McLean and F. M. Rains are bearing a tremendous burden for our brotherhood that ought to be more evenly distributed. The burden of responsibility for a lost world ought to rest no more heavily on their hearts than on ours. This is the brotherhood's work. I fear that some of us think it is the board's work.

Stephen J. Corey.

People's Forum.

Editor Christian-Evangelist: — I have just finished reading the very sensible article on "The Needs of the Churches," by Hill M. Bell in the Christian-Evangelist of Jan. 12. I should like two or three inches of your space to quote two sentences and comment. President Bell, in speaking of the Bible college of Drake university says: "The college ought not to be compelled to charge tuition. It is a well known fact that nine out of ten young men who are preparing for the ministry could not stay in school if they had to pay regular tuition rates." The well known fact is a sure enough fact, and a deplorable fact. It is one of the facts that degrade the ministry in the estimation of men of the world. My opinion is that ministerial students should, even for strictly Bible work, pay full rates. It cheapens Bible instruction to make it free, or low relatively to the cost of other studies, in a college or university. A fair price should be charged for instruction in every subject, and ministerial students charged regular rates. I do not say there should be no exceptions. But I do maintain that in our Christian colleges indigent (is that the word?) young men aspiring to be preachers are no more worthy of being made exceptions of than other young men similarly circumstanced, whose aspirations lead not towards the ministry, but in the direction of some other honorable and useful calling, such as literature, science, law, medicine, or pedagogy.

Geo. Munro.

[We cannot agree that free tuition in our Bible colleges would degrade Bible studies. This would doom our whole free school system. Tuition is free in many of the state universities. No one objects to it as degrading academic and scientific knowledge. As a matter of fact, most of our candidates for the ministry find it a hardship tor pay fo both board and tuition and carry on their work properly. Some of them cannot do it. It is only right that the church should endow our colleges, and especially our Bible colleges, that they may in a measure compete with the state universities, since they are doing this work for the church.—Editor.]

More Organizing.

The Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:—Your issue of Jan. 5 has been quite a feast to me. I have read all through your articles and letters from some of our evangelists on their work and in answer to the questions you ask them to answer. I have become quite interested in many of their replies, which in the main are correct in so far as I have gained experience in my travels among our churches.

Almost all of the brethren who have answered your questions agree upon the need of the pastors of our churches organizing their members some time before the protracted meeting begins. Those suggestions are very good, so far as they go, but I think they might go much further. I think one great cause of the greater portion of delinquents, and in some measure our scattered Disciples, is the want of organization or the inability of many of our pastors to set others to work.

So many of our pastors are mere talkers; some very good and some the very opposite. A good talker or preacher is sometimes one of the worst of pastors, for after a time the people tire of his talking, and in many cases his preaching goes into one ear and out of the other. If our preachers, good or indifferent, would study the principles and power of organizing and setting others to work, much more permanent good would be done, to their own credit, to the good of their flocks and to the cause of Christ. Less sermonizing and more organizing is what is needed.

Report of Death Greatly Exaggerated.

Dear Brother Garrison:—Some two years ago a report obtained circulation that I was dead. Possibly some good brother thought that 56 years of indefatigable labor in the ministry was enough, and that it was about time for the Master to say, "Come up higher." But the dear Lord determined otherwise, and I am still in the land of the living, and still hard at work. How long I shall be able to continue only he knows.

For several years past I have supported myself by the practice of medicine and preached without remuneration. I am too old to fill any position in the ministry which would furnish a support. The demand of the age is for young men, and, with the exception of a few favored ones, we old preachers find ourselves placed upon the retired list without pay. Be it so, I do not complain. If it be the pleasure of the dear Lord that my last days shall be spent in a poor house, I trust I shall have grace to say, "Thy will be done." But one naturally shrinks from such a fate, and turns to seek a more cheerful prospect, even when he does not know where to look.

I have 15 acres of beautiful pine land in Hillsboro county, 12 miles east of Tampa, which I have no use for and which I would be glad to sell at half the cost of the land and throw in what there is in the way of improvements. Full particulars to anyone wanting to buy.

JESUS AT THE POOL OF BETHESDA.—John 5:1-16.

Memory Verses, 8, 9.

Golden Text:—And a great multitude followed him, because they saw his miracles.—John 6:2.

The difference between the scope of the synoptic gospels (Matthew, Mark and Luke) and that of John is clearly seen if one undertakes to construct from the gospel narratives a consecutive account of the incidents in the ministry of Jesus between the last lesson and the present one. The healing of the nobleman's son at Capernaum occurred near the beginning, and the healing of the infirm man at the pool of Bethesda near the end, of what is generally known as the First Period of the Galilean ministry, extending from the return from Judea (after the early Judean ministry) until the calling of the Twelve. This period certainly covered several months, probably almost a year. It includes such important events as the first rejection at Nazareth, the sojourn at Capernaum, the call of the Four, many miracles of healing such as that of Peter's wife's mother and the paralytic who was let down through the roof, a preaching tour of considerable extent through the towns and villages of Galilee, the call of Matthew, and the beginning of a series of controversies with the Pharisees over the observance of the ceremonial law.

All of this the gospel of John passes over without mention, although nearly every one of the above episodes is recorded by all three of the synoptists. In fact, John has very little to say about the ministry in Galilee, to which the other evangelists devote most of their space and which apparently consumed by far the greater part of the three years of the public life of Jesus. And when John does record an incident which must be placed within the general limits of the Galilean ministry it is never (except in the case of the feeding of the five thousand) one which the synoptists also record, and it is almost always an episode connected with one of those visits to Jerusalem with which the ministry in Galilee was punctuated.

These two general views of the ministry of Jesus strikingly supplement each other. The synoptists say little of a work in Judea, but show by incidental touches (for example, Mark 3:22) that he was well known in Judea, so that we would have to suppose a ministry in Judea even if John did not record one. On the other hand, John says little about a ministry in Galilee, but speaks repeatedly of Jesus going down from Galilee to Jerusalem to the feasts, thus clearly indicating that he was spending most of his time in Galilee.

The healing of the infirm man at the pool of Bethesda occurred during one of these brief visits to Jerusalem. There was "a feast of the Jews"—perhaps the Passover (though John would scarcely have alluded in that vague manner to the greatest of all the Jewish feasts), perhaps the Feast of Tabernacles (also rather too important to be so described), perhaps the Feast of Purim, a somewhat secular and lively festival a month before the Passover. Jesus would not have been so likely to care about attending this feast, perhaps, but even in the case of the greater feasts, doubtless his chief interest lay in the people and the opportunity for getting at crowds of them, rather than in the feast itself.

In this incident Jesus accepts a great opportunity to help a needy man and misses (as it would have seemed to most teachers) a great opportunity to correct a superstitious belief. The belief that an angel came down and troubled the waters of the pool and that the next person to step in was healed, was one of the many superstitions of the Jews. Jesus did not take issue with it. His disciples may have believed it, and John himself in his narrative casts no shadow of doubt upon the curative properties of the troubled waters. The Revised Version, by entirely eliminating verse 4 from the text, puts the evangelist no longer in the position of vouching for the correctness of the superstition, and shows him treating it as Jesus treated it, as a matter not worth either affirming or denying. The cure of the man was the main thing, and to that Jesus directed his attention.

THE GRACE OF GIVING.

Moreover, brethren, I make known to you the grace of God which hath been given to the church of Macedonia; how that in much proof of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality (2 Cor. 8:1, 2). [Read this entire chapter.]

Giving as a Grace. It is important to understand, what this passage teaches, that Christian giving is a grace of God. He who has not attained to liberality in giving to the Lord's cause is lacking in one important Christian grace. The same is true of any church. (See 2 Cor. 8:7.)

Elements of Liberality. Two things, the Apostle says, "Abounded unto the riches of their liberality"—that is, of the Macedonian churches. One of these was "the abundance of their joy," and the other was "their deep poverty." How did "the abundance of their joy" affect their gifts? God counts the spirit in which our offerings are made. He "loves a cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 9:7). How can "deep poverty" abound "unto the riches of liberality"? Because liberality in giving is the relation between the amount given and the ability of the giver. Hence the poor widow whom Jesus saw cast her mite into the treasury gave more than all the wealthy [donors. So far, then, from poverty being an excuse for not giving, as it is often urged, it is an opportunity for the most liberal giving.

As in Nature, so in Grace. The law that governs the harvest, is, "He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully" (2 Cor. 9:6). This is as true in religion as in business; in Christian giving as in wise financial investments. The spirit of liberal giving is the capacity for receiving in liberal measure, the gifts of God.

Proportionate Giving. Christian giving should be proportionate giving, as well as voluntary: "As he may prosper" (1 Cor. 16:2); "As he hath purposed in his heart" (2 Cor. 9:7). This implies some system of book-keeping with God—an equitable division of the fruits of our labors with him. The rule of tithing, or giving one-tenth of our income to the Lord's work, is commending itself more and more to Christian people, as the minimum amount of their giving. It is proportionate, voluntary, scriptural, systematic and will generally be found adequate to meet the ordinary demands of the Lord's work. It yields more real satisfaction to the giver to thus recognize his partnership with God in his business, than any other method of giving.

The Motive of Our Giving. This is found in the example of Jesus, who "though he was rich, yet for your sakes became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich" (2 Cor. 8:9). The possession of Christ's spirit is the solution of all our financial problems.

Prayer. Our Father, who art in heaven, since Thou didst so love us as to give us Thine only begotten Son, grant us, we beseech, such a sense of gratitude to Thee as will make us liberal givers to Thy work, and earnest workers with Thee in the world's salvation. In Christ's name. Amen!

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, Etc.

Our readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved a certain cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific, just as quinine is in malaria.

Among the many testimonials received is one from the Rev. W. B. Moore, D. D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Rheumatism and Kidney and Bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood.

So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free sample of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the Christian-Evangelist who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes, Pain in Back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis entirely free. Address Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 404 Fourth Avenue, New York.

GLORIFYING GOD IN OUR HOMES.—Eph. 6:1-9.

For the Leader.

The topic we have to-night is near us all. It comes at a time when it is needed throughout the world. The manner of conducting the home has changed very materially the past fifty years. Everything has changed. Things are not as they used to be. We hear of the new science, the new education, the new woman, the new theology, the new view point. This coming in of the new has swept away old time customs. The old home is a thing of the past in most communities. The new home, the new husband, the new wife, the new children, come with other things new in all the walks of life. The relation of children to parents is not as it once was. The children once obeyed the parents; now the parents obey the children. There is the home-keeping habit of old times that has almost gone. People run the streets at night. The old fireside circle is not often seen any more in all the land. Let us look into this new condition to-night and see if we can not better the conditions somewhat.

For the Members.

1. The first injunction of the lesson is, "Children, obey your parents." Theoretically, this may be the law yet, but, practically, it has been reversed, or, at least, has become a dead letter. There is a feeling of discontent where the parents go by the rule of having the children obey. There are too many children who are unruly, "hard-headed," growly, disrespectful. They have more smiles and more kind words for others than for father and mother.

2. Now, if we are to glorify God in our homes we as Christian young people must give the place of authority to the parents. We must pay them proper respect. And it would seem, too, that this should not be done as a matter of compulsion with us. We should do it cheerfully, gladly. It is not of any value to us as glorifying God if we do not give it cheerfully. Why not do this from the depth of a grateful heart? How much have they done for us? We can never tell. As an old grandmother used to say to her grandson, "Allen, if you were to live a hundred years you would never be able to pay for your raising."

3. Can one of us ever know how much it must grieve our parents when we go wrong? They think of us all the time. The greater part of their lives is taken up with preparations to get us started in the world. They get ready for years "to leave something to the children." Yes, that tender expression, "the children." What a world of tenderness there is in it! The anxious nights of the mother, the days of toil of the father, the money, the sacrifices of a lifetime, are all for us. Then when this is done, and the time is at hand for the son or the daughter to take the place of man or woman in the world, and the old hearts are all anxious, the news comes of the moral lapse of the daughter, the downfall of the son. Can it ever be so of one of us? God forbid.

4. If the lesson is explicit in defining the place of the children, it is none the less so in marking off the scope of the parent's duty and relationship. All that has been said in condemnation of the failure of children to live up to their duties may be said with emphasis of the father or mother who drags down the high privilege of proper life and example before his child into a life of sin and neglect of the home. God can be glorified only in a Christian home. Let the father walk in the fear of the Lord before his children. Let the mother order her steps and her house after the faithful Hebrew mother. Let the club and the lodge and the gay world fall into disuse, and let the church and the interests of the Kingdom be the theme of conversation. In such a home the thought of obedience will not be up for discussion, but the delight of both children and parents will be to do for each other in love.

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all he beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs, and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for hat reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

THE PERENNIAL REVIVAL. A PLEA FOR EVANGELISM, by Wm. B. Riley, pastor of First Baptist church, Minneapolis. (The Winona Publishing Company, Chicago, 1904.)

This volume is one of the products of the evangelistic wave which is now sweeping over the country. The author belongs to the old rather than to the newer class of evangelists. He does not suggest much that is new but he does lay some needed emphasis on some things that are familiar enough but which we are prone to forget. After dealing with the need of the Perennial Revival, he takes up the primitive church, and makes the second chapter of Acts the starting point for his ideas of a revival. One is a little surprised to hear a Baptist say: "Going back to the 41st verse, we discover the very beginning of that body which has been called 'The Church.'" He does not, however, quite stick to the model given us in that famous chapter in all respects. In emphasizing, however, the Apostolic Spirit, the Place of Prayer, and the Enduement of Power, he touches some of the vital points of the Perennial Revival. "The six pivotal points" in a revival that is to be perpetual, according to the author, are:

(1) "Get God's conception of the soul's worth."

(2) "Let us consecrate ourselves to soul winning."

(3) "Surrender to the Spirit's Counsel."

(4) "Employ the sword of the Spirit."

(5) "In this, the divinest work, be direct."

(6) "With whatsoever success, be dissatisfied."

Liberal giving is urged as a condition of perpetual revival, and pew rentals are denounced as a most serious obstacle. Bible study is also emphasized. There is much of the book to approve and very little to disapprove. Some things are omitted, which only shows that we have not yet gotten the human and divine sides of our evangelism properly balanced.

MUSIC AND OTHER POEMS, by Henry Van Dyke. (Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York, 1904. Price $1.00, postage extra.)

We recently had occasion, in reviewing a great poem, to say that the charge sometimes made that we have passed the era of great poetry was disproved. This little volume from the pen of Dr. Van Dyke is but a further refutation of such charge. The first poem in the volume, and the one from which the book takes its name, is of considerable length, while most of the others are very short, but neither length nor brevity enters into the thought of the reader who gets once into the spirit of these poems. Dr. Van Dyke, like all true poets, is an ardent lover of Nature, and some of his finest passages deal with certain of its aspects. One of the finest, perhaps the very best of these, is entitled "God of the Open Air." Take these lines as a specimen:

> "These are the things I prize
> And hold of dearest worth:
> Light of the sapphire skies,
> Peace of the silent hills,
> Shelter of forests, comfort of the grass,
> Music of birds, murmur of little rills,
> Shadow of clouds that swiftly pass,
> And, after showers,
> The smell of flowers
> And of the good brown earth—
> And best of all, along the way, friendship and mirth."

In his sonnets Dr. Van Dyke is at his best. The poems entitled "Patria"; "Life"; "Love"; "The Child in the Garden"; "Love's Reason," and the others, are all exquisite. The four divisions of the book are Odes, Sonnets, Legends, and Lyrics, closing with Greetings and Inscriptions. The lover of true poetry will be delighted with this latest volume of Dr. Van Dyke and will be inclined to place him along with the greatest poets our country has produced.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE CHURCH CONCURS—THE FIRST SUNDAY.

The congregational meeting, on Thursday evening, held in the large lecture hall, was well attended—every member of the church, who could possibly go, was there. It was purely a "church meeting." Curious strangers were summarily turned away; and, owing to Mr. Randolph's sagacity, no reporters were admitted.

By the time Mr. Cunningham had finished reading the recommendations of the board, motions to adopt them came from every part of the house. While pleased to note it, Mr. Randolph was somewhat embarrassed by this unexpected response of the audience. However, he soon recovered his wonted composure and put the question—stating that, if a discussion ensued, it must be orderly.

In the meantime "Grandfather" Peterson had slowly proceeded down the aisle, and facing the audience, he was the first to be recognized. He made his usual appeal in behalf of the "sacred past" of both the church and the denomination; then turned toward a small committee room, back of the platform, stating, in a choking voice, that he would pray while his brethren discussed and voted upon the unfortunate question, which involved the peril of the church.

"'Grandfather' Peterson's plea," said Mr. Steele, also facing the audience, "touches the keynote, and I am confident it has started the same vibration in your hearts that it has in mine." Here the speaker drew forth his handkerchief and applied it for some moments to his eyes. Recovering from the paroxysm, he, too, implored the past to overshadow the present and save Christianity from the speedy annihilation with which the occasion threatened it!

Then followed a prolonged discussion, in which twenty or more participated—some in favor of and others opposed to the motion.

At a late hour, to the relief of all, the vote was taken. Of the nine hundred and sixty-three ballots cast, eighty-nine were opposed to the motion. After announcing the result, the chair suggested that the call be made unanimous. But to this Mr. Steele objected, stating, at the same time, that he and his family could no longer worship with the Poplar Square church. Upon the adjournment of the meeting Mr. Steele and quite a number of others—both men and women—held a subdued conversation in the infant class room.

"Grandfather" Peterson, being a little deaf, remained in a small room on his knees until Mr. Randolph opened the door and touched his shoulder. When told how the vote had resulted, a pallor came into his face and, staggering, he would have fallen, had not Mr. Randolph caught him and laid him on a near-by sofa. It so happened that Dr. Lessing, who had remained to speak with the sexton, heard the commotion and hurried to Mr. Randolph's assistance. Restoratives were applied and when the patient regained consciousness, Dr. Lessing, Mr. Randolph and the sexton carried him home. He was confined to his bed for two or three days, but was able to attend church the following Sunday.

The next few days were full of events.

Widespread notoriety was given to the strange action of the wealthy church. Like the events of three years before, it became the current religious sensation. It was paraded by both the secular and religious press, and "Baxendalism" was revived with renewed interest.

The Providence ministers of the —— church promptly recommended that the denomination withdraw from the erring church, and it was not long until Mr. Randolph received official notice that the Poplar Square church had been disfellowshipped!

The day after the congregational meeting, the assistant pastor resigned—stating that, as he could have no part in such heresy as had recently obtained, his services would be discontinued at once.

The last Sunday in June was the greatest day in the history of the great church. Long before the service began the spacious auditorium was filled—all streets, on that memorable day, led to Poplar Square!

Mr. Randolph took his customary stand in the vestibule, but the jam proved too much for his hand-shaking ability, and he retreated to a committee-room, where he sat in amazement until the organ announced the hour of worship.

Having instructed the choir to sing until he appeared in the pulpit, Mr. Baxendale stood upon the steps and delivered an address to the disappointed crowd in front of the church. He apologized for the lack of accommodations within, briefly stated the new doctrinal position of the church, and announced that the organization would be open to all who were willing to accept Christ as their creed and to be governed by the New Testament only. He then passed around to a side door, opening into the study, and went through to the pulpit, in which he deported himself as though his pastorate had never been interrupted. At the close of the sermon on "The Faith Once Delivered unto the Saints," the preacher announced that a congregational meeting would be held on Thursday evening to reorganize the church, and dismissed the service with a short prayer.

As the audience dispersed, leaflets—setting forth the position henceforth to be held by the church, and requesting those who wished to retain their membership or become members to fill out the attached card and either bring or send it on Thursday evening—were distributed.

The substance of the many remarks passed upon the occasion was: "It seemed like old times, except that Mr. Baxendale was so thin and pale and looked so much older than when he last occupied the pulpit."

Major Burns, comfortably seated in one corner of Mr. Randolph's pew, rested his arm on the prong of his crutch, listened intently to the sermon, and looked triumphantly happy.

Ralph Cunningham, also, was conspicuous in the audience—it was the first time he had been in the church since Mrs. Randolph's funeral.

"Grandfather" Peterson sat in his time-honored pew, with his face in his hands, groaning under his breath.

Mr. Steele, however, and others of the opposition were absent.

When Mr. Baxendale descended from the pulpit, Ralph Cunningham touched his arm and requested a private audience with him. The two went immediately into the study, where they remained nearly an hour—Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham waiting in their pew. Ralph could be heard sobbing and the preacher talking in a consoling, subdued tone. When they came out, Mr. Baxendale was unusually pale and his hand trembled as he mopped his perspiring brow, but Ralph's countenance shone with a contentment that was almost divine.

After greeting Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, Mr. Baxendale went to a near-by cafe, but nothing on the bill of fare tempted his appetite. Who would have desired food, when yet under the immediate influence of such an eventful morning? After sipping a cup of coffee, he sought the quietude of his apartments and spent the afternoon in prayer and meditation.

Bob Burdette on the Saloon.

Now, what another man says somebody told him he heard I said, I stand ready to dispute on general principles. That is not evidence in any court in the world. But let me say it myself, and I'll stand by it to the last comma and hyphen. Now hear me say it myself.

About the power of prohibitory laws to prohibit—the laws of the state against murder do not entirely prevent murder. But nevertheless, I am opposed to licensing one murderer to every so many thousand persons, even on petition of a majority of the property-owners in the block, that we may have all the murder that is desirable in the community under wise regulations, with a little income for the municipality. I believe in the absolute prohibition of murder.

The laws of the country prohibiting stealing, do not entirely prevent stealing. Nevertheless, I am opposed to a high license system of stealing, provided that all theft shall be restricted to certain authorized thieves, who shall steal only between the hours of 6 A. M., and 11:30 P. M., except Sunday, when no stealing shall be done except by stealth, entrance to be made in all cases on that day by the back door and at the thief's risk. I believe in laws that absolutely forbid theft at any hour on any day of the week.

And, on the same ground, and just as positively, do I believe in the prohibition of the liquor traffic. And I never said that I didn't. And I say that I did. And I do.

I do say that the best way to make a man a temperate man is to teach him not to drink. But a saloon is not a kindergarten of sobriety. Your town is under no obligation to any saloon. All that it is, in respectability and permanent prosperity, it has grown to be without the assistance of the liquor traffic. You don't owe a dollar to a merchant or a resident; you don't owe one item of the attractiveness and popularity of your town to the refining and educating influence of the corner ginmill, with a group of sidewalk loafers.

It is deliberately claimed by some people, who appear to be sane on other subjects, that properly to instruct a sober people in the ways of sobriety and to teach abstainers the beauty and virtues of temperance, you must license the selling of liquors in the town. The man who originated that idea ought to have had it stuffed and exhibited at the St. Louis Exposition, and he should have been leaned up beside it as a part of the exhibit.

There was once a man who owned a parrot. It swore like a pirate. A neighbor owned a parrot that would not swear at all, but habitually used only the most decorous language. "Let me have your parrot for a month," said the owner of the good bird; "I will keep him in the same room, and mine will teach yours not to swear." The birds were caged side by side. And everybody who knows enough to know anything, knows which parrot had its vocabulary enriched with new and startling words.

Keep your town clean from evil. If men will violate a law in order to gratify evil habit and taste, don't try to cure the sin of law-breaking by enacting a law which it would be easy and wicked to obey.

As to prohibition in Pasadena, if any liquor man thinks there is big money and a safe thing in running a "blind pig" in Pasadena, let him come here and try it. If he has any love for his liberty and pocket-book, however, he will do well to consult the fellows who have tried it, if he can find them; we can't. They are in hiding somewhere out in the desert. "Running a joint" in Pasadena is like running a powder mill in a smelting furnace. It's mighty exciting while it lasts, but it doesn't last long enough to be profitable.

If the saloon men insist on quoting me on this topic, let them commit this to memory, that they may repeat it as they need it: I do not know one good thing about the saloon. It is an evil that has not one redeeming thing in all its history to commend it to good men. It breaks the laws of God and man. It desecrates the Sabbath; it profanes the name of religion; it defies public order; it tramples under foot the tenderest feelings of humanity; it is a moral pestilence that blights the very atmosphere of town and country; it is a stain upon honesty; a blur upon purity; a clog upon progress; a check upon the nobler impulses; it is an incentive to falsehood, deceit and crime. From such a hateful fountain head can there flow a clear stream? Can you name one good thing the saloon has ever done for humanity—one good thing—one instance in which it has brought forth fruits unto righteousness—one influence, sweet and healthful, and pure, gracious and beautiful, which will linger lovingly in the memory of men, when you have buried the rum power, to make them say, "God bless the saloon for the good it did"? Search through the history of this hateful thing and read one page over which some mother can bow her grateful head and thank God for all the saloon did for her boy. There is no such record. All its history is written in tears and blood, with smears of shame and stains of crime, and dark blots of disgrace. Men, are you going to stand for this thing? Are you going to put into office, in city or county, men who will be the tools of the saloon power? As you love the fair name of your city, get together and make your lives and your united strength tell for all that is best and cleanest in good government.

The Attempt to Bribe Nast.

Mr. Albert Bigelow Paine's biography of "Thomas Nast," the great cartoonist, recently published by the Macmillan Company, contains some striking stories, among which the following is perhaps the most remarkable. It happened during the days when Nast's cartoons were rousing public sentiment against the Tweed ring:

A lawyer friend one day intimated to Nast that, in appreciation of his great work, a party of rich men wished to send him abroad and give him a chance to study art under the world's masters. The friend was probably innocent enough—an unconscious tool of the ring.

Nast said very little except that he appreciated the offer and would be delighted to go, but for the fact that he had important business, just then, in New York. He fancied that he detected the far, faint odor of a mouse under the idea, but he did not mention this to his friend. On the following Sunday an officer of the Broadway Bank, where the ring kept its accounts, came out to Morristown to see Nast. He talked of a number of things. Then he said: "I hear you have been made an offer to go abroad for art study."

"Yes," nodded Nast, "but I can't go. I haven't the time."

"But they will pay you for your time. I have every reason to believe you could get $100,000 for the trip."

Nast pondered a moment, then: "Do you think I could get $200,000?"

"I do. I believe from what I have heard in the bank that you could get it. You have a great talent; but you need study and you need rest. Besides, this ring business will get you into trouble. They own all the judges and jurors, and can get you locked up for libel. My advice is to take the money and get away."

Nast looked out into the street, and perhaps wondered what $200,000 would do for him. It would pay the mortgage on the house in the city. It would give him years of study abroad. It would make him comfortable for life. Presently he said: "Don't you think I could get $500,000 to make that trip?"

The bank official scarcely hesitated. "You can. You can get $500,000 in gold to drop this ring business and get out of the country."

Nast laughed a little. He had played the game far enough.

"Well, I don't think I'll do it," he said. "I made up my mind not long ago to put some of those fellows behind the bars, and I'm going to put them there!"

The banker rose, rather quietly.

"Only be careful, Mr. Nast, that you do not first put yourself in a coffin!" he smiled.

It was not until two years later that he met Nast, one day, on Broadway.

"Nast!" he said, "you did it, after all!"

A CHEAP HEART CURE.

A Norwich Lady Tells You What to Use at Home, If You Would Cure Yourself at Once.

Alice A. Wetmore, Block 67, Norwich, Conn., says if any sufferer from Heart Disease in any form will write her, she will without charge direct them to the perfect cure she used.

We advise every one interested to get this free information now, for Miss Wetmore is very positive it will lead to their complete cure.

To the Point.

For many years a traveling pedler named Luce has been a well-known character in the country towns of New England. His route lies mostly within Maine and New Hampshire, where he sells needles, pins, soap, extracts, etc., and is always a welcome guest at the isolated farmhouses where he calls. Unlike most itinerant pedlers he is a man of few words.

Last winter while driving down one of the long hills of North Conway his horse, becoming frightened, ran, finally bringing up at the foot of the hill with an overturned cart, beneath which lay the unfortunate owner, unable to extricate himself from the wreck. A mountaineer approaching asked, with typical brevity, "Tight?" "No," returned the Yankee, "Luce."—Harper's Weekly.

His Girl Told Him.

The other day Professor F. B. Munford of the Missouri agricultural college distributed slips among his short course students and asked them to write briefly their reasons for coming to the college. Editors, teachers, and parents received the credit from most of them, but one fellow, wishing to bestow honor where honor is due, wrote this reply: "I got it from going with a country girl. She told me I ought."

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The Advance Society.

Here comes a letter from the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST telling me the office is to be moved, and they want this article in a hurry. How shall I ever find time to do it with company in the house and more coming and myself to be shaved? (Don't tell me there is no advantage in being a lady!) The "Friend of Orphans and Missionaries," of Lawson, Mo., was not correctly credited in our statement. Our Friend really sent 50 cents to Charlie and 50 cents for Drusie, but I made it less in the paper. I don't know why. Perhaps I was thinking of Felix and didn't pay attention to what I was doing. Some one asks if Bible quotations will do. Of course they will. I will announce the winners of our report-prizes in four weeks. That will be—I don't know; I haven't time to look at the calendar. The company said they were coming at three o'clock and it is a long time after dinner now. I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll throw in a letter from our missionary and that will save the ship. We have at last heard from Drusie Malott, and you all want to hear from her, especially you who have sent something to maintain her in China as a missionary. You will remember there is no board behind her; no powerful friends; no sure income except from us who know of her and desire to help, becoming missionaries ourselves to the degree that we help those laboring far from their homes. This is what Drusie Malott writes from South Chihli mission, Taiming Fu, North China:

"So glad to get the inspiring letter telling of the interest of the Advance Society in me. Hasten to get this off. Will write again in a few days. I cannot let this first chance slip of sending greetings from China. Perhaps it will not be too late for a New Year greeting. If so, a Happy New Year to you all.

"The Lord has been doing marvelous things for me. I have much to thank him for. It is wonderful how he has answered prayer, and cared for us, and opened the way before us. And here I am in far away China, to spend my life telling the glad story of love to people who have never heard of Jesus before.

"Our band of thirty-one missionaries, under the leadership of Mr. Horace W. Houlding, of the South Chihli mission, sailed from San Francisco, Cal., on the steamer Mongolia, Oct. 13, after a blessed week of farewell meetings in and around San Francisco. We stepped out in absolute dependence upon our Almighty God, with no church or board behind us.

"God gave us a glorious voyage. We were prepared for the storms that never came. Never were the waters so calm and peaceful. There was not one cloudy day from the time we left San Francisco till we landed at Tientsin.

"The Lord has been a wall of fire about us, and the glory in our midst. Glory! That was our key-word all the way over. We 'kept the music ringing all the way.' One of our favorite songs was, 'Why, all the way long it is Jesus.' In a blessed meeting at Paoting Fu, Nov. 21, shortly after arriving, Brother Houlding asked us what word he should cable to his mother to tell of our safe arrival. The entire company answered as one voice 'Glory!'

"True, we went what we chose to call 'ocean tourist passage,' but we had a delightful time. The ship's officers were very kind to us, and did their best to make things comfortable. We had a large deck all to ourselves, where we held a meeting every morning and every afternoon during the entire voyage. There were quite a number of other missionaries on board, and some of whom attended our meetings. We also had three classes every day, to study the radicals of the Chinese language. We were quite comfortable on deck in our steamer chairs, with our blankets around us. My favorite seat, however, was the bow of the steamer, where I could 'ride the waves' seesaw fashion, as the swell of the mighty ocean took us up and down. I was not seasick during the entire voyage. Have not been ill a minute since leaving America.

"We reached Honolulu, Oct. 19. Here we climbed a mountain and gathered a few flowers as mementoes. Then we visited the Royal Palace, where we saw the portraits of many former rulers and great personages, including Queen Lil. The scenery at Honolulu was beautiful, indeed. We saw many flowers and trees, among which was the rubber tree and the bread-fruit tree.

"The people of Honolulu are many kinds—natives, Japanese, Scandinavians, some Chinese, and Americans. Honolulu did not seem very different from the United States, however. We saw many American names above the doors of the business houses. We felt quite at home when we saw one of Uncle Sam's war vessels in anchor, and heard the familiar strains of the 'Stars and Stripes' and other tunes dear to the hearts of all Americans.

"In my next letter I will tell you about Japan, the brave little country we all admire.

"I hope, dear readers, you will all pray for me and for our band here in this dark field of South Chihli, China. Pray that we may be kept well and strong, and that we may speedily get the language, so that we may tell these people about our precious Jesus who can save them."

If any of the Av. S. feel like writing to Drusie, I am sure she would appreciate it, for she must have many rather lonely hours in that country, whose very language is unknown to her. Next week the story of the Woodneys will be resumed, unless the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST office is still on Birthdays in Japan.

The Japanese have a queer way of celebrating birthdays. Instead of a party in June for little Tama, and a party in September for little O'Tatsu, and a party in December for little Ume, there's a party in February in honor of the little girls, and one in May for all little boys. In February every little girl receives from her grown-up relatives and friends gifts of dolls, and besides these dolls her mother takes out of the closet many of the dolls she had when she was a child, and some even older dolls that the little girl's grandmother had when she was a little tot; and I dare say there are dolls that belonged to the little girl's great-grandmother, and even to her great-great-grandmother, quaint dolls in faded clothes of a hundred years and more ago, carefully handed down from mother to daughter ever since. I saw one old doll, about six inches tall, dressed as a daimio, or great lord of bygone times, in gorgeous brocade robes, covered with steel armor of little overlapping plates, just as beautifully made as if for a real warrior. He wore a tiny helmet, and carried two tiny swords not as large as matches. You could draw the swords out of their scabbards just like real ones, and they were as sharp as they could be. Well, for about a week, all Japan is one grand dolls' tea party! And then the festival is over, and all the best dolls, even the presents to the little girl, are put carefully away, never to be even looked at for a whole year. I don't see how the little Japanese girls can bear that part of it.

Then at the first of May comes the boys' festival—the fish festival, it is called. Every family that's lucky enough to have a boy puts up a flag-pole in the door-yard; or perhaps several families combine to use the same pole, and have it a bigger, handsomer one than one family could afford. On the top of the pole is a gilt ball, or else a basket with something bright and tinselly in it. And flying from the pole, in the brisk spring winds, is a whole string of carp, made of oiled paper or cloth, painted in bright colors, and anywhere from five to fifteen feet long. Each fish belongs to some particular boy, and the carp is chosen because it is a big, strong fish, and not only can swim against the most rapid currents, but in its eagerness to get up stream will leap straight up waterfalls. The gold ball means a treasure, which the carp, leaping and struggling, buffeted by the wind, is forever trying to reach. And the whole thing means that the boy, when he's a man, will have to battle his way as the sturdy carp struggles up the river. The fishes look so very pretty and gay, flying over his house, and the boy gets so many treats at fish festival time, that I don't think he minds even if the carp is a nice little jolly lecture on ambition.—Bertha Runkle, in January St. Nicholas.

Local Union Proposed.

When General Grant was on his tour around the world he visited and examined the Great Wall of China. The Chinese built this wall about 200 B. C. to keep out their enemies on the north. General Grant was greatly impressed with the magnitude of the enterprise. He said it must have cost as much in treasure and labor as the construction of all the railroads in our country, all the canals and public highways, and many of our great cities. Yet to-day and for centuries the wall has been utterly worthless for the purpose for which it was intended.

At greater cost in time, treasure and souls of men the walls of denominationalism and sectarianism have been builded in the church. These walls were builded to compass truth and fence out error.

To-day they, like the Chinese wall, are worthless for the purpose for which they are intended. He who said, "I am the truth," towers high above them all so that he may be seen of men. Will any say that error has made no breach in the walls?

Religious bodies are closer together than ever before. But they must come closer. Naturally Christian union will take place first between bodies which present fewer points of resistance. Negotiations between different bodies of Presbyterians and Methodists are encouraging examples. Also the prospective union of Congregational, United Brethern and M. P. churches. In our own desire for union shall we be content to court the Free Baptists only?

In the county seat town where the writer preaches is a Baptist church about equal in strength to the Christian church. For some time they have been without a pastor. We do not ask them to "come over and join us." We invite them to confer with us about union. They are giving our invitation courteous consideration. Whether they accept it or not we feel that the two churches will be closer together than before and nearer the possibility of union. If the time is not ripe here it may be elsewhere. But pray for us that now may be the accepted time.

The form of our invitation is given below:

"To our brethren and sisters in Christ, the Baptist church of Alma, greeting.

"We be all brethren.

"Together we love the same master, Jesus.

"Together we seek for ways to serve him.

"The things which separate us are as nothing compared with the things which bind us together in Christ.

"The kingdom of Christ would be more rapidly advanced, and his name glorified if those who love him would present a united front.

"Followers of Christ are drawing closer together, everywhere.

"Can not something practical be done for the union of religious forces in this community?

"The Baptist church and the Christian church are virtually one—they should be one in reality.

"This would mean, in Alma, one strong church able to do something instead of two weak ones.

"A movement is on foot to unite all Free Baptist and Christian churches.

"I am requested by the officers of the Christian church to ask that, if the matter seems good to you, representatives be appointed to confer with us on the question of union.

"Nothing can be lost by such a conference. "Much, we trust, may be gained thereby.

"We wish not to be formal but to be practical.
Yours in Christ,
"OSCAR SWEENEY,

Nebraska Pulpit Supply Committee.

It seems necessary to make public an action of the Nebraska pulpit supply committee in order that misunderstandings may not arise in the future. When this committee began its work, the question of proper forms of recommendations of preachers seeking new fields was considered. After thorough discussio it was deemed best to pass the following resolution: "That it is the sense of this committee, that the committee or any of its representatives, as such, shall give no pocket credentials; but will hold itself ready to give any information to persons who ought to know, about any of our preachers."

This action was the result of the experiences of the committee and those who have had this work in hand previously, that pocket credentials are very unreliable as a rule; that it has frequently happened that very bad men have been able to get such recommendations from good men. It has been found by trial that information direct from the giver to the one who should receive it, is not only fresher but will be more complete. In the present state of rapid mail service, the loss of time occasioned is small. Generally the fact that a preacher is perfectly willing to refer inquirers to the committee, or secretary of his own state, is presumptive evidence that his record is good. The committee is willing to send information in advance to other committees or state secretaries when asked to do so; or to inform churches within the state in advance of the merits of our preachers. The plan has worked well, and has saved this state from a few bad men in the last two years. It is a matter of sorrow to the committee to refuse any good man such a pocket letter, but justice to all demands that the rule be observed. No one has been injured by it.

The committee desires to thank the preaching brethren of the state for their co-operation and sympathy. We desire to serve the churches and the brethren to the fullest extent, and would request that applicants be referred to the committee promptly. Address

Tribute to Alexander Campbell, By Col. W. F. Switzler, Columbia, Mo.

While in Columbia, Mo., recently, I was the guest of Col. W. F. Switzler and his daughter, Mrs. Camilla S. Branham. In the course of our conversation I remarked: "Colonel, you remind me in your appearance and manner of expression more of Alexander Campbell than any other man whom I have met since he fell asleep." He took Mr. Campbell for a text for a few moments, and here is what he said: "I knew Alexander Campbell personally very well. I often heard him preach and lecture. He visited Columbia as the guest of Thos. M. Allen, in October, 1845, and again in the autumn of 1856. He was one of the most profound scholars of the nineteenth century with whom I had an acquaintance, and a very captivating and instructive speaker, without flowers of speech or studied illustrations of language, but clear, logical and fair, with few gestures and undemonstrative on the platform.

"He didn't make a great noise and jump over the chairs on the platform or in the pulpit. His style was conversational, hence his power and fascination in language. He spent several weeks in Columbia at each of his visits, and on the former occasion he addressed audiences of three or four thousand people in a grove of forest trees now occupied by the residence of R. B. Price, the banker. You had to listen in order to retain the thread of his discourse, which is the argument, of course, and when you left the audience you carried home something to think about. He did not indulge in oratory or demagogy (a thing possible to a minister as well as a politician). In fact he was a steam engine without the machinery making a noise. I remarked to him that the secret of his success was the fact that he, like myself, had received a good Presbyterian training and education in his youth. He smiled and passed on." CLAYTON KEITH.

An Old-World Greeting.

I wish the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a very happy New Year, and pray that it may live a century or so. At the West London tabernacle we are in a hopeful condition, in spite of hard times in London. For the first time in a dozen years we pay off £100 on the mortgage. All departments of the church are in good spirit. We expect great things of the Torrey-Alexander mission in February and March, to be held in Royal Albert hall. We follow immediately with a union meeting at the tabernacle, with J. Q. A. Henry, of New York city, the great temperance orator, and his singer, Mr. Hemminger. Our net additions last year were 28. The wave of spiritual and evangelistic revival now manifest in Austria, France, Wales, America, and we hope in England also, ought to lift all Christian work to its very highest tide.

MARK WAYNE WILLIAMS.

The Hot Springs Cause.

There were three additions last Sunday. We have reached the 50 pledges on Brother Browning's proposition, and are now collecting. However, we are still open to receive money, for I have been soliciting our home people and will continue to do so until every citizen has been given an opportunity to aid us. We are hoping to realize anough out of the $500 on the Browning proposition, and what we have on hand, and additional contributions from brethren, to pay out in March. Our hearts beat fast when we think of this, and we pray that we may. Then we can take up building plans. Our city is now crowded. What an opportunity to preach the simple gospel, if we were in our new church!

BETHEL

SACRED is the place in which God meets with man. It was a very ordinary place in which Jacob lay down to sleep on that first night after he left his father's house. It became a very sacred and historic place after the experiences of that night. Jacob had taken a stone—one of the ordinary stones which he found on the place—and made a pillow of it. Perhaps as he lay there, looking up at the far-away stars that studded the blue Syrian sky, he was thinking of how far away God was from the earth, and from his humble place of rest. But he dreamed, and in his dreams he beheld a ladder, one end of which rested on the earth, and the other reached up to heaven, on which the angels of God ascended and descended. At the upper end of the ladder stood Jehovah, speaking to him and promising him a great blessing. When Jacob awaked out of his sleep he understood the significance of his dream. "Surely," said he, "Jehovah is in this place and I knew it not. This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." This is a lesson for all time and for all men. In whatever place man holds communion with God, there God is, and because of this meeting-place between man and God, it is forever sacred. It is Bethel—the house of God. This new place into which we have come—this building dedicated to the publication of religious literature—may it be a Bethel indeed, in which all who work may have a vision of Jehovah, and may see, in Jesus Christ, the ladder which connects heaven and earth, through whom we may hold communion with the spiritual world, and by whom, at last, we may ascend to His Father, and to our Father, to His heaven and to our heaven!

Factorymen, printers, farmers, country merchants and others, whose changing duties require very frequent washing of hands, will find that Ivory Soap is just what they want. It lathers quickly and will not make the hands sore or rough, even when used very often, or with a stiff brush. It keeps the skin soft because it is pure; as pure as a soap can be made. It floats.

The Worry of It.

It is not the work, but the worry,
That makes the world grow old,
That numbers the years of its children
Ere half their story is told;
That weakens their faith in heaven
And the wisdom of God's great plan.
Ah, 'tis not the work, but the worry,
That breaks the heart of man!

By and By.

A legend is told among the peasants of Southern Russia of an old woman who was at work in her house when the wise men of the East, led by the star, passed on their way to go and seek the infant Saviour.

"Come with us," they said; "we are going to find the Christ, so long looked for by men."

"Not now," she replied; "I am not ready to go now, but by and by I will follow on and find him with you."

But when her work was done the wise men had gone, and the star in the heavens which went before them had disappeared, and she never found her way to the Saviour. And the same sad story could be told of thousands who, like Felix, have said, "Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season I will call for thee," but to whom, alas, the convenient season never came.

A Universal Language.

A little leaflet, which some friend of humanity has been gratuitously circulating, makes some truly novel contributions to the discussion of the not altogether new subject of the establishment of an international and universal language. The root of his theory is that all experiments hitherto have been too cheap, and that the way to succeed is to persuade the principal governments to spend vast sums according to a prearranged scheme in paying people to make, teach and learn a new language. The figures are rather staggering. The author of the plan estimates that it would require an expenditure of five billion dollars to carry out his scheme. His budget includes such items as the following: one hundred million for the expenses of an international congress of one thousand members working for five years in the construction of the language; five hundred million for the publication and free distribution of text-books for instruction in it; one hundred million in prizes for the authors of original literature in the new language; one billion for free instruction; two billion for bounties to the first fifty million people who learn it; and one billion for the establishment of free libraries in the new language. Thus by the sheer compulsion of cash an international language would not only be created (that part is easy) but would be given universal currency. The plan is rather crudely characteristic of an age which places much confidence in the conquering power of coin.

A Real Need.

The history of attempts to create an artificial language and make it a universal medium, would make an interesting subject for a monograph. The passing of Latin and the rise of the modern nationalities with their separate languages, created the first condition of the problem. The immense increase in the intimacy of international relations in modern times gives the second condition. It is a real problem, and many attempts have been made to solve it. We have had Volapuk and Idiom Neutral and Esperanto and Tutonish. Each of these is represented by its sponsors as being easy, beautiful and adapted to all the purposes of trade, science and literature. There has never been half so much difficulty in making a new language as in getting it used by the people whose use of it would amount to something. Traders go on learning the devious idioms of languages which were born and made, and scholars who meet in international congresses perversely continue to read their learned papers in French, German or English, in spite of irregular verbs and complicated syntax, on the calm assumption (which is not always justified by the facts) that all scholars can understand those three languages. Among English-speaking people a pleasing theory is current that English is destined to be the world's language for trade, scholarship and diplomacy. Perhaps it will come to that, but it is a distant consummation. The "billion-dollar method" has at least the merit of expressing the fact that the world even now is in no hurry to set about learning a new and common language, whatever civilizing effects might follow from it. There is an irresistible popular impulse to view with merriment and incredulity these many attempts to make and give currency to a universal language. And yet it would be an immense advantage if it could be done. One need not believe, with one enthusiastic advocate that "war, pestilence and famine would cease, and the universal brotherhood of man be instantly ushered in" if we all spoke Volapuk or pidgin-English or some other common dialect, but it would be a distinct advantage to traders, scholars, students, travelers, diplomats and many others. However we want a language less wooden than most of these artificial ones. Their flat simplicity gives one a better opinion even of irregular verbs.

New York's Money.

An interesting item in the daily press tells of the "golden flood" that is pouring in upon New York, insomuch that the banks are finding some difficulty in loaning all the money that is at their disposal. It is further stated that this state of affairs affords an opportunity for the promoters of speculative enterprises to secure all the money they need. It is an indubitable fact that speculation always flourishes when money is plentiful, and it is equally worth noting that the money which goes into these extra-hazardous enterprises belongs, in large part, to people who have no idea of speculating or of allowing their money to be used in any but the safest transactions. The "golden flood" which is pouring into New York is not all or chiefly New York money. Much of it is western money—using the term "western" in that loose and comprehensive way which is in vogue in New York—belonging to depositors who have put it in bank for safekeeping. The western bank sends it to its eastern representative and it is loaned, as above. This is not an argument in favor of keeping one's surplus in an old stocking or the loose-brick-in-the-corner-of-the-hearth method of banking. But it is a fact to be taken into account in estimating the country's financial operations that an immense amount of the speculation that is carried on in New York is done with the money of persons of a wholly non-speculative temper who have no thought that their money is being so used.

Decision Against the Beef Trust.

A unanimous opinion against the Beef Trust has just been handed down by the United States Supreme Court. This confirms a suspicion which the meat-buying public has cherished for a long time that the combination of packers who were able to control prices for their own benefit and do all the things that trusts usually do, constituted a real trust. The following were the chief points in the accusation. The bill "charges a combination of a dominant proportion of the dealers in fresh meat throughout the United States, not to bid against each other in the live stock markets of the different states, to bid up prices for a few days in order to induce the cattle men to send their stock to the stockyards, to fix prices at which they will sell and to that end to restrict shipments of meat when necessary, to establish a uniform rule of credit to dealers and to keep a blacklist, to make uniform and improper charges for cartage, and finally to get less than lawful rates from the railroads to the exclusion of competitors." The packers attempted to show that they were not engaging in interstate commerce and hence were not within the jurisdiction of the federal courts. The Supreme Court held that the purchase of cattle from owners in different states and the sale of meat to dealers in different states does constitute interstate commerce, even though no single element of the complete transaction involves the crossing of state lines. The effect of the decision is to make permanent the injunction issued against the packing-house of Swift & Company, by the lower court, by which they were enjoined from doing business in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

Executive Power.

A very serious criticism is now being raised against the President on the ground that he has concluded, signed and put into effect a treaty without submitting it to the Senate for ratification as the Constitution provides. The document is called a protocol, not a treaty, but it is claimed that it is a treaty in all but name. The case is that of Santo Domingo. The government of that so-called republic has for many years been in a state of chaos which entailed a long series of disagreements with European powers growing out of the claims of foreign citizens resident in Santo Domingo. That government has manifested a complete and chronic incapacity to take care of itself and keep out of trouble with others. It has seemed for a long time that, as in the case of some of the turbulent South-American republics, the United States could not reasonably enforce the hands-off policy which the Monroe doctrine calls for without providing some method as an alternative to the threat of territorial absorption, by which an irresponsible government could be compelled to pay its debts. The protocol signed by the representatives of the Dominican government and of the executive department of ours, provides that the United States government shall "take charge of the customs houses, appoint the employes in them, collect the revenues and retain 55 per cent to be applied on the debts of Santo Domingo, increase the efficiency of the civil administration and advance the material progress and welfare of the republic." That these things all need to be done, there is no room for doubt. But the doing of them is not to be lightly undertaken. It may be a necessary development of the Monroe doctrine. But it is a radical departure from our traditional attitude toward the Latin republic. It is reported from Santo Domingo that this protocol was to go into effect on February 1 and that it has actually gone into effect. It is upon this fact (if it is a fact) that the assertion is based that the President has concluded a real treaty and made it effective, though using the term protocol, without consulting the Senate. It is certainly worth while for the Senate and the public to see to it that we are not unnecessarily led into any responsible guardianship of spoiled infant republics and that the righteous zeal of the executive for the accomplishment of things without delay does not lead to a disregard of wise constitutional provisions. It is maintained by the President's friends that he had no such thought. But by a large majority the Senate has amended the arbitration treaties so that no specific question can be submitted to arbitration until a special treaty covering that question is ratified by the Senate. The President has expressed his disapproval of the change and we must confess that it is doubtful what effect this deadlock will have in the cause of international arbitration.

Indian Schools Again.

It is no desire to "fan the dying embers of sectarian hatred among Christians of different denominations," as Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte says, which moves the Protestant press to persist in protesting against the appropriation of Indian trust funds for the maintenance of sectarian (Catholic) schools. Rather does it wish to fan the apparently dying embers of the government's devotion to the principle established by Congress, viz., no public money for sectarian enterprises. The reasonably certain facts, as already given on this page, are (1) that, in the case of certain Indian tribes whose undivided tribal funds are held in trust by the government to be expended at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, this trust money has been given to Catholic schools; (2) that the amount so given is more than the total amount properly available for education in the said tribes; (3) that only a small percentage of the children of these tribes are students in the favored schools; (4) that the petitions asking for this use of the funds were signed by only a small per cent of the Indians who had an interest in the funds, a vast majority of the signers being illiterate (signing by mark) and probably not knowing the contents of the petition; and (5) that the preponderance of both numbers and intelligence in the several tribes was represented in counter-petitions protesting against such use of the funds. The President in commenting on the situation says he sees no impropriety in what has been done provided the petitions are genuine and the appropriations are only in proportion to the number of petitioners. Conformity to these two requirements would certainly take the sharp edge off of much of the criticism, but it is not so sure that it would render the policy wholly defensible. The money is held in trust for each tribe as a whole. The Lacey bill, which is now pending in Congress, provides for the allotment of this money to the individuals in the form of an annuity—a good bill probably and one which will enable every Indian to do what he wills with his own. But the bill is not yet a law, and meanwhile the funds belong to the tribes as such and not to the individual members of the tribes. At present, therefore, a petition of certain individuals to have their share of the funds used in a certain way for their individual benefit or that of their children, is quite on a par with a petition of individual citizens in a state or county to have their share of the public school fund used in a given way for the benefit of their children. The easiest way out of the difficulty is for Congress to pass the Lacey bill and give the Indians their money severally. Then if they want Catholic schools they can pay for them. A comparison of their voluntary contributions then with the appropriation now will be interesting.

The Philippine Tariff.

Among the most imminent and pressing duties of the present congress, in our judgment, is the duty of annexing the Philippines. Of course the governmental annexation has already been consummated years ago, but industrial and commercial annexation wait upon the enactment of a law removing the tariff barrier between the islands and the United States. At present the only articles which enjoy the privilege of free trade between the United States and the Philippines are soldiers, school teachers and civil officers. That is good as far as it goes, and the archipelago has been greatly blessed by it. But free trade in troops and teachers does not solve the industrial problem. Free trade for Philippine sugar would be more to the point. The American sugar producers protest against this as a grave peril to their infant industry. But the figures do not bear out their claim. The people of the United States consume annually 2,700,000 tons of sugar. Only about 18 per cent of this is of domestic production. The total annual production of sugar in the Philippines amounts to about 145,000 tons. If every grain of it were exported to the United States, reserving none for home consumption and sending none to the nearer open markets of China and Japan which now receive most of the export, it would supply only five per cent of our demand. The removal of the tariff would doubtless cause an increase in the amount of sugar raised in the islands, but it would scarcely be possible to increase it so far as to crowd our home product out of the market. The admission of sugar free from Hawaii and Porto Rico has made scarcely a ripple in the sugar market. It certainly has not inperiled any infant industry, though the opposition to the measure when it was pending was based upon just such claims as are now being made in opposition to the proposed reduction or abolition of the Philippine tariff. The removal of duty from imports from the Philippines is too small a matter to play much of a part in the general scheme of needed tariff reform, but it is important for the proper industrial development of the islands.

"Organic Union": What Is It?

This is one of the phrases that is being used a good deal now, and apparently in a very vague sense. Judging from much of what we see on the subject of union, there is a popular idea that there are just two kinds of Christian union, viz.: an invisible, spiritual union, as it is called, which is quite consistent with denominational divisions as they now exist; and a consolidation of all the religious bodies into one compact, ecclesiastical organization, culminating in some supreme authority lodged in a general assembly or council or court of some kind. "Organic union" is supposed by many to refer to the latter kind of union. We should say of the first that it is not union, in any proper sense of the term, and of the latter, that it is not Christian union. And yet we believe in organic union. How? In what way?

In the first place, the union for which our Lord prayed, and which the apostles enjoined, and which is demanded by the needs of our times, is a visible union. It must be seen and known of men. A union that is effective in co-operation, and in extending the bounds of fellowship, is bound to be visible. Why should the church cherish an invisible union as a desirable thing, while it is wearing the outward aspect of division and competition? How is the world to look on and say, "Behold, how these Christians love one another!" if they do not see their unity of spirit and effort in building up the kingdom of God?

In the next place we believe that this unity must be organic in the sense that the church is an organism whose members all co-operate under a common Head. The church is the body of Christ, and he is its living Head, and all its members must be organically united with him in order to be united with each other. It is the recognition of the headship and supreme authority of Christ in his church that alone makes organic union possible. But it also makes such union visible.

But would not this lead to the very kind of ecclesiasticism which we have said would not be Christian union? Not at all, because Christ nowhere authorizes such an ecclesiasticism. So far as the mind of Christ on the subject is reflected in his general teaching, and in the teaching of the apostles, his will is that his followers be gathered together in local congregations, for convenience' sake, each managing its own local affairs in its own way, and all of them co-operating as parts of a common whole for the extension of his kingdom on earth. Each of these congregations having a common Lord, a common faith and a common baptism—in other words a common organic law—receives members into its fellowship on the same conditions; therefore, one who is a member of any local congregation is entitled to membership with any other congregation. This is what we mean by organic union.

It ought to be a very simple matter for religious bodies who recognize this congregational order of church government to co-operate as brethren. It only requires such adjustment of their terms of membership to the organic law of the church, as laid down in the New Testament, to bring them into fullest union with each other, and enable them to co-operate as churches of the Lord Jesus Christ. Between those bodies who hold and practice the same conditions of church membership the matter of union is so simple that it is a marvel that the spirit of sect or party should be allowed to keep them from active co-operation in the Master's work.

A Dominant Note in the New Evangelism.

Many have been the characterizations of the age in which we live. Indeed, it is a many-sided age, and requires many characterizations to adequately describe it. On its religious side one of its chief characteristics, we think, is the absence of the sense of sin. Conviction of sin has been a noticeable feature in all great religious revivals and reformations. John the Baptist, as the herald of Christ, sounded the note of repentance. This was the preparation required for receiving Christ. When Peter opened the "door of faith" in the new dispensation, on Pentecost, his first great word, in answer to the question of the conscience-smitten people, as to what they should do, was, "Repent."

Repentance, therefore, was the dominant note, both of the preparatory mission of John the Baptist, and of the Christian dispensation in the beginning. Indeed, since Christianity is nothing less than the call of God to forsake sin, and to live the new life of holiness, does it not follow that repentance, which means that change of mind and heart which leads to the new life, must ever be the dominant note in evangelism? When Jesus, himself, after his resurrection characterized the gospel which was to be preached in his name "among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem," he mentioned, as its two great cardinal characteristic features, "Repentance and Remission of Sins." The first of these words is the preparation for the new life, and the last is the cancellation of the old.

But especially must the duty of repentance be made prominent at a time when sin abounds, and at a time when there seems to be little consciousness of sin, or little appreciation of its heinous character and awful consequences. This, as we have already stated, is characteristic of the present time. Men seem to have lost, very largely, the sense of guilt, and of demerit, on account of sin. Those of us who are past middle life can remember when men were said to be under conviction of sin, and when they came forward to confess Christ, or to seek for salvation in whatever way was pointed out to them, they came with "strong crying and tears." Their consciences were burdened with a sense of guilt. It rested on them like a black cloud obscuring the heavens, and shutting out the very face of God. When at last they were led to a knowledge of pardon and peace, and the clouds broke away from their moral skies, they rejoiced with exceeding joy, and felt that they had entered into a new world. Such phenomena are now very rare, not because men are less guilty but apparently because they are less sensitive to sin, and less conscious of its nature and blameworthiness. It would seem self-evident that at such a time, the duty and meaning of repentance should be made very prominent in evangelistic work. Not only must there be repentance toward God, for those grosser sins which hinder faith, but that deeper repentance which is only possible to the soul that has got a vision of Christ, and of his sinlessness, through faith. The deeper the repentance the purer and stronger will be the Christian life to which it leads.

And this leads us to say that repentance is a continuous process. Christians need to repent to the extent that their lives are pitched on too low a plane, and are weakened and defiled by the spirit of worldliness. One of the most necessary things in the beginning of evangelistic efforts for the conversion of sinners, is to call the church to repentance, to the renewal of its first love, and to the doing of its first works. Until this is done, the church stands between the evangelist and the world as a non-conductor. What the world requires is not only to hear the gospel preached, but to see it incarnate in the lives of those who profess to have received it. A preached gospel needs to be supplemented by a lived gospel in order to accomplish its greatest results.

We would therefore urge upon all ministers of the word, and especially upon all evangelists, to lay supreme emphasis upon the duty of repentance. The mightiest power for leading men to repentance is the goodness of God as manifested in the gospel. There is no such rebuke to sin as the holiness of Christ. There is no such call to repentance as the cross of Christ, on which Innocent Love suffered for our transgressions. Forgiveness of sins cannot reach any higher or deeper than our repentance. Therefore the New Testament evangelism is a call to repentance and remission of sins. Let this note rise high and resonant in all evangelistic preaching, that men may know that it is only as they turn away from sin that they can turn to God, and that a life unrenewed in its inmost purposes and outward conduct is without God, and hence without hope.

A New Work on the Holy Spirit.

Fully fifteen years ago the editor of the Christian-Evangelist read a paper before the Illinois Christian Ministerial Association on the subject of the Holy Spirit, and by unanimous vote he was requested to publish it in pamphlet form. Several years afterwards this paper was greatly enlarged and delivered in a course of lectures, in the Texas lectureship. Again it was suggested that the lectures be published. We have refrained from doing so till the present time, feeling the incompleteness of the treatment, and desiring to still further study certain aspects of the subject. Recently pressure has been brought to bear upon us for the publication of a small book on this vital subject, embodying such conclusions as we have reached, and this we are now doing, not with the conviction that we have attained to a full and satisfactory view of the subject, but believing that what may be presented will be helpful to others in attaining to a completer knowledge of the theme. It is well to keep in mind a distinction which we have already pointed out in a previous number of the paper, that it is one thing to experience the blessed influence of the Holy Spirit and another thing to have clear ideas concerning this subject. There are many whose lives and characters teach a doctrine of the Holy Spirit much more clearly than is taught in their sermons and writings. And yet we cannot avoid the conviction that it would tend to the greater enrichment of our lives and to greater joy in the Holy Spirit if we could attain to a clear conception of the New Testament teaching on this subject. It is in this belief that we have sought to draw out the best thought of our brethren on this question, and that we have consented to publish, in the near future, the results of our own thinking on this lofty theme.

Notes and Comments.

We omitted to make mention of the recent forty-first anniversary number of the Central Baptist of this city, of which Dr. A. C. Armstrong is the editor. The Central Baptist is about the age of the Christian-Evangelist, and has been an able representative of the Baptist cause in this city for many years. We have known intimately several of its editors, beginning with Dr. Luther, who was its editor when we came to the city, to the present able editor, Dr. Armstrong. It is to the credit of the Central Baptist that it never runs into any vagaries, that it does not take up extreme positions, and while manifesting a tolerant spirit, stands firmly by the great evangelical truths of the gospel. We were glad to note in the anniversary number expressions of high regard for the paper from leading Baptists of this and other states. We are pleased to see this appreciation of the sterling qualities of our valued contemporary. May it live long and prosper!

Just now, Andrew, one of the earliest if not the first disciple of Jesus, is becoming the pattern for Christians of our day. Having himself found Christ, he went after his brother at once. Of the same spirit was Philip, who on coming into touch with Christ, went immediately after Nathaniel. This is the kind of work the church needs to day. Each convert won to Christ should seek another and bring him to Jesus. Andrew was probably not a great man, but his bringing of his brother Simon to Jesus was a great thing for the church. Perhaps it was the greatest act of his life. No one knows what he is accomplishing when he brings a soul to Christ. It is a deed fraught with infinite possibilities.

Simon Peter was very far from being a rock when he came to Jesus, but Jesus saw in him the capacity for becoming a rock, and hence called him Peter. It is characteristic of Jesus that he was able to see in men possibilities of development which others did not see. Many a man owes his greatness and his reputation to the fact of his having come under the spell of Jesus Christ. There is that in him which appeals to the noblest and best there is in our human nature, and if we yield ourselves completely to his guidance, and enter into fellowship with his plans and purposes he can accomplish in us and for us results far above anything of which we have ever dreamed.

The Sunday-School Times thinks we need more "Conversational Evangelism," and less oratorical effort. Perhaps the Times is protesting against ranting, and oratorical display. Let us add, also, our protest against the clerical tone. It's an awful load which the gospel has to carry when it is preached by a man who thinks to give it added sanctity by a holy tone, which often degenerates into a holy whine. Commend us to the evangelist who talks straight out to men, in a natural tone, like Dwight L. Moody, about the things which concern their eternal interests.

And now the interest of business men in religious work is breaking out among our Congregational brethren. We learn from the Congregationalist and Christian World, that "a new and interesting movement in Nebraska is suggested by a call signed by twenty-seven leading laymen for an all day convention of Nebraska laymen at First Church, Lincoln, Feb. 7th. Such practical topics as the Layman's Responsibility for Creditable Church Buildings, Short Pastorates, Church Finances, etc., will be discussed." There is the spirit of our new organization, the National Association of the Business Men of the Christian Church, manifesting itself in another quarter. It is not strange that a good idea adopted by one religious body should spread among all religious bodies in this age of rapid intercommunication. There is no more encouraging sign of the times than this waking up of the business men of the church to a sense of their responsibility in carrying forward the great interests, not only of the local church, but of the church at large.

Professor Shailer Mathews of the University of Chicago, is quoted as saying that "the revival of interest in the ministry will have to begin in the revival of respect for the office which the minister holds. You cannot turn a prophet into a hired man." There can be no doubt of the need of greater respect for the ministerial office, but is it not true that ministers are in part responsible for the too low ideal of this office? When preachers recognize, themselves, the sacredness of their calling, and rise to its demands, it is bound to give men a higher conception of its sacredness and its value. It is only as preachers live above the sordid and selfish aims which influence men of the world, and devote themselves with single-heartedness to serving God and their fellowmen, through the ministry of the word, that they can bring men to a proper respect for their high calling.

"I thought at the beginning," says the Welsh revivalist, "of terrifying the people into belief. But the Spirit told me to preach the love of Christ only." In conjunction with this, we may place the statement of a New York gentleman who says: "The need of America is not another man-made movement, but a God-sent revival." There is a cry in many quarters for an ethical revival, and it is sadly needed, but before we can have that in any permanent way, there must be a spiritual revival.

In view of the Symposium which is continued this week, the opinion of Mr. Campbell Morgan as to the origin of the great revival in Wales is valuable:

> You tell me that the revival originates with Roberts. I tell you that Roberts is a product of the revival. You tell me that it began in an Endeavor meeting where a dear girl bore testimony. I tell you that was part of the result of a revival breaking out everywhere. If you and I could stand above Wales, looking at it, you would see fire breaking out here, and there, and yonder, and somewhere else, without any collusion or prearrangement. It is a divine visitation in which God—let me say this reverently—in which God is saying to us: See what I can do without the things you are depending on; see what I can do in answer to a praying people; see what I can do through the simplest who are ready to fall in line and depend wholly and absolutely upon me.

Editor's Easy Chair.

All things come to those who wait! Here we are, at last, in our new quarters, and this is our new editorial office. It is a great improvement. And yet the Easy Chair is not "stuck up," in the least! The fact is, we are not so high by one story as we were in the old quarters. We have been a long while getting here, but we have arrived at last. We have never felt quite so much at home in all of our editorial ups and downs as we do in our present quarters. It has been a big task to move, and it will be some time yet before we have things fully adjusted in our new building. Perhaps when we get things in order we may have a house-warming, and invite our friends to call and see us. Here we hope to abide for many years. Indeed, it is very probable that when the editor removes from these quarters he will permanently vacate the editorial chair and the Easy Chair, and take up his residence in the city of the New Jerusalem. Meanwhile we are here to help build on this earth the fair city of God. We cannot doubt that it is God's purpose to make this earth the abode of truth and righteousness, and to fill it with inhabitants who shall be citizens of the heavenly kingdom. To assist in hastening that sublime consummation is the highest aim and ambition of the editor and his Easy Chair. Nothing that does not tend to that end, directly or indirectly, can now interest us very much.

An appreciative reader of the Easy Chair suggests a rather startling innovation in this department. He would have us extend the Easy Chair over two pages. At the top of the first page he would have a picture of an old-fashioned fireplace, with the back log and old-fashioned fire, with the flame curling up above the forestick. In front of this, he would have a picture of the editor with his whiskers lengthened out to give him a patriarchal appearance, sitting in his Easy Chair! We must draw the line on the patriarchal picture, and for the time being we must allow the imagination of the reader to supply the old-fashioned fireplace, with all the necessary appurtenances thereunto belonging. It is not well to supply too much for the eye, and leave too little for the imagination. The imagination is often a better artist than the photographer, as it is not subject to the limitations of the latter. The camera is bound to report what is placed before it, while the imagination is subject to no such limitation, and can often supply forms and features which are a great improvement over the real and the actual. We have all been disappointed on meeting, or seeing the picture of someone of whose personality we had formed a high opinion from his deeds or his writings. The real did not come up to our ideal. Such seems to have been the disappointment created by the "bodily presence" of Paul among those who had formed their impressions of him from his writings. We prefer, therefore, to give free rein to the imagination of our readers to supply the old-fashioned fireplace, the patriarchal editor and all the other accessories.

A lady reader of the Easy Chair, in a personal letter to the editor, writes: "You can never know what a help the Easy Chair has been to me. During the past six years I have passed through the greatest trials of my life, so far. What is yet in store for me, God knows, and I trust he will give me grace and fortitude to meet whatever trials may come. As a rule, I try to 'bury my sorrow,' knowing that 'the world hath its share,' and feeling the truth of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem—

'Laugh, and the world laughs with you,
Weep, and you weep alone.'

I try to cast all my burden upon the Lord, but there are times when the heart cries out for human sympathy. More than once I have been on the point of burdening you with my troubles, and asking your advice, but knowing your busy life I have hesitated, but since reading the Easy Chair in last week's Christian-Evangelist I feel it my duty to tell you what a great help and comfort your words of sympathy and cheer have been to me, though you knew it not." Our sister does not tell us the nature of her troubles. She has a right to keep them to herself, and her most intimate friends. We are glad to know, however, that she has found some strength and comfort in reading the Easy Chair. We have had to face the problem of trial and disappointment, and of a burdened heart, and the lesson we have learned from these experiences is that God is speaking to us in these events of our lives as well as in those for which we are more grateful. He is sending us a message which he sees that we need, in every trial which besets us, and in every great sorrow which burdens our hearts. To understand this truth is to learn the lesson of trust, and to be able to say with another,

"I had rather walk in the dark, with God,
Than to walk alone in the light."

We have seen nothing for a long time that has more deeply impressed us than the proposal of our secretary of state, Mr. Hay, to return to China the twenty-two million dollars which was awarded the United States to cover our part of the expense in suppressing the Boxer rebellion. It will be remembered that this government used its influence in cutting down the indemnity, very largely, which was imposed upon China by the action of the different powers involved. Now, in the light of all the facts, Secretary Hay has reached the conclusion that it would be unjust for our government to accept this money since our troops were in China to protect our citizens, and our interests there, against an uprising for which the Chinese government was not responsible. This seems to us like Christianity working its way into national affairs. It is a unique application of the golden rule. It would be an object lesson which could not fail to exert a far-reaching influence. Its effect on China and other oriental countries to which we are sending our missionaries, would be of incalculable value. It is easy to imagine Chinese statesmen and leaders saying, "If this action of the United States in voluntarily returning money to which it does not feel itself entitled, is the result of Christ's teaching, it might be worth while for us to investigate the subject of Christianity. It would be a good religion for China." Unfortunately, our Christian missionaries have had to carry a heavy burden in teaching a Christianity that has been so misrepresented by those who profess it. If we can now illustrate the genuine effects of Christianity in deeds of righteousness and of justice, it will mightily reinforce the missionaries who are seeking to introduce Christ and his religion to the pagan nations.

This thought, too, has an individual application which should influence, much more than it does, the conduct of those who claim to be followers of Christ. The life of every such one is a representation to the world of the character of God, as revealed in Christ. It is a common remark that the lives of Christians are the only Bibles which the world reads to any extent. In these lives the world gets its impression of Christ and Christianity. If this truth were fully understood, if Christians could only realize that in all their little dishonesties, sharp dealings, unclean habits and bad tempers they were misrepresenting God to the world, it could but exert a restraining and ennobling influence upon their lives. It is hard for us to understand that it is God's purpose to win others to his love and service through the picture of him which we furnish in our character and conduct. And yet, that this is true does not admit of a doubt. This is what Jesus means when he says, "Let your light so shine before men, that others seeing your good works may be constrained to glorify your Father, who is in heaven." Has your life, dear Easy Chair reader, been such as to constrain some of those who know you to glorify your heavenly Father? Why should we not make this a part of our daily prayer:

"So be it all my glory and my bliss,
To make my little world think well of Thee"?

As Seen from the Dome

THE PRESIDENT AS A CHURCH-GOER

BY F. D. POWER

The most vigorous preacher in sight is the President, and he never fails of a congregation. He has spoken from a number of our pulpits, and it is only necessary to announce his presence to ensure a good hearing in the most unfrequented sanctuary. He will even crowd a prayer-meeting. The sermon stuff he uses is virile. It never fails to strike home. Whether constructed on strictly homiletical lines or not, it gets close to his audiences. More than any other man that has occupied the White House he has preached, and so far he has not been charged with saying too much, or giving out a false gospel. Washington, at least, runs to hear him and generously applauds what he says.

Not long ago he did an extraordinary thing for a President to do, he went to prayer-meeting. He expressed to Pastor Schick a desire to meet his fellow church members personally, and as a result, the whole church was at the midweek service—an extraordinary thing for a church. Folks who had not thirsted for this little Jacob's well by the wayside in the wilderness of the week for many a long year were suddenly impressed with the great comfort and help of the prayer-meeting; and so they assembled from all quarters. Indeed, it is safe to say, not only Pastor Schick's congregation was struck with this gracious impulse, but other congregations as well would have shared in the pious quickening if permitted to do so. The church was filled to overflowing. The President arrived unattended save by his colored valet and took his seat quietly. Toward the conclusion of the service he stepped to the front and talked to the people on brotherhood. Here it is. Taken altogether it gets down to the whole business of good government, of our economic problems, of the vital question of Christian unity, of the race difficulty, of the crime of sectionalism, of caste barriers which separate the upper and lower classes, of unrighteous distinctions in the very sanctuary of the most high. Brotherhood is a great theme which might well be the text of Czar and Mikado, of Emperor and President, as well as of preachers of the gospel. But hear.

> Dr. Schick and my friends and neighbors, and fellow members of this church: As the doctor has said, I first asked for this privilege, and the doctor kindly arranged that it should take place. I wanted to have the chance of saying to you how very greatly I have enjoyed meeting and worshiping with you Sunday after Sunday, and how I have appreciated the companionship with you. When I was still governor, after I had been elected Vice-President, the doctor wrote that this was the only reformed church in Washington, and that he thought he could claim me as a parishioner. It has meant a great deal to me to be able to come down here Sunday after Sunday and to be with you, and especially for the very reason touched upon by the doctor in the few words which we have just listened to—for the sense of brotherhood.
> I think that any man who takes an interest in this great country of ours must realize that the one all-important necessity of our social, industrial and political life is the necessity of the realization of what brotherhood means. We cannot develop our civilization at all unless we develop it upon the basis of each recognizing in his fellow man his brother, whose interest he must have at heart. No scheme of legislation, no kind of administration of the government will atone or can atone for the lack of the fundamental quality of each being in very deed his brother's keeper. I do not mean to talk about every seventh day, but to feel it in the intervening six days, to feel it on the part of the employer with his employes, on the part of the employes with the employer. Three-fourths, probably nine-tenths, of the labor troubles that sometimes assume so ominous a form would vanish if you could interest the people on each side to approach the matter in the spirit of each striving to care for his fellows as he cares for himself.
>
> I do not mean for a moment to neglect his own interests. I want a man to take care of himself, for if he does not somebody else will have to take care of him. I want him to remember that in addition to taking care of himself he has got to try to do his duty by others.
> If he will approach his fellow-men in the spirit which makes the use of the word brother a genuine term instead of a term of hypocrisy, the difficulty of dealing with the great questions that arise will be minimized, if not entirely done away with. I hope to see the steady growth of the Christian spirit in this country not merely among our congregations among the members in their dealings with one another, but among the members of our congregations in their dealings with all mankind, in their dealings with their fellows, with the men and women round about them, and in no way can we so spread the power and influence of our church, in no way can we so effectively bear testimony to it, in no way can we so help in its growth, as by showing that we have been, according to our abilities, doers of the word as well as hearers, not hearers only.

This was the President's word at the prayer-meeting; and the men, women and children crowded about the preacher and greeted him. He illustrated his sermon by his presence among the people at the people's meeting. In fact the chief magistrate has this way. He belongs to an unpretentious little church. The pastor is a plain preacher. His flock go straight along in a common-sense way as if the first citizen of the land did not worship in their midst. They have had a hard struggle to live in the earlier years of their history. They organized in a hall in 1878, and their pastor for eleven years left them and went over to the Episcopal fold. This did not discourage them. Their next pastor was with them ten years, but they were not equal to his support, and he gave up the work. The present leader of the flock came in with the close of the last century and celebrates soon his fifth anniversary. The President is a devout worshiper. He does this, as he does everything else, with his whole soul. He makes all the responses in the services and joins in the singing in a firm clear loud tone of voice. He loves to sing and sings with his mouth wide open and with all the power of his strong lungs. He has favorites and sometimes asks for them. The hymn he calls for most frequently is that which has comforted so many saints, the words of George Keith, written in 1787, which can never grow old:

> How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
> Is laid for your faith in his excellent word!
> What more can he say than to you he hath said,
> To you who for refuge to Jesus have fled?

Mr. Roosevelt's last sermon was for another of my neighbors, Dr. Butler. A half square from the Vermont avenue church is the Memorial Lutheran. In front of it is a fine statue of the great reformer. Some of my Indiana friends, seeing the city, were shown this church, and the colored Jehu said to them: "Dar's de Garfield church, and dar's de statute of de pastor, Dr. Power"! My friend Dr. Butler has held forth in this fine Seneca stone sanctuary for thirty-two years and we have always been good neighbors. He has just entered his eightieth year, and I, my fifty-fifth. A year ago, Jan. 29, his beautiful church was greatly damaged by fire. It has been restored, and the house was opened again with rejoicing, and among the features of the rededication was an address on Sunday morning by the President. He dwelt upon the opportunity of the Lutheran church especially to care for the newcomers to our shores. He said:

> The Lutheran church in this country is of very great power now numerically, and through the intelligence and thrift of its members, but it will grow steadily to even greater power. It is destined to be one of the two or three greatest and most important national churches in the United States; one of the two or three churches most distinctively American, most distinctively among the forces that are to tell for making this great country even greater in the future. Therefore a peculiar load of responsibility rests upon the members of this church. It is an important thing for the people of this nation to remember their rights, but it is an even more important thing for them to remember their duties. In the last analysis the work of statesmen and soldiers, the work of the public men, shall go for nothing if it is not based upon the spirit of Christianity, working in the millions of homes throughout this country, so that there may be that social, that spiritual, that moral foundation without which no country can ever rise to permanent greatness. For material well being, material prosperity, success in arts, in letters, great industrial triumphs, all of them and all of the structure raised thereon will be as evanescent as a dream if it does not rest on "the righteousness that exalteth a nation."

Speaking of a later service where seven of us demonstrated the spirit of unity by making seven speeches in one hour, he declared:

> Let me congratulate you and congratulate all of us that we live in a land and at a time when we accept it as natural that there should be an interdenominational service of thanksgiving, such a ceremony as is to take place this afternoon, in which the pastors of other churches join to congratulate themselves and you upon the rebuilding of this church. One of the constant problems of life is to try to cultivate breadth without shallowness, just as we want to cultivate depth without narrowness. It seems to me that thanksgiving with the combined earnestness, the liberty of the great body of the pastors who, for our good fortune, are in the various churches of this country can be accepted as in a peculiar measure typifying the American spirit in religious thought; that for our good fortune these men have been able to combine fervor in doing the Lord's work with charity toward their brethren who do it with certain differences in the nonessentials. The forces of evil are strong and mighty in this century and in this country, as they are in other countries, as they have been in all past centuries; and the people who sincerely wish to do the Lord's work will find ample opportunity for all their labor in fighting the common enemy and in assuming toward their fellows of a different confession an attitude of generous rivalry in the effort to see how the most good can be done to our people as a whole.

A Symposium on Evangelism

As a further contribution to the present widespread interest in evangelistic work, we sent the following questions, along the line of our leading editorial two weeks ago, to a number of our experienced brethren, and some of the replies are published herewith. Others will follow.

1. Is there, in your judgment, based on your experience and observation, a lack of the proper use of prayer or reliance on Divine aid in our evangelistic and other efforts to extend the kingdom of God?

2. Have we restored, in our evangelistic work, the New Testament teaching concerning the Holy Spirit, especially as presented in the Gospel of John, and in the Acts of the Apostles?

3. What means, if any, have you to suggest to make our evangelism even more successful and permanent in its results than it has been in the past?

By A. B. Jones.

1. In efforts to convert and save the world, there are two extremes to which Christian men are liable to go: (a) trusting too much to divine aid, and too little to human effort; (b) trusting too much to human effort and too little to divine aid. The religious movement represented by the Disciples, and inaugurated by the Campbells in 1809, was a reaction from the extreme of Calvinistic teaching that laid undue stress upon the divine element in man's salvation. That the effort of the Disciples to lead the world away from that extreme has produced a profound impression upon Christendom, and greatly modified its methods and thought, is clear to every man familiar with the religious history of the last century. But in their efforts to direct the popular mind to the importance of human agency, to emphasize the value of means employed in the work of redemption, it is not unnatural or unreasonable that the other extreme was reached. Indeed it is certain that this is a fact.

Had the preaching and practices of the churches been, in the early part of the nineteenth century, what they are to-day, it is not probable that there would have come into existence such a body of people as the Disciples. The demand for their plea would not have been sufficiently strong to have caused it to materialize. Of course, when we seek more earnestly after the divine help in our work to evangelize the world, we will pray more earnestly. And the more earnestly we pray, the more fully we are brought into co-operation with the divine forces. When we pray as if everything depended on prayer, and when we work as if everything depended on our efforts, then our evangelism will reach high tide.

2. Concerning the Holy Spirit in our evangelistic work: This theme necessarily overlaps the one in the preceding paragraph, since the work of the Holy Spirit is essentially "divine aid." Yet it is well to consider it in a separate paragraph.

A few weeks since, I saw in one of our religious journals this question from one of its correspondents addressed to the editor, "What is the Holy Spirit?" A few years ago, in a correspondence with one of our most prominent men, a voluminous writer, a president of a Bible college, I said to him, "I have been impressed with the fact as a very singular one, that although you have written so much, yet you have never written anything concerning the Holy Spirit." He replied to me, "I have not written anything concerning the Holy Spirit, because I do not know anything about the Holy Spirit." And yet the New Testament abounds with the doctrine of the Holy Spirit. Another of our most prominent preachers, an editor of a religious journal and a professional debater, I have been reliably informed, takes the position publicly in his lectures and sermons, that the only thing the Holy Spirit does in the evangelization of the world, was done when he inspired the Bible. This accomplished, the Holy Spirit ceased to have any active agency in the conversion and salvation of men. Instances like these of a lack of understanding and appreciation of the teachings of Christ and the apostle Paul concerning the fundamental doctrine of the Holy Spirit, would seem to call for a negative answer to the question, "Have we restored in our evangelistic work the New Testament teaching concerning the Holy Spirit?" It is a pleasure, however, to know that the better class of thinkers among us do not hold to such inadequate and unscriptural views. While there is a difference among our active evangelists in their views of this subject, yet it is doubtful whether any of them place a sufficiently high value upon the work of the Holy Spirit in the conversion and salvation of men. And, yet, when you hear even the lowest type of these men pray, you see clearly that they desire and seek the "divine aid" in their work. Their practice is better than their theory. I have been satisfied for years that a man may enjoy the presence and helpful fellowship of the Holy Spirit, and yet deny the doctrine; just as a man may be the subject of thought transference or hypnotic influence without believing in them.

The fathers of this restoration movement, the Campbells, the Scotts, the Richardsons, the Pendletons, are not responsible for its degeneracy in some quarters into a system of legalism. It would be easy to quote from these distinguished men utterances of no uncertain sound with reference to the active agency of the Holy Spirit in the conversion and sanctification of men. "I do most sincerely regard the Holy Spirit," says Alexander Campbell, "as the author of every spiritual and noble desire in the human heart, the author of every pious affection, of every holy aspiration of our souls."

3. As to the means of making our evangelism more successful and permanent, there need not much be said, if the two preceding points find proper emphasis with our preachers. Whenever the preacher himself realizes that he is "filled with the Spirit," that his message is filled with the Spirit, and that the Holy Spirit is present with the sinner, always and everywhere, anxious and seeking as the preacher is for his conversion, then the preacher will never be otherwise than earnest and humble and reverent in his speech and methods. I have heard some evangelists who made me think more of a lawyer in the court house or a politician on the platform than a minister of Christ in the church of God. I speak from my experience in the pew and not in the pulpit. I have never been the preacher I wanted to be.

After all, however, I know of no class of preachers that can and do preach the gospel of Jesus Christ with as much directness and efficiency and effectiveness as do our preachers. God bless them.

By J. Z. Tyler.

1. Prayer should not be made a substitute for the faithful preaching of the gospel, nor should we ask God to do for men what the gospel plainly calls upon them to do for themselves. These would be improper uses of prayer. But he who would preach the gospel faithfully, in the very spirit that gave it birth, who would lead men to do what the gospel calls upon them to do, must feel his own insufficiency. This sense of insufficiency compels him to rely upon divine aid. In the true ministry of the word there is always a divine fellowship; preaching and praying are vitally joined. I hesitate to pass judgment, but there has seemed to me to be some lack among us of the proper use of prayer or reliance on divine aid in our evangelistic and other efforts to extend the kingdom of God.

2. We have corrected some popular errors concerning the work ot the Holy Spirit and have restored some features of the New Testament teaching on this subject. Much remains to be done. Let any thoughtful person glance over the pages of the New Testament, mentally noting the passages that record the promise, the presence, the power of the Holy Spirit among the first Christians, and it must be manifest that we are far from having fully restored the New Testament teaching. We limit his ministry too much to the apostolic period. He is still active in the preaching of the word—and in sanctifying, guiding, strengthening and vitalizing believers.

3. Any evangelism, to be really successful, must be permanent in its results. To enlarge the sweep and to contribute to the permanency of our evangelistic work, I would suggest the following: (1) An increase of our evangelistic pastors. (2) A restoration of the evangelistic spirit in our church membership. (3) More emphasis upon the spiritual significance of baptism, making it in every case a definite pledge of personal and perpetual consecration. (4) The prompt enlistment of all new converts in some school for training like the Christian Endeavor society. (5) A restoration of the spiritual oversight and discipline of the church on the part of its eldership.

By E. L. Powell.

First, I believe there is a lack of the proper use of prayer in our evangelistic efforts. Many of them seem to me to be entirely too methodical. While great emphasis is to be placed on organization and machinery, the supreme emphasis should be placed upon the divine assistance as expressed in the sentiment, "Paul may plant, Apollos may water, but God alone can give the increase." Besides, the spiritual tone cannot be maintained without having constant fellowship with God in prayer. To a very large extent this would save us from the excesses of glaring advertisements and the many offensive methods of exploitation.

Second, I do not believe that we have restored in our evangelistic work the New Testament teaching concerning the Holy Spirit. It is a far richer doctrine than the average evangelist brings to the people. While it is true that the Holy Spirit in conversion operates through the truth, it is equally true that he uses a number of agencies and instrumentalities to bring men face to face with the truth. While it is true that there can be no conversion apart from the truth, I believe that there are ten thousand agencies employed by the Divine Spirit in bringing men to a recognition of that truth. Any limiting and narrowing of the work of the Spirit gives us a mechanical evangelism.

Third, I do not know that I could suggest any means to make our evangelism more successful and permanent in its results. If we could somehow combine conservatism with intense zeal, if we could be quieter in our methods and yet equally as intense in our passion for souls, if we could set our evangelism free from the suggestion of pride in numbers converted, while at the same time rejoicing in souls saved, if we could hear less of the whir and clatter of wheels and feel more the calm and majesty of the divine presence, it seems to me that more permanent results would be secured.

After all, the emphasis is to be placed upon character—spiritual life changed—rather than upon numbers that may enlist under a symbol or join an organization.

The Influence of Antioch

BY MELANCTHON MOORE

The river cannot stop at its source. It must find its way to the ocean and as it flows onward the stream becomes broader and deeper, and it proves a thing of beauty and blessing. The ocean into which it pours its waters sends back copious supplies to the fountain head of the river, and the many tributaries that flow into it.

The church of God is a mighty river, and if she stops at home or with her local work, and is not imbued with that missionary spirit that produces a broader vision and a deeper purpose, she can never become a thing of beauty or blessing to the world. Robbing her of that missionary spirit that would cause her to cease her efforts ere every creature had heard the gospel she becomes like the river that stops at its source, having received showers of blessings it selfishly withholds its benedictions from a famishing world.

The church at Antioch affords a splendid example of the true missionary spirit. Philip had preached the gospel in Samaria and baptized the Ethiopian; and Peter came to the home of Cornelius at Cæsarea and told him "all things that are commanded of God," but now for the first time in the history of Christianity two of the disciples of Jesus leave the home of Judaism with the whole world for their field. All former systems of religion had been ethnic. Confucianism was for China, Brahminism for the upper caste of the Hindu, Mohammedanism for the Turks, etc., but Christianity is for every creature.

From the time of the going forth of Saul and Barnabas from Antioch the interests of the church became twofold. There were those who stayed at home and managed her affairs, and then there were others who went into the Gentile world telling the story of the Cross. These latter gained the greater renown. Peter and James remained at Jerusalem and soon our attention is diverted from them, however faithful they may have been, and our eyes catch a vision that thrills us. It is of those who have gone abroad to tell of the risen Redeemer. Paul and his fellow-laborers visited the cities of Asia Minor, and crossing the Hellespont, waters made historic by Xerxes and Alexander centuries before, they came to the classic city of Athens, the Achaian capital, at Corinth, and various other important places in Europe.

However much we may be delighted with the zeal and grand achievements of the apostle to the Gentiles, we must not be unmindful of the sources whence came these glorious results.

In Jerusalem we behold the closing events of his life; the scene of his crucifixion, resurrection and ascension. Here, too, was the birthplace of his church. Antioch was the place where the disciples first began to wear the name of their great Captain. It was likewise the birthplace of foreign missions. The influence of Antioch still lives, and as a result we have very marked gains in every department of the church. The missionary spirit grows. Last year there was an increase of 12¼ per cent in the number of churches contributing to the support of foreign missions. Our Sunday-schools contributed $5,000 more than ever before. There was a gain of 226 contributing Endeavor societies, and seventeen new missionaries were sent into the field by the Foreign Society.

This increases the number of workers to 438, and we may truly expect greater things for this present year than we have realized from any previous one. Praise his name!

Under the Shadow of St. Paul's

By William Durban

Like my American friend, Dr. Power, I write by a mighty dome, and this article will be concerned with incidents and affairs most easily observed from that central spot where stands the "Crown of London," the cathedral of St. Paul, so familiar to multitudes of Americans.

Nearing the Revival.

In the course of a long Christian experience I have never witnessed so general a manifestation of excited anticipation as that which is preceding the commencement of the Torrey-Alexander campaign, about to open early in February in this metropolis. A few weeks ago I sent a brief account of the stir made in some other parts of the country by these two American evangelists. Their work in several great cities has been the more calculated to rouse the community because of the marvelous uprising in Wales led by Evan Roberts, the humble, unlettered coal-miner who speaks no English. The immense effect produced by both movements has drawn the surprised attention even of myriads of ungodly or indifferent worldlings in all ranks of society. Many incidents concur to emphasize the situation. For instance, it will be remembered that King Edward sent for General Booth not long since, in order to testify to him his profound admiration of the world-wide work of the Salvation Army. Last week his majesty summoned to Buckingham palace the leader and founder of the Church Army, Rev. E. Carlyle. This Church Army is but an imitation of the Salvation Army, but it has of late years moved on methods of its own, and Mr. Carlyle has accomplished immense good in the philanthropic and industrial direction. Now, our King is not a pronounced religionist. And when he goes out of his way to show special regard for men who are leading stupendous religious forces, he is unconsciously stepping into line with the overwhelming tendency of the present juncture.

Vast Preparations.

Never have there been such preparations, as well as such great expectations. The great luxurious and pampered West End of London is for the first time in all history moved to its centre by the concerted and organized efforts being made under the direction of noted clergymen as well as by eminent nonconformists. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, the most fashionable evangelical churchman in the whole British empire, is himself training a band of many hundreds of high-class ladies and gentlemen to act as workers in the enquiry rooms after the great Albert Hall meetings. Hundreds of the men will be stewards. And a choir of 3,000 voices is also in training. This will be the most thoroughly mixed band of plebeian and patrician religious vocalists ever assembled on earth. It will include ladies of title, bankers, merchants, shopmen, dressmakers and milliners, servant girls, tradesmen, railway porters and guards and stokers, clerks, postmen and policemen, as well as laborers and cabdrivers. The "glory song" will soon be taking the place in every street all day long of the music hall vulgarities and inanities. One of the most notable signs of the coming commotion is the hiring for noonday meetings of the great hall of Cannon street hotel. That is the spot near London bridge where the most important business company meetings are held. Here every noontide for some weeks there will be a throng of city merchants and clerks gathered for prayer and praise and to listen to fervent exhortation. And in several suburbs the largest assembly halls available will be used daily for branch revival organizations. The air is full of the feeling of expectation that mighty works are about to be accomplished.

Undenominationalism or Interdenominationalism?

No Christian mind can be otherwise than sympathetic with a movement which promises a vast awakening. But it does not follow that infallible wisdom is characteristic of even the most fervent human leaders. Dr. Torrey is producing some amount of anxiety on the part of the most thoughtful Christian people by his indiscriminate denunciation of things iniquitous and things venial. It is, of course, welcome and refreshing to hear his Puritan message, for it is sorely needed in an age of materialistic indulgence, when "society" is waxing fat and selfish. But a narrow and harsh Puritanism is always apt to create a strong revulsion which defeats its own aims. The good Doctor has from Liverpool hurled anathemas at London society for its indulgence in indolence, profligacy and gaiety. He goes so far, however, as to condemn not only all theatricals, and all card games, but also smoking. His specifications of evil are producing indignant remonstrances which I notice come chiefly from really religious people. Dr. Torrey says he knows what he is talking about because he was "the best poker player in his university." He has gone through the mire. He has measured the bog with his own steps. I cannot help contrasting this kind of declamatory accent with that of other genuine modern Puritans, such as Spurgeon and Moody. They were decided in their denunciations, but were never promiscuous and unjust. C. H. Spurgeon would not have agreed with Torrey, for instance, in coupling smoking with gambling and profligacy. Indeed, he rose on a famous Sunday evening after a most emphatic censure by Dr. Pentecost of smokers and smoking, and acknowledged that often in pain and weariness he had been able to secure repose by the use of a cigar, and so he had "smoked to the glory of God." I myself know nothing about the flavor of tobacco. I have never smoked a single whiff in my whole life, but however incongruous the fact may seem to be, I am bound to testify that some of my most beloved and revered Christian friends and fellow-workers have been and are very inveterate smokers. I am glad that the tobacco habit is largely falling into desuetude amongst preachers. Nevertheless, I fear that, by including it amongst the things to be condemned as actually iniquitous, Dr. Torrey will fail to produce the most desired effect and will blunt the edge of his denunciation of evils of the first magnitude.

A Brilliant Autobiography.

I turn to things literary. As I have been looking through the two volumes of the Autobiography of Moncure Daniel Conway, just published, I can not refrain from alluding to this fascinating record of a wonderful life. For wonderful indeed have been the experiences of this brilliant Anglo-American. There is sadness in the reflection that so talented a man has wasted his fine abilities by his transit from evangelicalism to rationalism. Conway was a Methodist minister, but gravitated to free thought. He was born in Virginia at Falmouth. His description of his early home will delight American readers. He was reared where humming birds flitted and fireflies danced, in the slave days of 70 years ago, when Baptists, Methodists and Calvinists contended ardently for their respective orthodoxies. This Virginian lad tells a profoundly interesting story of the events of those days in the region where he grew up. He became a Methodist minister, traveled far and wide, lapsed into Unitarianism, made acquaintance with an amazing number of distinguished men and women in every part of America and Europe, and in a truly charming manner describes his impressions of men and things, dwelling little on his mere personal sentiments or convictions. The book is like a kaleidoscope, producing fascinating effects in each chapter because of its romantic and realistic reminiscences. The pages produce a mixed feeling. That such a man could turn his back on evangelical Christianity and embrace neology is an enigma altogether insoluble, and the writer does nothing towards its solution. Probably, as I say, it is essentially incapable of solution.

Letters from a Retired Minister

From the Rev. Dr. William Prentice, D. D., at Los Angeles to his nephew, the Rev. Will Westbrook Prentice, who has lately become the minister of the First church at Belleview. Young Prentice in a recent letter to his uncle mentioned some books he had just purchased, and also hinted at a change he thought of making in his boarding place.

Los Angeles, Dec. 16, 19—.

My Dear Nephew:—I have just expressed to you a box of books from my own shelves. I happen to know your ambition to possess a good library and am thankful I can give you an occasional lift in that direction. Every one of those books has a history, Will. My library grew very slowly. They came, the books did, usually singly, but coming so I appreciated them the more. That volume of "Horne's Introduction" I fairly hugged all the way home from a book store. And how I did feast on its meaty pages! Of course it is a bit antiquated now, but it well deserves room on the preacher's shelves. And that set of MacKnight's, right well do I recollect the day it came securely boxed. That was the day Willis was born; the day that his mother went down into the valley of the shadow and lingered there. That box stood in the back hall for all of three long weeks of anxious watching. Somehow I always associated these books with the mother and the lad, and when I took them down from the shelf yesterday their faces came between me and the volumes. How it tried our souls when the lad slipped away from us! I like to think of him and his mother now reunited on the other side. Paul's doctrine of the soul's immediate transition into Christ's presence is very full of comfort. Yes, I think I could write a long letter with nothing else in it but reminiscences called up by each of those old volumes. I had an ambition in those days to get together a fine collection of books. I used to dream of a time when I could have a study literally lined from floor to ceiling with such treasures. But a collection of books as an end is poor business for the preacher to be in. I wasn't long finding that out. I soon learned that a book dropped in a home here and there would accomplish vastly more good than to remain on my shelves. Some books you would better start out on such missionary work as soon as you read them. Others you'd better tie to as long as you can. I suppose I have given away a half-thousand volumes in my ministry, maybe more, and I've never regretted it. To this day I never go into a fine library that I don't feel like Cromwell must have felt when he beheld the silver statues of the apostles, and exclaimed, "Melt these, and send them about their Master's business."

The books that go on your shelves to stay ought to be mighty solid ones. They ought to weigh well. Personally I never thought much of books of sermon skeletons and illustrations. The skeletons in a good many preacher's closets are of this kind. A man who draws often from such a boneyard needn't appear surprised if he doesn't draw an audience. Milton says somewhere that "books are not absolutely dead things." Evidently the poet wasn't acquainted with the kind I am alluding to. For that's exactly what they are "absolutely dead things." But I guess I've said enough about books for this one time. I feel pretty sure that you will let quality count in your library as well as elsewhere.

I noted what you said in your last letter about taking a more modern suite of rooms. And I suggest that you keep an eye on your finances. I believe you are getting $2,000. Sounds pretty big to a fellow who has been getting but half as much. But I predict you won't be long finding out that a city preacher has no very big thing at a $2,000 a year salary. To be candid I don't suppose you'll ever be without financial problems unless you marry a rich wife and I've noticed that a few who have done that contracted "preacher's sore throat," and had to give up public speaking. According to my way of thinking the preacher who does marry a moneyed wife and keeps right on declaring the whole counsel of God, is worth his weight in gold.

Preachers as a class have been charged with improvidence. "Poor business sense," they say. But I shouldn't be surprised if God ranks them (at any rate their wives) as "Captains of Industry." Not very many of them are experts at keeping a bank book nicely balanced the right way. They don't get the chance. But most of them keep their books with God pretty straight. I think you ought to be saving all you can right now. By and by there may be a wife, and then by and by maybe something else, and you'll need more money than you'll have. Take out as much life insurance as you can carry without burdening yourself. But don't do any of these things at the expense of your duties to God's cause. Tithe your income, Will. The setting aside of a tenth for the Lord's cause is the solution of all the church's financial ills. Nothing is giving me more genuine pleasure in my declining years than the increasing practice of this righteous standard of giving. The truth is, Will, as a whole the church's credit isn't gilt edged. It has no Bradstreet rating. It ought to have and it will have when God's people begin generally to render unto him that which is his own. So I say tithe your income. It is time for judgment to begin with the preacher.

By the way, before I close I want to call your attention to the volume entitled "Norwood," by Mr. Beecher, which is among the books I shipped you. The great preacher himself gave me that book. Note the inscription on the second fly leaf and also the corrections by his own hand on pages 108 and 118. Affectionately your uncle,

William Prentice.

READS THE BOOK

"The Road to Wellville" Pointed the Way.

Down at Hot Springs, Ark., the visitors have all sorts of complaints, but it is a subject of remark that the great majority of them have some trouble with stomach and bowels. This may be partly attributed to the heavy medicines.

Naturally, under the conditions, the question of food is very prominent.

A young man states that he had suffered for nine years from stomach and bowel trouble, had two operations which did not cure, and was at last threatened with appendicitis.

He went to Hot Springs for rheumatism and his stomach trouble got worse. One day at breakfast the waiter, knowing his condition, suggested he try Grape-Nuts and cream, which he did, and found the food agreed with him perfectly.

After the second day he began to sleep peacefully at night, different than he had for years. The perfect digestion of the food quieted his nervous system and made sleep possible.

He says: "The next morning I was astonished to find my condition of constipation had disappeared. I could not believe it true after suffering for so many years; then I took more interest in the food, read the little book 'The Road to Wellville,' and started following the simple directions.

"I have met with such results that in the last five weeks I have gained eight pounds in spite of hot baths which take away the flesh from anyone.

"A friend of mine has been entirely cured of a bad case of indigestion and stomach trouble by using Grape-Nuts Food and cream alone for breakfast.

"There is one thing in particular—I have noticed a great change in my mental condition. Formerly I could hardly remember anything, and now the mind seems unusually acute and retentive. I can memorize practically anything I desire." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Our Work in Jubbulpore.

By Geo. W. Brown.

Jubbulpore is the second largest city in the central provinces of India. It is the geographical center of our work. Nagpur, far to the south, is the capital of the central provinces. It contains about 20,000 more inhabitants than Jubbulpore. Being the official residence of the chief commissioner and the higher officials of the province during the most of the year, Nagpur is in some ways the more important of the two places. But the capitals of all the provinces of India, indeed the imperial capital as well, are migratory. The general government has headquarters at Calcutta in the cool season, and the other half of the year at Simla The chief commissioner of our provinces has an official residence in Pachmari, in the hills 150 miles from here, which is our capital during the hottest part of the year. He has another residence in Jubbulpore, which thus becomes his capital for another part of the year.

But in some other respects this city is a very important one. Several thousand troops are located here, between the railway and the Nerbudda river, two or three miles to the south of the native city. Lately an immense gun carriage factory, which will supply gun carriages for all the artillery of the 400,000 troops which compose the Indian army, has been begun here. Fifteen thousand people at the least, will be added to the population of the city through this one industry alone. There is a large factory for the manufacture of tiles, drain pipes, and earthenware of that type, which also employs a large number. As the city is almost in the center of India there seems to be a policy to bring a great many things here, and make this a great military depot for all India. Along with this, the city is important from a commercial standpoint.

The occupying of this city is no doubt a wise move on the part of our Foreign Board. All the other stations occupied by us in India are comparatively small places, having from 8,000 to 20,000 inhabitants. It is true that each of them is the center of a populous agricultural region where we can and do have thousands to listen to the preaching of the word. But now that we are growing, it seems necessary that we have at least one station located centrally, in some large city, where certain lines of work can be centralized. So it has been decided that our Indian Bible school shall be located there. We hope soon to add a printing press to our work there. There are about 100,000 people in Jubbulpore to whom the word may be preached. As yet we are doing nothing in this line of work.

There are at present three missions at work in Jubbulpore. The church of England, the American Methodists and the English Wesleyans. Nearly 20 years ago some of our missionaries did come here and prepare to open a work. But they decided not to remain here, and went into the Bilaspur region, where two stations, with several flourishing outstations and over 400 baptized believers, stand forth as the fruits of their labors. Ever since that time there has been more or less talking and planning in regard to our re-entering the place, but until the present season it did not seem advisable to do so. Chief among the obstacles has always been our lack of missionaries to open up new fields.

At the convention last March, it was decided that the new Bible college and mission press should be located in Jubbulpore. For two years we have had a small training class of young men who are being prepared to preach the gospel. For the current year there is a prospect of several promising new students, so that it seemed that we might take a work into this central city which would be worthy of the mission. We are also planning to issue our Sunday-school and C. E. literature, and for this purpose the new station seemed to be ideal. So the writer was instructed to remove to Jubbulpore, rent a house there, transfer the work of his training class to his new home, and be on the lookout for a suitable permanent location for the work of the mission. Accordingly, the 22d of July saw us unloading our goods from the train in the midst of a heavy rain. For about a month it hardly stopped raining long enough for us to get a glimpse of the sun, but we got our house in order—that is, in as good order as it is possible for missionaries ordinarily to enjoy—and began our work.

Our students began work on the 1st of August. The bungalow has connected with it a number of one room cottages, I suppose we might possibly call them, which were built for the servants connected with the bungalow. Really, they are nothing more than a long row of mud huts, with tile roofs, each about 14 feet square inside, built in the fashion of a barrack. The walls are whitewashed, the floor is left bare. The roof is more or less leaky, as is usually the case with a common tile roof. But these are the typical houses of the country.

Into such houses as I have mentioned, we have placed our young men. I hope soon to have a much larger class. There are now a number of young men in the mission who are axious to enter the class, but we are compelled to defer accepting them for a little time.

In addition to the works referred to above, we are expecting to do regular bazar preaching and Sunday-school work. To have Sunday-schools, we must first provide places for them to meet. We hope in a short time to be prepared for all these things.

Some Facts About Chu Cheo.

By W. Remfry Hunt.

Chu Cheo is a wicked heathen city. It contributes its full quota to the dark night of Asia. Fifteen years of hard labor in and around its grim walls has let in some light. The village churches that surround it are as lone stars in the gloom. Our experiences, sorrows, triumphs and achievements only spur us on to greater things. Homeless, loveless, cruel, filthy, godless and lost, its masses live and die in sin. Temples abound and legions of vulgar priesthood deceive these "other sheep" with the will-o'-the-wisp lights of pagan creation. Cold, lacking soul life tearless in its sorrows and joyless in its pleasures, heathenism is an awful thing. Goodness and truth are its absent quantities, despair is its resultant condition, and death is its total fact. It is the "dead march" of Asia.

Wearied and burdened, yet not cast down, we stand on platform and street, in palace and tent, prison and school; and while preaching to them the wonderful love of God, we are too oft pained to see that they and their leaders are "vain in their imaginations and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise they became fools; and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into images of men, birds, beasts and creeping things . . exchanging the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature rather than the Creator," until

"Black it stood as night,
Fierce as ten furies, terrible as hell!"

On the Yangtze, as on the Ganges, the Chinese as well as the Hindoo girls make from a shell a little boat and at feast days place in these small lamps and offerings to the gods, and launch it at night on the cold dark river. Should it float away with the light still shining the omen is propitious; if it sinks it is ill-fated.

So along the highways of the mighty Yangtze river and up its many rivulets to Tsung Ming, Nankin, Chu Cheo, Wuhu, Lu Cheo Fu and on to Bo Cheo, and surrounding its cities, mosques, tombs, and markets, we are kindling little lamps. Into the care of him who is the bright and morning star, we commit our testimonies and believe that its offerings, sacrifices and the incense of its prayers will woo and guide them to millennial shores.

Seven sound, solid and consecrated native evangelists with one Bible woman assist the missionaries. Within twenty miles of each gate in the city are village churches and missions. They work hard. My oversight of the preachers and outstations, classes, conferences, itinerations, daily preaching, meetings with enquirers and special work with the students is generously shared with Dr. Osgood. In his medical work and in the school he is greatly encouraged. We are surrounded with heathen homes. The Chinese hieroglyphic for home means "pigsty." No one would deny its orthodoxy. Gross and sensual in their idolatries, they fear we have almost miraculous powers. We are not hated less, but we have the grace sufficient. If God did not empower us as well as appoint us to this service, we should be overwhelmed. Our Christian homes are the lights that do not fail.

A man who ten years since told me if we stayed here a hundred years we should not boast a single convert recently asked baptism. The once fiercest opponent of the work in Yu-Ho-Tsz is now the happy wife of Evangelist Shi. The only idol temple in the village has fallen into decay. Little Love, whom Mrs. Shi saved from drowning, is a bright girl in Miss Lyon's school. The second village church is dedicated and furnished in Kwan Wei. The churches there give Mr. Shi an ovation on his sixtieth birthday. Our local conferences this year raised $120, and out of it paid half the pastor's salary. There is growth, grace and strength in all the outstations. The work was never so hard and never so full of joy. It is a unique time to co-operate with God.

In pestilential cities, in inns, preaching till midnight, among unlovely people, squalor, vices, healing the sick and telling the sweet story of God's love, we would lean on your prayers. New and superior movements all over China are affecting us. The leaders among the Chinese are stating that the gospel is superior to all other faiths and forces. Word comes from Peking that the Empress Dowager gives $7,250 (gold) for a union medical college in Peking. Christianity is repeating in Chu Cheo the same challenge that was thrown down before Roman and Hindoo, Greek and Mohammedan. But we cannot do exploits without your aid. Like the tired armies of Napoleon who were cheered to heroic action by the martial music of the Marseillaise, so we too, on the far-flung battle line of missionary conflict, look for your signals and listen to your commands! Shall we reach on to Feng Yang Fu and Nan-Sieu Cheo? Is the mighty animus that moved the early church ours to-day? Oh, that God would move the great brotherhood to give as he gave! Your missionaries are counting on a great March offering. High on the uplands of prayer, deep in the valley of humility, lifted on the cross of self-sacrifice, bowing by the graves of our sainted dead—sealed with their martyrdoms of love, we plead with you to share with us in this blessed service.

"Leaning on Omnipotence, on God,
Weak in thyself, but all possessed in him;
Make thou thy purpose known to go far hence,
And bear to heathen lands the wealth of Christ."

Chu Cheo, China.

Our Budget

—Greetings from 2712 Pine street.

—In spite of the intense cold, great meetings are being held, and thousands are being converted.

—Preparations for the March offering should now begin in earnest.

—Now that we are newly quartered, we hope to begin a more active and vigorous campaign, and we wish all our friends to co-operate with us in the work of extending our circulation in all the churches.

—The Religious Education Association is meeting in Boston this week, with a fine program. A meeting of extraordinary interest is anticipated.

—The Anti-Saloon League movement is taking on new strength, and organizing itself for an aggressive crusade against the saloons in Missouri. Rev. Samuel I. Lindsay is the state superintendent. It is a movement that deserves the active and hearty support of the churches, and of all well-wishers of mankind.

—The Monday morning ministers' meeting was held in the new quarters of the Christian Publishing Co., on February 13. The paper was read by J. L. Brandt, of the First church, on "The Dead-Line," followed by an interesting discussion. Resolutions were unanimously passed concerning the Anti-Saloon League, endorsing its work and pledging it our moral support, and recommending it and its newly elected superintendent, Rev. Samuel I. Lindsay, to the churches of the state and to the financial support of all interested in the suppression of the saloon.

—A song that is stirring Great Britain just now was written by one of our brethren. Bro. Charles M. Fillmore, pastor of our church at Carthage, O., and secretary of the National Christian Bible school Association is the author. Mr. Alexander, the singer, who is associated with Dr. Torrey, has this week been singing it in the great Albert Hall, London. In another column will be found some particulars of how he came to do this.

—Oscar W. Riley has become minister of the Second church at Washington, Pa.

—The evangelistic campaign in Cleveland, Ohio, reported 315 additions at last report.

—It is hoped to begin some of the work on a new church building at Kissimmee, Fla., at once.

—A. P. Wright, of Boise, Idaho, takes charge at once of the newly established church at Monrovia, Cal.

—The brethren at Mt. Carmel have had a great meeting with S. M. Martin, and are planning to enlarge their house.

—See notice of our congress to meet at Columbia, Mo., March 21-23. It will be a great meeting. Plan to be there.

—T. J. Harris has changed his pastorate from Martindale to Huntsville, Texas, one of the educational centers of that state.

—G. F. Bradford, pastor, will not leave Eureka, Kan., as stated, but will remain another year at an increase in salary.

—A. W. Jeffress, a western Illinois Disciple, has just given our National Benevolent Association $1,000 on the annuity plan.

—Claude E. Hill, our minister at Mobile, Ala., reports the death of his sister there last week. She was a devoted member of the church.

—"The last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from its old house was one of the best. May it prosper in its new house!"—E. J. LAMPTON.

—A. E. Zeigler has resigned as minister of the First church at Wheeling, W. Va. He is an excellent man, and some good church will get a good preacher.

—J. W. Dickinson, of Illinois, is spending the winter in Pensacola, Florida. He will make a special effort to assist the weak church at Pensacola to get on its feet.

—W. B. Crewdson will assist W. T. Fisher in a missionary rally at Clarinda, Iowa. This is an all-round missionary rally, at which all of our varied interests are presented.

—The Transcontinental association is to hold a meeting at Chicago, Ill., this week, when the question of rates to our national convention will be definitely and finally settled.

—Louisville, Ky., is to have a union meeting, which was inaugurated Feb. 12. Brother Powell writes that it is probable W. J. Wright, the superintendent of evangelism among us, will take part.

—G. W. Nutter, recently of Aberdeen, Miss., has accepted a call to the Parkland church, Louisville, Ky., and is already at work. There were three additions the first day of his pastorate.

—Bro. J. G. M. Luttenberger, who has been studying medicine with the hope that he might one day go to Germany as a missionary, has received permission to practice from the Missouri State Board.

—The new Christian church now being built at Parsons, Kansas, promises to be a very admirable one in every respect. It is estimated to hold about 1,200 people, all together, and the cost will be $22,500.

—The members of our church who have just reorganized to begin holding services at Minonk, Ill., after being idle for six years, number only from 20 to 25 people, but hope by means of organization to accomplish a good deal.

—A. M. Growden has accepted a call to become pastor of the church at Carbondale, Ill., beginning work March 1. There is a fine aggressive membership, and church property worth $30,000. The State Normal is also located here.

—Mr. S. T. Campbell, a grand-nephew of Alexander Campbell, and his wife, have joined the Christian church in the fine meeting just held by Bruce Brown, at Mansfield. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell were members of the Episcopal church.

—F. Elmo Robinson closes his work at The Dalles, Oregon, March 1, to accept a unanimous call to the pastorate of the church at Vancouver, Wash. Brother and Sister Handsaker will assist the pastor in a meeting at The Dalles this month.

—Sumner T. Martin's engagement with the southern California missionary society will terminate in July. He will be open to hold meetings or locate as pastor after that date. His present address is 226 Mulberry street, Riverside, California.

—E. H. Cary took hold of the work at LeRoy, Ill., last October. The church had been without a pastor for several months, but Brother Cary has thoroughly organized the workers, and the outlook is very promising. Aggressive plans are being made.

—The Board of Ministerial Relief recently received a gift of $300 to the permanent fund from "A friend of the 'old Guard.'" Brother Orcutt says, "This is one of the ways to live and labor on earth after you have gone to live with the redeemed in the other world."

—William M. Bobbitt, of Emporia, Kansas, is one of those faithful ministers of the gospel who also work with their hands. He has built two houses which he is ready to sell at a fair price to devote the proceeds to the Lord's work. Anyone desiring a home in Emporia would do well to correspond with him.

—Marion Stevenson, of Irving Park, Chicago, gave his Bible lectures last week, for the churches in Galena, Ill., under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

[By Telegraph.]

—TERRE HAUTE, IND, Feb. 12.—Two hundred sixty-two to date; greater crowds; greater interest and more conversions than in union meetings, with eight evangelists. Close Wednesday. Winchester, Ill., next.—WILSON AND LINTT, evangelists.

—J. K. Hester is evangelizing in southern California, and anxious to go to Prescott, Arizona, and organize a church. There are 24 members of the Christian church residing in Prescott who are known, and it is hoped a larger number may be found when our home missionary society is able to send a missionary there to organize them.

—The ministerial institute of southwest Missouri will convene May 2-4 at Monett. W. J. Lhamon, of Columbia, will deliver three lectures, and there will be other interesting and helpful features. Work in that section of the state will receive discussion by the ministers themselves. Joseph Gaylor, of Springfield, is president of the institute.

—Sumner T. Martin, Riverside, Cal., asks us to state that he will furnish his tract on "Proportionate and Systematic Giving, or Financing the Kingdom," to all who desire it at the following rates: per copy, 5cts; per dozen, 50cts; per 100, $3. This is a strong presentation of the subject of tithing our incomes.

—W. J. Wright has been assisting in a series of union meetings in Kansas City. When the converts came to the front he took their confessions just as in our own churches. People who were of the other churches were delighted with Brother Wright and his service, and also with the work of J. M. Rudy, who had charge of another section of the city. The statement was made that our ministers preached the broadest, clearest and least sectarian gospel of any that assisted in the meetings. About 100 came forward during the two weeks of Brother Wright's service. Following the union meetings Brother Wright is assisting Brother W. F. Richardson in a special campaign.

—S. R. Hawkins, special evangelist of the Columbus, Indiana, church in the American Christian Missionary Society, and corresponding secretary for Indian Territory, reports a journey through the northern part of the Territory lasting six weeks, which he thinks will result in the organization of five new churches. The Territory is developing very rapidly and we ought to put $5,000 a year in missionary effort there.

—Bro. Luther H. Rice, one of the proprietors of the Columbia Statesman and a member of our church in that center of education, reports that the church is getting along nicely under Brother Winders' ministry. A balcony is being now added to the auditorium, and several Sunday-school rooms in the basement. This will increase the seating capacity nearly one third. These repairs will cost nearly $5,000, but are deemed necessary on account of the growth of the membership. Services in the meantime have been held in the Christian College auditorium.

—We regret deeply to record the death of James A. Leslie, one of the oldest members of the Christian church. Brother Leslie never missed, we believe, one of our conventions. He was in St. Louis in October, and soon after was taken sick. But he was able to be at the Central Christian church, Cincinnati, with which he had always been prominently identified, on new year's day. His wife was one of the inaugurators of the C. W. B. M. We hope to publish fuller particulars of this noble man of God, who was faithful in every good word and work.

—The church at Sterling Place, Brooklyn, raised during the last year about $6,000. Its annual report from the various departments showed encouraging growth. The increase for the year was 10 per cent gross, and 7 per cent net. The pastor, M. E. Harlan, has adopted an innovation in offering prizes for the best answers to a number of questions which he is sending out, relating to church fellowship, industrial problems, the home problem, the Sunday problem, the problem of amusements, and the liquor problem. These answers will doubtless furnish abundant homiletic material.

—A tour of western and southern Europe is being arranged to sail from New York, July 1, by the Red Star line steamer Zeeland. The party will travel in Belgium, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, France, and England, being absent through the months of July and August. The cost, including all expenses, will be about $300. Bro. Charles Forster, pastor of the church of Christ at West Pawlet, Vermont, would be glad to hear from ten or more Disciples who would like to join the party. With the exception of the conductor, Brother Forster desires to make this a Disciples' party.

—Robt. Pegrum, of Revere, Mass., is to supply the pulpit of the Christian church at Swampscott, Mass., while Bro. W. H. Rogers is in the field, canvassing in the interest of the church. Brother Pegrum was formerly pastor of a Baptist church in New York, and of another in Connecticut. He has recently been teaching Christian doctrine and church history in the Boston Evangelical Institute. He writes that he desires to secure a pastorate among the Disciples of Christ. He appears to be a scholarly man, capable of doing a permanent work in the ministry. We hope that some church in need of a pastor will correspond with Brother Pegrum, at 140 Shirley Ave., Revere, Mass.

—The East Side church at Dallas, Tex., of which Brother Ford is pastor, has unanimously adopted the tithing system. Bro. W. L. Swinney, of Abilene, Tex., writes: "My work here is constantly enlarging. I am busy in the Lord's work, and am very happy. Most of the official board are tithers, and several others besides." This is the kind of word that is coming to us from different parts of the country. The brethren are weary of the old methods, and of no method, of money-raising, and are falling back on this simple, straightforward, honest, biblical plan of dividing profits with the Lord, and giving to him 10 per cent of their net income, as the least they would be justified in giving for the support of the Lord's work.

—We have a letter from Bro. Hartzell Cobbs, of Genesee, Idaho, in which, referring to a statement of Brother Hoffmann, that Bro. Thos Abrams is our oldest preacher, he calls attention to the fact that his grandfather, John Schaeffer, who began his ministry in the Lutheran church at an early age, and came into the Christian church through the influence of his brother-in-law, Jonas Hartzell, at about the age of 26, and who for many years actively engaged in the ministry, was born Nov. 22, 1805, in Westmoreland county, Pa. He lives at North Benton, Ohio, and is "remarkably clear in mind, showing very few of the weaknesses of old age." If Brother Schaeffer lives until Nov. 22 next, he will be a centenarian. A man whose lifetime stretches across a century, in this country, has been contemporary with a large amount of most important history.

—Bro. W. H. Rogers is meeting with encouraging success in his earnest efforts to lift the mortgage on the Swampscott (Mass.) church property, and put that church on its feet again. Swampscott, as many of our readers know, is one of the suburbs of Boston, a resort by the seaside, a beautiful little city, where a good, strong church will exert a wide influence in New England. Brother Rogers desires to secure the full amount necessary for paying the mortgage by April 19, which is an anniversary of the church, at which time they hope to burn the mortgage. It is designed to make the occasion a notable one, so as to sound out a note of triumph throughout all that New England region. He has already raised over two thousand dollars, and is out after the remainder. He says: "We have done so well that we must succeed; that is, we must not be allowed to fail after having got so far along. Our jubilee is going to be a grand opportunity to give a message; to make an impression; to start out on a new era here in New England." Such energy, consecration, and enthusiasm deserve to succeed.

—A tragedy occurred in our church circles of this city last week which cast a shadow of sadness over all our hearts. Brother Martin McFarland, who has been in the city for some time, preaching across the river at Granite City, and other places, and who recently had been preaching for the Second church, on 11th and Tyler streets, was found dead, in the basement of the building that he had rented, where in a moment of mental aberration, caused by ill health, he had taken his life by hanging himself. Brother McFarland had suffered two strokes of paralysis, and was in fear of the third. It is believed that this led to the despondency which caused him to terminate his life. The funeral services took place in the Fourth church, of which his son, E. T. McFarland, is pastor, and were conducted by Bro. W. D. Pittman. Several other of our ministers participated. A large concourse of sorrowing and sympathetic friends was present on the occasion. Much sympathy is expressed for our Brother E. T. McFarland, and his brother, Claude McFarland, also a minister, and for the other members of the family of the deceased. Brother McFarland was fifty-one years of age, and leaves a family of eight sons and daughters.

—The St. Louis ministers' meeting which met in the old quarters at 1522 Locust street for the last time on Monday, Feb. 6, was occupied almost wholly with the reports of work from the various churches during the past month. Bro. J. M. Philputt, of the Union avenue church, reported seven added during the month, three by baptism. A chorus choir has been made the feature of the evening service. Brother Brandt, of the First church, reported six added during the month, three by baptism. His preaching has been along the line of individual soul winning. Bro. Ireland, of the Carondelet church, reported seven additions during the month, five by baptism. Brother McFarland reported six added at the Fourth church, three by baptism. He has been preaching between Sundays at Alton, where there have been forty additions, thirty by baptism. He continues the meeting and a church is to be organized. Brother Calvin, of Compton Heights church, reported 32 added during January, 12 by baptism. Brother Mayhall reported a two weeks' meeting at the Hamilton avenue church with 21 additions, 16 by baptism. Hammett Place church reported through its pastor, Brother Moore, 15 added, 12 by baptism. The other churches were not represented, and we have no report from them, but it is probable that there were over 100 additions during the month of January, not including the meeting at Alton. Bro. F. G. Tyrrell has been for several weeks delivering a series of sermon-lectures in one of the halls of the Odeon, which he says is attracting a class of hearers outside of the regular church-goers. It was voted to extend an invitation to ministers of the Baptist churches of this city to meet with our preachers at a time and place to be agreed upon. The purpose is to cultivate more fraternal relations with these brethren.

—Bro. J. H. Berkey, formerly of Monroe, Wis., but more recently of Marionville, Mo., near which place he had located on a fruit farm, has been called to return to the church at Monroe, under the following unique conditions: During the five years he was pastor there, he cultivated the good will of other religious bodies, and especially of the Baptists, who have a church about the size of our own. Both churches had a struggle to maintain themselves, and recently the matter of union between the two congregations was agitated. The outcome of it was an agreement of the churches to unite, provided Brother Berkey would return and become pastor of the united congregation. His reply was, "If you will all go into this movement with one mind and one spirit, that is, the Lord Jesus Christ, 'yesterday to-day, and forever,' I will come and cast in my lot with you, and I believe that the Lord will bless us." He proposes to leave the salary wholly to the church, believing they will do what is right. They accepted his proposition, and extended him an official call. He is now arranging his affairs as rapidly as possible to return to Monroe to take up this work. In a letter to us, detailing these facts, he says: "I firmly believe that God is in this work." Something of the spirit of Brother Berkey may be inferred from this additional sentence in his letter: "I have just read your recent editorial, 'A Supreme Advantage of the New Evangelism.' It is pure gold, and is in perfect harmony with the thought I have been trying to press for a number of years." We are sure our readers will rejoice with us at this exemplification of the practicability of union between Baptists and ourselves. There are hundreds of places, no doubt, in which local congregations might thus unite greatly to the religious welfare of the communities.

Letter From Brother Wharton.

Dear Brother Garrison:—It has been in my heart for some time to send you a message of loving greeting. And possibly through you I might send a like message to many of my personal friends and friends of the Master whom we love and together serve.

To spend a year as I did among the churches and brethren advocating the cause I had the honor to represent was a great privilege, but to receive the welcome and response that so generally and so generously were given me fills me with constant praise to God. The hearty response that came from so many for the establishing of our Bible college in India, makes me want to send to all these dear friends the loveliest bouquet of flowers that the orient produces. I wish to thank them again for their loving gifts to this truly great enterprise.

We are on the ground. The city has been selected in which our college is to be built. Jubbulpore is the second largest city in the Central Provinces. If those who have given money to make this work a possibility could see the need of such a work, as it looms up before the missionaries here, they would wish that they had been called to this benevolence sooner. I feel to thank God for the prospect before us. It is as bright as the promises of God.

Let the brethren know that the work is already under way. Bro. G. W. Brown has made a fine beginning. He is a graduate of Hiram college and a spiritual and efficient leader of good repute. Praise God for such missionaries. He and Mrs. Brown and their son, Norman, are making a comfortable home for me.

The news from America is thrilling with encouragement. The great convention in St. Louis, the splendid movements for still greater evangelism in the future, the increased spirit of unity among all Christians, the manifest presence and power of God among his people, the love and enthusiasm of the brethren, all combine to fill the hearts of all workers, both at home and abroad, with new and determined zeal for the Master.

I also wish to thank you and the brethren for your very kindly appreciation of my little writing in behalf of the use of the tithe system. Your editorial is a sufficient reward for my labor. May the good Father richly bless you in your continued labor of love.

Yours most lovingly,
G. L. Wharton.

Jubbulpore, C. P., India, Jan. 6, 1905.

The Disciples' Congress, Columbia, Mo., March 21 to 23.

The people of Columbia will extend a hearty welcome to all who attend the coming congress. Lodging and breakfast will be provided free as at other sessions. Dinner and supper can be obtained at hotels and restaurants near by for the nominal price of twenty-five to thirty-five cents.

Special attention is called to the date as above given. Through an unfortunate series either of clerical or typographical errors the correct dates have not as yet appeared. On Monday evening, March 20, the Missouri Christian Lectureship will hold a session, and upon Tuesday, March 21, the congress will begin its sessions at 9 o'clock A. M.

All who expect to attend either the lectureship or congress are requested to send their names to C. H. Winders so that as far as possible all assignments can be made before delegates arrive. Our advices indicate an unusually large attendance.

We are especially fortunate in having as our outside speaker President Henry C. King, of Oberlin college, than whom perhaps no man to-day in America is wielding a larger and more wholesome influence in Christian thought and education. President King will deliver two addresses as follows: "The Central Significance of Jesus" and "The Fundamental Factors of Spiritual Life."

It is probable that the new building of the Bible college of Missouri will be dedicated at the time of the congress and it will be a great pleasure to the brethren who have promoted this enterprise to have so many of our distinguished representatives present.

Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Moore, of Christian College, are planning some sort of pleasant surprise for the congress.

The University of Missouri is interested in our meeting. Pres. R. H. Jesse will deliver an address of welcome, and students as well as teachers will doubtless attend the sessions in large numbers. Watch for forthcoming complete program. Chas. M. Sharpe, Sec.

Chinese Entertainment.

There was a very unique and interesting occasion at the First church in this city on Tuesday evening of last week. The First church, under the direction of Sister Brandt, the pastor's wife, is conducting a Chinese Sunday-school which now numbers about fifty pupils. These Chinese pupils decided to give a dinner to their teachers, and all the ministers of the city and their wives, and to other invited guests, on the occasion of the celebration of their new year. A splendid repast was spread, consisting of several courses, many of them distinctly Chinese, and all prepared and furnished by the Chinese pupils. After-dinner speeches were made by Geo. L. Snively, general secretary of the Benevolent Association, by Mr. Babbitt, Chinese commissioner, by Ex-Gov. C. P. Johnson, who is recognized as a friend of the Chinese in their legal troubles in this city, and by the editor of this paper. Bro. John L. Brandt, pastor of the church, acted as toastmaster of the occasion. Following this part of the program, in the parlors above, was an entertainment given by the Chinese Sunday-school in the main auditorium below, which was witnessed by an audience that filled the building. The entertainment consisted of songs in both Chinese and English, and scripture recitations, and a Chinese orchestra by some of the Chinese boys. It is remarkable what progress these Chinese pupils have made in English during the short time they have been studying it. One of the most striking features of the entertainment was a solo by a little Chinese tot under three years old, every word of which was distinctly uttered and heard by the audience. Two other Chinese children, a little older, sang "The Holy City" in a most extraordinary manner, considering their age. The whole affair was very creditable, and impressed us all with the value of mission work among the Chinese in this country, and also with the value of foreign mission work. Sister Brandt and her teachers deserve great credit for the labor they have bestowed on this school, and we sincerely hope that the outcome of it all may be a Chinese Christian church in this city. We see no reason why this should not be done, as a part of our missionary work among the foreign population in this country. The entertainment closed with a few remarks to the Chinese, through an interpreter, by Brother Brandt, a brief word in addition by Ex-Governor Johnson, a verse of "Blest be the Tie that Binds," and prayer and benediction by Bro. S. B. Moore, of the Hammett Place church.

The Eighteenth Thousand, and How We Raised It.

As all of our readers know, the closing public act of Governor Drake's life was a conditional gift of $10,000 for the Bible college building on the Drake university campus. When completed this building will cost $25,000. When the holiday season arrived the pledges towards this enterprise amounted to $17,000, and it was thought wise to make an effort to increase these subscriptions. The first one to respond was R. A. Long, of the Long-Bell Lumber Co., Kansas City, Mo., who gave a conditional pledge of $200. Other friends soon added to this about $75 more. About the middle of January F. H. Lemon, of Marshalltown, Iowa, sent word that he would be one of ten persons to give $100 each towards the new building provided the $1,000 was subscribed during January. The first man to stand with Brother Lemon was B. H. Witwer, of Cedar Rapids. The third person was Sister J. G. Hammond, of St. Paul. On Saturday night, Jan. 28, B. F. Prunty, of Des Moines, added his name to the list, and the writer followed, making it possible for Brother Medbury to announce in University Place church on Sunday, Jan. 29, that one-half the sum was procured and that two days more were left in which to secure the other $500. It is needless to say that the interest was intense during these two days. Scores of letters had gone out and a good deal of personal work had been done in Des Moines, and no one could forecast the outcome. On the evening of the 30th C. F. McCarty, of Des Moines, who already has a $1,000 conditional pledge, added his name to the list, making six. At noon on the 31st a telegram arrived from D. H. Buxton, of Des Moines, who is spending the winter in California, and in the evening mail a letter came from W. T. Brownlie and his father, of Long Grove, Iowa. So the sun went down with two names lacking. On the morning mail of Feb. 1 came a letter from H. E. Witwer, of Cedar Rapids, saying, "I will be the tenth man in your list." In the evening of the same day at five o'clock a pledge made by H. I. Prusia, of Mason City, on the preceding day, reached us, and the work was done. It is needless to say that the spirit of thanksgiving reigned supreme. The Bible college of Drake university has nothing to be more devoutly thankful for than its host of friends, a few of whom are mentioned in this article, and many of whom joined in bringing the pledges up to where these found them two weeks ago.

Many are asking us personally or by letter, "What about the 19th thousand?" I am glad to say to all such that a very dear friend of the college in Des Moines, who has already pledged $500 early in the enterprise, told me on the morning of Feb. 3 that he would add another $100 on condition that I get $900 more to go with it on or before April 15, 1905. Our experience in raising the last $1,000 convinces us that a great many persons would be glad to help us some in amounts of $100 and less. We are going to give an opportunity to our friends to subscribe in five different classes:

Class 1, three at..................	$100 each.
Class 2, four at.....	50 "
Class 3, ten at....................	25 "
Class 4, fifteen at................	10 "
Class 5, twenty at................	5 "

Any one who understands raising money for a great enterprise like this knows that the raising of this 19th thousand may be the turning point in the whole problem. While there will be six thousand to raise after this is out of the way, the enthusiasm generated in the securing of the 18th and 19th thousands, may be the direct cause of securing some larger gifts which will give us the building much sooner than we had hoped.

Once more let me say to hundreds of persons who feel that they can not give that we want their prayers. Let us make this building holy by our prayers. What does God care for the money without prayer?

How can God bless the work of this new house if its foundations are not laid in the fear of God and its erection is not accompanied and consecrated by the spirit of his Son?

Do not wait for a letter from our committee; send your pledges in and do it at once, so that we can report from week to week and thus rejoice with one another in seeing the Lord's work grow.

Send your pledges or cash subscriptions to Alfred M. Haggard, Bible college, Des Moines, Iowa.

Special Trip to California and the General Convention Next August.

H. A. Denton will take a party of about sixty to California and the General Convention of the Christian Church next August. The party will be made up of congenial Christian people, most, if not all, Christian Endeavorers. You and your friends are requested to look into the matter further. The party will go by way of Los Angeles to San Francisco in a Pullman. Religious services will be held daily. One or two stops will be made on the way out. The tickets will bring you back by Portland and the northwest. We will get as long a limit as possible on the ticket, and from San Francisco home by the north you will go as you please, thus giving liberty to all parties to see the country as each pleases. The party will probably come together in Kansas City. The plan is to start the first week in August, thus having time to see things as we go, and also time to see over San Francisco and get settled before the convention. Everything about this trip will be just as promised, and your money for the tickets will be held in trust by the Maryville National Bank until your ticket is made out. While this is not an extravagant trip, we are going to have things nice and travel comfortably, and we solicit only those who are able to pay for what they want.

The Greater School of the Evangelists.

Dear Brother Garrison:—I take this opportunity of expressing to you my appreciation of the services you have rendered to the Greater School of the Evangelists by opening the columns of your paper to make known to our brethren our great loss in the destruction of the main building, and our needs for the reconstruction. Although our wants are far from satisfied, yet we are grateful to God for the blessings he has extended to us.

Doubtless our brethren would desire to hear of our progress to date: We require $25,000 to inaugurate the greater work, of this sum about $7,000 has already been given or pledged. Considering it is just two months since the fire it is decidedly satisfactory.

We have decided, God so willing, to break dirt for the new work April 3, at nine o'clock. An immense brick building has been planned, approximately 45x85 front with dormitory in the rear 34x92 feet, three and four stories high, heated by steam and lighted by electricity. We are determined not to go in debt, and we believe you will approve this resolution. God is rich and his people are rich. His work must be kept free.

A splendid opportunity will be given to young men, who are able and willing to work; carpenters or laborers who desire to earn schooling, and thus make of themselves something, will be able to do so.

Christian Progress in Japan.

Editor Christian-Evangelist:—In Japan, Christian union is popular among the missionaries, and Christianity is rapidly becoming popular among the natives. In the Yotsuya mission last year, I baptized 32 persons. In my two Bible classes, there are over two hundred young men, of whom twelve are noblemen. I have a good house, chapel, and press-room. From others I received $1,469, of which I used $636 in the building fund.

I teach English to earn a living. I have an excellent native evangelist. Mission expenses (other than living expenses) are $85 per month. Many Bibles were sold or given away. We are assisting twenty soldiers' families who are in destitute circumstances. There is much more suffering from cold in Tokyo than in St. Louis.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Los Angeles Letter.

The tourist season has arrived. Southern California is full to overflowing of eastern people who are here for the winter. The daily papers report that 300 new arrivals a day is the general average. It is no marvel that people come here to spend the winter when they have known and learned the delights of our climate. Think of a winter with only a few cloudy days and a light frost the coldest weather experienced. The wonder to me is that southern California does not grow more rapidly even than it does. As it is, the population of this section practically doubles every five years. And why not? Who would exchange it for snow, sleet, blizzard and mud? Come to California, storm-bound easterner. Yet with all our climatic attractions even here we have our difficulties. Many of these arise from the eastern arrivals who soon become so satisfied with our country that they no longer seek to obtain a heavenly clime. Many who were high in church circles in the east say good-bye to God when they cross the Rockies. I know one church in an eastern city which has no less than thirty members in Los Angeles who refuse to affiliate with any of our churches. This is one of the greatest hindrances to our work in all these western cities.

The evangelistic fever is spreading in southern California. Union evangelistic meetings are being held in many of our smaller towns. A great campaign has begun in Los Angeles, Jan. 27, conducted by J. Wilbur Chapman, assisted by seven other evangelists. The city is divided into eight districts, and each district has its own evangelist and singer. This meeting will continue for three weeks and will be participated in by practically all the evangelical churches in Los Angeles. We are expecting a great stir in religious circles in what is already known as the angel city.

The evangelistic fervor is rising in our own churches. S. T. Martin has recently closed a short meeting, and one that was seriously hindered by the holidays, at Riverside with about 40 accessions. Assisted by J. A. Carroll as evangelistic singer he is now campaigning at Monrovia where we hope a new church will soon be organized. J. K. Hester, who has recently arrived from the east, is holding the fort in an evangelistic meeting at La Habra. Grand results are anticipated there. H. Elliot Ward is assaulting the evil one in a campaign at Highland Park, an eastern suburb of Los Angeles. About 40 Disciples in that place will soon be constituted a church of Christ.

A new kind of religious organization has recently been effected in Los Angeles. It is known as The Fellowship. Its originator is B. Fay Mills, of erstwhile evangelistic fame. He occupied the Unitarian pulpit for a few years in Oakland and now aspires to lead Los Angeles people and the eastern tenderfeet into The Fellowship. Just what he means by fellowship he is not sure, though he thinks it is a new thing under the sun. It would seem that Los Angeles has enough pulpit celebrities. Think of Dr. Tanner, of forty days' fasting fame, Francis Murphy, the celebrated temperance worker, Robt. J. Burdette who has long made the world laugh, and now is pastor of the Temple Baptist church, Frank Talmage who is the son of his father, and Dr. Robert McIntyre, the great Methodist orator, besides many local celebrities in our city. Now add to these the famous Mills and imagine what will become of the little fish. Such is the struggle in cosmopolitan Los Angeles for leadership in the pulpit.

The annual reports of the First church showed splendid work for the year of 1904. About $8,000 was raised altogether. Of this amount about $4,000 was expended for local expenses, a little less than $2,000 for missionary purposes and a little more than $2,000 toward a pipe organ fund. During the year the Magnolia avenue church was founded by the First church and presented with a corner lot on which it is erecting a church building. A $3,500 pipe organ has been purchased by the First church. There were added to our membership at the regular services during the year 225 persons. Of this number nine died; 48 were dismissed by letter; 85 went to constitute the Magnolia avenue charter membership and seven to Boyle Heights church, leaving a net gain of 76 to the First church. All lines of our work are stronger than at any period in our history and the year was by far the best in my long pastorate with this great church.

Ohio Letter.

J. C. B. Stivers has become bishop of Willoughby. He will live in Cleveland but look after the welfare of the saints at Willoughby.

M. S. Spear has moved into the parsonage at Martin's Ferry. West Virginia gives us this new preacher. We thank them, welcome him and congratulate Martin's Ferry.

H. H. Moninger is now preaching for a meeting at North Tonawanda, N. Y.

T. A. Fleming, of Miles avenue, Cleveland, is assisting Pastor J. F. Ryan and the Malvern church in a meeting beginning Feb. 5.

John E. Pounds and wife began a meeting at Uhrichsville Feb. 5. Chas. Darsie, the new pastor, hopes to be on the ground before the meeting closes. Brother Darsie is helping D. O. Cunningham, of Findlay, in a meeting.

H. N. Allen has resigned at North Royalton to accept a call to Kensington and Hanoverton. He moves March 1.

Matthew Ducker, of Bethany, is preaching for the church at East Palestine.

W. T. Groom is doing his own preaching, assisted by home forces, at Bellefontaine.

Frank M. Fields held a very successful meeting with home forces at Geneva. There were 44 additions—16 the last day.

W. H. Rodgers, of Swampscott, Mass., preached at Dunham avenue, Cleveland, Feb. 5, and addressed the preachers' meeting Monday, Feb. 6, on "The Religious History of New England." The address was most excellent and highly appreciated by the ministers present.

J. H. Hughes, of Chicago, addressed the preachers Monday, Feb. 13.

The foreign rally for Cleveland and vicinity will be held at Euclid avenue church Feb. 20. There is promise of a fine attendance.

The Euclid avenue church is now in the beginning of a building enterprise. They have about $40,000 as a nest egg. The new building will be placed on the old church lot. It is a fine location and a new house is badly needed.

The Cleveland meetings closed with the month of January with 297 additions. They were as follows: Franklin Circle, 64; Lakewood, 16; West Madison avenue, 19; Birch street (at regular service), 3; Euclid avenue (regular service), 8; Glenville, 17; Cedar avenue, 30; Ætna street, 30; Miles avenue, 120. The Miles avenue meeting was quite remarkable. Last year there were over 100 added. In the first year of Brother Fleming's ministry 160 were added and now in this meeting with home forces alone there are 120 more added. All the meetings were splendid in spirit and have served to show the possibilities in such a move.

Of course you are making strong and thorough preparation this month for the foreign offering Mar. 5. Experience teaches that it is best to take the offering on the day appointed. This ought to be a red letter day in all the churches. This scribe put 100 copies of G. L. Wharton's tithing tract into the hands of his congregation last Sunday. It ought to be in the hands of every member of every congregation. Get it and read it. C. A. Freer.

Kansas Letter.

In Neal Overman's meeting with Central Park church, Topeka, there have been 36 additions—25 conversions. This is Brother Overman's second meeting with this new church.

N. A. Stull's meeting at Banner Springs, with 50 additions up to last night, continues indefinitely. Robt. Davis is conducting the music. Imri Zumwalt is pastor. This is a fine meeting.

D. W. Donaldson closed at Nickerson, and is now at Council Hill in a short meeting. The meeting at Nickerson resulted in 15 additions, 10 of them conversions. The meeting resulted in great good to the church.

J. S. Beem and wife are at Gridley, where they began their meeting a few days ago. They are faithful, self-sacrificing workers, and serve the churches well.

The meeting of 15 days at Niotaze, held by P. D. Holloway and A. W. Shafer, resulted in 34 additions—23 conversions. This for so small a town and short a time was excellent. These evangelists have began at Lyndon with Pastor J. F. Powers. They are a strong team.

W. T. Hilton succeeds E. L. Ely at Atchison. Sherman Hill locates at Paola, as Brother Lockhart goes to Drake to prepare for the foreign field. W. N. Porter locates with the church at Belleville for full time.

The semiannual statement of our state board is now being mailed out. The results are encouraging, but not what they might have been in every respect. We have not yet reached one-half of the amount ($7,000), which the last convention adopted as our watchword for this year. Much depends, in fact everything depends, upon the activity of the churches during the remainder of the year. The evangelists and missionaries are doing their best to bring credit to our cause in the state. They should receive the unanimous support of the brotherhood. W. S. Lowe.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Letters with the special apportionments are in the hands of auxiliary officers. I hope that every auxiliary will immediately call its executive committee together to plan for the best ways to get this before every member of the auxiliary. Every one ought to know and have opportunity to have a part in this special offering. Many do not attend, and unless the news is sent to them they will never know that there is a special work for the auxiliary, outside of the fifteen cents a month. I asked the auxiliaries to submit to me their plans for raising this special money, in place of giving plans to them as I have in other cases. As time and space in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will permit, I am going to give the best and most practical ones to you through its columns. The very first to send its plans is Columbia. In the first place a letter was sent to every member at the new year, thus:

"DEAR SISTER:—The C. W. B. M. auxiliary of Columbia sends you greetings and wishes you a most happy new year. We rejoice that there are now 66 members in our auxiliary and that 43 copies of the Tidings are taken, an increase of 36 Tidings in three years. During the year we raised $214.91. We have much to encourage us. We should lift up our hearts and look to the future for a growing work in keeping with a growing church and the growing demands upon our beloved society. Our own joy in the work will be great in proportion to our knowledge, our enthusiasm and our accomplishments.

"In addition to our regular work, we have as a labor of love a pledge of $35 to Mexico. For this no one is assessed, but we shall rely upon free will offerings, trusting that all may be interested and have a part in it and the amount will not be hard to raise."

Then follows the announcement of the regular meeting place, time, etc. This letter is a reminder to every one of the exact condition of the auxiliary. Further plans of this auxiliary are as follows: "With the above letter went a mite box for thank offerings, or free will offerings, or 'what you will' money. These are to be returned in April. We have quarterly 'silver teas,' and all of our tea money goes to the special offering. In July we have a 'picnic tea.' This year we have outlined our programs, and selected leaders in advance, in order to distribute the responsibility. We try to have good programs. We are always on the lookout for strangers, invite them to our meetings and introduce them to others. We all try to increase our Tidings list. We begin our programs on time, but I cannot say we always close on time. These are some of our plans."

I certainly thank Sister Lhamon for these suggestions, and hope some who cannot tell how to go to work on the apportionment will find something in these to help her. I heartily recommend a letter from the executive committee to each member in the auxiliary.

Let us hear how other auxiliaries are going to manage the special offering.

St. Louis. MRS. L. G. BANTZ.

THINK IT OVER.

Something You Can See in Any Restaurant or Cafe.

A physician puts the query: Have you never noticed in any large restaurant at lunch or dinner time the large number of hearty, vigorous old men at the tables; men whose ages run from 60 to 80 years; many of them bald and all perhaps gray, but none of them feeble or senile?

Perhaps the spectacle is so common as to have escaped your observation or comment, but neverthelsss it is an object lesson which means something.

If you will notice what these hearty old fellows are eating you will observe that they are not munching bran crackers nor gingerly picking their way through a menu card of new fangled health foods; on the contrary they seem to prefer a juicy roast of beef, a properly turned loin of mutton, and even the deadly broiled lobster is not altogether ignored.

The point of all this is that a vigorous old age depends upon vigorous degestion and plenty of wholesome food, and not upon dieting and an endeavor to live upon bran crackers.

There is a certain class of food cranks who seem to believe that meat, coffee, and many other good things are rank poisons, but these cadaverous, sickly-looking individuals are a walking condemnation of their own theories.

The matter in a nutshell is that if the stomach secretes the natural digestive juices in sufficient quantities any wholesome food will be promptly digested; if the stomach does not do so, and certain foods cause distress, one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal will remove all difficulty, because they supply just what every weak stomach lacks, pepsin, hydro-chloric acid, diastase and nux.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do not act upon the bowels, and in fact are not strictly a medicine, as they act almost entirely upon the food eaten, digesting it thoroughly, and thus gives a much-needed rest and giving an appetite for the next meal.

Of people who travel nine out of ten use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, knowing them to be perfectly safe to use at any time and also having found out by experience that they are a safeguard against indigestion in any form, and eating, as they have to, at all hours and all kinds of food, the traveling public for years have pinned their faith to Stuart's Tablets.

All druggists sell them at 50 cents for full-sized packages, and any druggist from Maine to California, if his opinion were asked, will say that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the most popular and successful remedy for any stomach trouble.

Indian Territory Notes.

Our work for the last year has been confined mostly to the Chickasaw nation, and, while we have not added to the church in numbers as we hoped to do at the beginning of the year, we have seen a change that speaks for the future more than numbers. I expect in the Indian Territory we have had greater opposition to all organized and co-operative effort than in any district of the same size in the country. There is not a community known to me, and I know the most of them, where there is not some division of sentiment. I have seen more of this broken down during the last year than in the four years before this that I had known of the work here. Many of the older people will never grow out of it entirely. One reason for this is we have some preachers in the Indian Territory whose very life depends upon the keeping up of this fight, and yet we have some of the best men in the Territory who have been identified with these people who have really felt that they were doing God's service in opposing all these things. With our people united in this great work, the cause of Christ would have an easy victory in the Territory. We feel that we are coming every day nearer statehood, when we can have some kind of government, and with that we hope for the coming of many of our people who will be wanting homes in this "sunny land," people who will not only come here to make a home, but to worship God, and to do their part in building up the cause of the Master in this "goodly land." G. T. Black.

Oklahoma.

The church at Lamont has recently held a meeting which resulted in adding 22 souls to the one body. In the Ponca city meeting conducted in December by J. V. Updike, there were nine additions. Nearly all the number had to be convinced and convicted. The weather was very poor for meeting work, but we are satisfied that if he could have remained longer, the ingathering would have been great. ——The Mordin church will begin a meeting soon with home forces. The preaching will be done by their pastor, C. M. Myers.——The Blackwell church is without a pastor. We can conscientiously commend this body of believers to any of our good preachers, and we hope to see at any early date an able minister located at this point. Blackwell is a good town, progressive, up-to-date, and the preacher who locates there will not only wield an influence in the town, but he will be in a position that his influence may reach out into the surrounding communities. Bro. Joseph W. Hall is one of the able and consecrated elders of this congregation.——I know some places in Oklahoma where strong churches can be built up. If there is an active, wide-awake, enthusiastic preacher who is anxious to come to Oklahoma, and willing to go to one or two of these places, hold a meeting and make his pastorate, write with stamp and enclose references, and I will gladly arrange for you to begin work at one of these points. The reason I ask for stamps and references enclosed is that my correspondence is very heavy, and I haven't time to write to all the references given. Any of our educated ministers can have a good pastorate in this part of the country if willing to work for it. Now don't form the wrong idea about Oklahoma, and think that the people are behind the times and just anybody can preach to them and be a success. The people of Oklahoma are up-to-date, well-educated, refined, and a minister who is not, had better stay where he is, and save his time and money.——I spent my holidays at Geuda Springs, Kan., preaching a few nights. We had six additions, two of the number had been, previous to this time, very strong Adventists. These persons started their new life in Christ the first day of the week and the first day of the year, 1905. The brethren at Geuda are happy and united. J. A. Tabor.

Nebraska Secretary's Letter.

Evangelist Whiston reports eleven added at Kearney to date, eight baptisms.—J. R. Teagarden preached at Ord again on 5th, and at Ravenna on the 6th. We have no church at Ravenna.—L. F. Harman has been called to the pastorate of the Broken Bow church and will hold a meeting soon, with D. A. Youtzy as the preacher.

Bert Wilson has been visiting at Minden for a couple of weeks. The executive committee of state board met in Hastings on the 31st of January. The principal matter under consideration was the district convention calendar. An effort was made to get these in consecutive order so that the state officers whose duty it is to be at these conventions, would not be put to unnecessary expense, and to prevent overlapping. It is hoped that the district officers will adopt promptly this calendar and announce place and date of their conventions accordingly. It is time to begin the preparation of district programs. The president and corresponding secretary of No. 7 were in conference on this matter on the 31st. The district calendar as now arranged is as follows:

District No. 1, first week in April; district No. 2, second week in April; district No. 3, third week in April; district No. 4, third week in June; district No. 5, fourth week in April, district No. 6, first week in May; district No. 7, second week in May; district No. 8, third week in May; district No. 9, second week in June; district No. 10, first week in June.

One added at Overton, O. L. Adams, pastor, Jan. 22.—Kingston meeting reported eight added; still in progress.

District No. 10 has appointed D. B. Titus, of Lexington, as corresponding secretary in the place of J. K. Hester, who has moved to California. The convention of this district will be held at Overton, and the date as above will be the first week in June.

District No. 8 will meet at Edison. J. S. Miller has been appointed president of that district. The date of the convention according to above calendar will be the third week in May. Oscar Sweeney, of Alma, is the corresponding secretary.

R. A. Schell will preach a week at Strang, where we have no congregation.

The tabernacle project and dining hall matter are progressing, especially the tabernacle. Architect R. W. Grant, of Beatrice, has been enlisted in the work, and we hope soon to be able to present a cut of the proposed buildings. In the meantime those who pledged themselves to pay $1 or more to this work would do well to send it in. This will save the expense of a notice.

B. B. Burton and Miss Lucille Park will begin a meeting at Hastings on the 12th. Brother Burton is now in a meeting at Spokane, Wash., and Miss Park at Villisca, Iowa.

DeForest Austin and wife will begin a meeting soon at Deweese.—Edward Clutter and D. E. Thompson have formed themselves into an evangelistic team. Brother Clutter has been in Virginia in a meeting.—J. W. Hilton, the pastor of the Bethany congregation, is now in a meeting at that place.

The Magnet church has called Brother Kopp to preach for them. A new board of trustees and deacons and elders was elected on the 28th. This puts the church in very good shape to have meetings every Lord's day.

The church at Ulysses expect to have their seats in shortly.

This is the time of year when the state board is at its largest expense. Three evangelists working at once is likely to make the outgo considerably in excess of the income. Some churches have taken pledges for the apportionment and not sent them in. Many of the churches have done nothing at all in this direction. The time for other offerings is crowding. Please see to this, brethren.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ALABAMA.

Fairhope, Feb. 4.—Our meeting is now 27 days old, with 27 confessions. S. P. Spiegel, state evangelist, is doing the preaching and leading his own song services. This is my eighth year with this church; it is intensely missionary.—A. E. SHUPE, pastor.

ARKANSAS.

Prairie, Feb. 4.—Meeting seven days old, six additions: four conversions (young men) one by letter and one reclaimed. There is good interest, good attendance, notwithstanding the unprecedented spell of bad weather. H. S. Mobley is pastor.—DANIEL TRUNDLE, evangelist.

CALIFORNIA.

Riverside, Jan. 30.—I am just home from Monrovia. Closed our meeting yesterday, with just about 40 names enlisted. Church organized, and Sunday-school with 50 scholars. C. W. B. M. has 11 members. We bought two fine corner lots. Solicited pledges on preacher's salary amounting to about $700. We called A. K. Wright, Boise, Idaho, who will begin his work at once, jointly supported by church and southern California mission board. —SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Imperial.—We closed a two weeks' meeting here the last of January with 20 additions to the church: two by letter, five by statement, three from the Baptists, and 10 by baptism. There were two who have not yet been baptized—in all 22. Considering all the circumstances this is a great victory for the Master. This is a new town of about 800 inhabitants, out in the Colorado desert in southern California, 16 miles from Old Mexico. There are great possibilities for both the church and town. There are 500,000 acres in this valley. This is indeed the land of sunshine.—J. F. SLOAN.

COLORADO.

Berthoud, Feb. 1.—W. L. Cline has just closed a meeting with the church here, assisted by the pastor, Herbert F. Jones. The direct result of the meeting was 20 additions, 14 by confession and baptism. The attendance was good and many are almost persuaded. The pastor will follow up the meeting. The church is out of debt, has a good house of worship and with earnest work by pastor and congregation has a bright future. Brother Jones, the pastor, is an earnest young preacher and will push the work steadily forward.—E. F. HARRIS.

La Junta, Feb. 6.—The First Church of Christ has just closed a three weeks' revival meeting with 32 additions: 17 by baptism, six by letter and nine by statement. This is the most successful meeting ever held by the Disciples at this place. The meetings were conducted by John T. Stivers, assisted by home forces only. Brother Stivers began to labor with us Oct. 1, 1904, coming from Knoxville, Ill. The resident membership at that time was but 65 and by his earnest, untiring efforts as pastor, 48 have been added to the church. The year 1905 promises to be a great one for us.—J. W. FRANCIS, clerk.

FLORIDA.

Kissimmee, Feb. 6.—Two additions Jan. 29, one confession and one from Baptists. Jan. 1 we organized a Y. P. S. C. E. with more than 20 active members. We have an average attendance of 50 at Sunday-school, and altogether our work moves on encouragingly. We are working on plans for our new church building, and hope to begin some of the work next week. With so many new and inexperienced Christians a great deal of care and patient oversight is necessary; and we ask the prayers of the brethren that God may bless and wisely direct our youthful leadership.—E. H. RAYNER.

ILLINOIS.

Chicago, Irving Park church.—Received 14 people into fellowship during January—11 by baptism. P. J. Rice, of South Bend, Ind., assisted in a helpful short meeting. The church is enjoying a steady growth.—JOHN R. EWERS, pastor.

Pekin, Feb. 6.—We had good audiences on the first day of our revival. J. A. Barnett, the pastor, is doing the preaching. The church is doing splendidly under his ministry, and he has just been called to the pastorate for two years.—CHARLES E. MCVAY, singing evangelist.

Atlanta, Feb. 9.—J. W. Kilborn, of Keokuk, Ia., closed a 24 days' meeting here, Feb. 7; 58 were added to the church, 47 of whom were baptized. It was the best meeting here since 1885. Present membership 350. Now for the March offering.—S. S. LAPPIN.

Lake Fork, Feb. 9.—Meeting three weeks old, with 54 additions; four confessions, and one by statement last night. Reaching all classes and ages. No help.—J. D. WILLIAMS, pastor.

Mt. Pulaski, Feb. 9.—How does this sound? A town of 2,000 population, 11 saloons, five churches, and only two of them that dare oppose the saloon element. But with God's help we mean to accomplish something in the name of Christ. The third night of our meeting the house was filled.—DAVID A. LINDSEY, pastor; GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE, singers.

Danville, Feb. 6.—Our meeting in the First church of Christ closed last night with 58 additions; 40 of these additions confessed their faith in Christ and were baptized. They were mostly adults. The other 18 came by letter, renewal of covenant and statement. During all the meeting there was not one week of good weather. The meeting was remarkable for such results with so many hindrances. Many were promised who were kept away by sickness and the bad weather. The most of these will come later. A. R. Davis, of Ohio, was our singing evangelist. Brother Davis and wife go to Capac, Mich., for their next meeting, where he can be reached by any church or churches which may want his services.—J. H. SMART.

Charleston.—Onr report for the year 1904 shows: Accessions, 240; loss by death and removal, 44; accessions at two other points where our pastor was in short meetings, 29; total accessions, 269. About 200 from the Allen-Wilson meeting are with the church. Increase in all missions and benevolences over 1903 of at least $200; ladies' aid reduced their indebtedness to $350; Endeavorers support an orphan, and will take a day in Eureka calendar; Juniors sent four boxes to the orphans' home; C. W. B. M., $75; every general offering day has been observed, save ministerial. I but voice the sentiment of our congregation when I say we think after four years' service by Bro. Will F. Shaw, there are but few such consecrated, industrious and sympathetic pastors.—T. N. HENRY, chairman of board of deacons.

Eureka, Feb. 3.—Four additions at Mackinaw. Our revival begins next Lord's day.—H. H. PETERS.

Pana, Feb. 4.—Sixty added to date, and fine interest prevails.—LAWRENCE AND EDWARD WRIGHT, general evangelists.

Mt. Carmel, Feb. 3.—Our great meeting conducted by Bro. S. M. Martin closed last night with 178 accessions. The meeting lasted eight weeks. A large hearing all the time. A long meeting is the thing. The church was sorry that ours had to close. If Brother Martin could have remained longer, there would have been many more accessions. The church has been strengthened in many ways, and is now planning for a larger work. Have bought a lot adjoining the church, and will build larger.—LEE TINSLEY, pastor

Augusta, Feb. 3.—We held a short meeting here. Four confessions.—N. E. CORY.

Taylorville, Feb. 6.—Work moves along very encouragingly. Two added yesterday—one by statement and one from the Adventists. —Z. MOORE.

Lake Fork, Feb. 2.—In a great meeting with home forces; 37 to date; reaching all classes and ages; interest growing; congregations large; confessions every night.—J. D. WILLIAMS, minister.

Centralia, Feb. 5.—C. W. Dean, of Colfax, assisted us in a meeting resulting 18 confessions and six by statement.—J. F ROSEBROUGH.

Waverly, Feb. 3.—Just closed a 25 day meeting with O. G. Smith, pastor at Flanagan where there is one of the best churches in the state. There were 14 additions.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE, song evangelists.

Galesburg, Feb. 2.—Dr. and Mrs. J. E. Powell, of Wabash, Ind., have just left us after four weeks' meeting with the Galesburg church. They gave us a splendid meeting. Fifty-one were added to the membership of the church—28 by baptism, 23 by letter. The whole tone of the meeting appealed to the intelligence and conscience of the people.—NELSON G. BROWN.

INDIANA.

[By Telegraph.]

Huntington, Feb. 8.—Meeting closed tonight with 221 additions—71 in last four days, 30 to-day. Many are heads of families. We begin at Troy, New York, next week.—BROOKS BROS.

Hamilton, Feb. 6.—Jan. 27 we closed a splendid meeting of three weeks' duration, Grant W. Speer, of Hicksville, Ohio, doing the preaching. Nine were added by baptism and statement, and the church was greatly edified and strengthened.—OLIN O. OLNEY.

Ligonier, Feb. 6.—One added by confession. Every department is in healthy condition; Sunday-school almost doubled under its efficient superintendency.—C. W. MAHIN, pastor.

Knightstown, Feb. 6.—We have just closed an excellent meeting with the church here. We had no outside help. The hearing has been the largest known here, so the brethren say. Other churches had held long and poorly attended meetings, with little real results, preceding us. People have been studying God's word and searching for the truth. There were 19 additions, the majority of which were by baptism. One of the members was prevented from full obedience by denominational influence. We hope for further results from week to week.—E. S. CONNER.

Evansville, Feb. 2.—Notwithstanding inclement weather, smallpox and sickness we have closed a fruitful meeting. There were eight added by baptism and one from M. E. church. Sixty were present at prayer-meeting last night.—ALLEN T. SHAW, pastor Bethany church.

Logansport, Feb. 8.—My first year here has been very good. We have had about 50 additions and raised $539.90 for missions and nearly $4,000 from all sources. We have been for some time contemplating a new church building and have in cash for the same about $1,300. The prospects for the old church are very bright.—J. H. CRAIG, pastor.

Columbus, Feb. 8.—W. H. Book, of Martinsville, Virginia, has been engaged for the past three weeks in a meeting at the Tabernacle church. In spite of the bad weather splendid audiences have greeted him every night. Up to the present date 88 have been added to the church. Brother Book seems to know the Bible by heart. Not only has he brought souls into the kingdom, but he has greatly strengthened those that were already in. Our pastor was called to his home in Nebraska on account of his parents' illness. In spite of this drawback we look forward to a fine meeting.—Charles E. Cobbey.

Jasonville.—C. R. L. Vawter, of Indianapolis, has been in a meeting for about two weeks. Forty-five have been added during the past week, 21 came forward Tuesday night. Nearly all are grown people.

Vincennes, Feb. 8.—The church at this place held a protracted meeting that began on Jan. 15. It was carried on for 18 evenings. Brother C. A. Young, editor of the Christian Century, did the preaching. The meeting resulted in 78 additions. Great audiences greeted the speaker from the very beginning to the close. The heart and core of Brother Young's preaching consisted in exalting Christ as the Saviour of the world and the Lord of life and glory. Nearly every Protestant minister in the city was in the church at every service. He won for himself a very warm place in the hearts of our people. All departments of the church are prospering.—Wm. Deschger, pastor.

IOWA.

Jefferson, Feb. 4.—W. F. McCormick and Sister Verona McKinlay were with us twenty-five days in a meeting. Three confessions, one by letter.—E. W. Bowers.

Whiting, Jan. 29.—Two added at regular services by baptism.—D. S. Thompson.

Burlington, Feb. 6.—I am assisting the pastor, Arthur Long, in a meeting. Eighteen additions the first week—13 men. House is crowded in spite of cold and snow.—Percy Leach.

Earlham, Feb. 5.—John H. Swift is in a very promising meeting at North River church. The congregation at Winterset gave him the privilege of coming, for which we are very thankful. We start out well, though the weather is very cold.

Osceola, Feb. 3.—We closed a five weeks' meeting at this place last night (Omer and Hall evangelists) with 63 accessions to the church—32 confessions, 20 from the denominations, and 11 by letter and statement. The Christian-Evangelist has already reported that among those from the denominations were Bro. B. F. Baker and wife, the local Presbyterian preacher. He is a fine man and far above the average preacher in ability. He already has several good fields offered him, and will go to work for the primitive faith. Brother Omer made friends for the church, pastor, and above all for the Master. Brother Hall, the pastor of Hamburg church, organized a large chorus and gave us some of the best music ever heard in the city. We hope to plan for even larger things in the future. This church is in the best condition it has known for years.—H. E. Van Horn.

Primghar, Feb. 3.—Three weeks ago we began a meeting here. The brethren were discouraged. The weather has been very cold and stormy and we could not heat the house as it should be. But the Lord has blessed us with good audiences and fine interest. Eight accessions to date.—J. P. Childs, evangelist.

Elliott, Jan. 30.—Our 29 days' meeting closed last night with 11 added: seven by baptism, three by statement, one by letter. Bert MacRea, of Des Moines, as leader of song was a splendid helper. Preaching by the minister.—S. B. Ross.

Des Moines, Feb. 1.—Closed a meeting at Bondurant, last evening with 26 additions—20 confessions, 2 by letter and 4 reclaimed. It was a pleasure to be associated with Professor Stairs and the Bondurant church in a gospel campaign.—W. S. Johnson, evangelist.

Lake City, Feb. 6.—I have just closed a three weeks' meeting, assisted by J. P. Garmong, singer, with 51 additions—six by statement and letter, and 4 by confession and baptism. I am entering upon my second year here as pastor. There have been 102 additions here during my first year. We confidently expect great things for the future.—C. L. Organ, pastor.

Adel, Feb. 6.—The first five weeks of the new year have seen 12 confessions at our regular services, this without special effort outside of sermons, and we count it a wonderful blessing to this church. Nine of the twelve are young men and boys. This church has set out to add 100 to its membership this year.—S. G. Fisher, pastor.

Villisca, Feb. 2.—I have just closed a meeting with the church here, where I have been pastor for five years, this being my third meeting. The total number of accessions was 36 with enough promised for next Sunday to make the entire visible result 40. This is the banner meeting for this little congregation. We are overshadowed by the M. E. church and they were running a meeting at the same time. Our accessions are largely composed of young men. Miss Lucille May Park, of Coffeyville, Kansas, led the music to the entire satisfaction of the church.—S. M. Perkins.

Cincinnati, Feb. 5.—J. H. Fuller is holding a meeting at the Mt. Olivet church. Eight accessions to date.—A. W. Carr.

JAPAN.

Tokyo, Jan. 19.—I baptized a young nobleman yesterday. Now that the start is made, I think others will come.—W. D. Cunningham.

KANSAS.

Lyons, Feb. 3.—Three weeks and one half with 93 added. We continue. House crowded nightly.—Hamilton and Wilkinson, evangelists.

Paola, Feb. 8.—Forty additions at different preaching points since last report; 18 baptisms, 19 by letter and restored; three from other religious bodies.—C. J. Saunders.

Nickerson, Jan. 27.—Closed a splendid meeting last night; 15 accessions—10 confessions, two M. E., one German Baptist, two by letter.—C. W. Van Dolah, pastor, D. Y. Donaldson, evangelist.

Lawrence.—There were three additions Sunday, Jan. 22, at the North Lawrence church. Our pastor, W. T. Clarkson, is very popular here with all classes and has done more for this church than we thought could possibly be done in so short a time.—K. M.

Anthony, Feb. 1.—Twenty-five additions in the last 10 days.—Geo. McGee, pastor, David Lyon, evangelist.

Chanute, Feb. 6.—One confession at evening service yesterday, making 37 added in seven months.—R. E. Rosenstein.

Soldier, Feb. 9.—One addition here Jan. 29. Fine field here for labor. Am very pleasantly located and expect to do a good work.—H. R. Murphy.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans, Jan. 31.—Soniat avenue Christian church had a high day January 29, when Bro. J. H. Garrison, of St. Louis was with us and preached morning and evening. Brother Garrison led us up to the mountain peaks and gave us exalted visions of Christianity and the kingdom of God. Sister Garrison was with us also. This was their first visit to our beautiful city. It was a visit encouraging and helpful to us in many ways. There have been seven additions to the Soniat church during this first month of our work together. There has been a gradual growth in all departments.—Marcellus R. Ely.

MISSOURI.

Stanberry, Feb. 4.—The annual report of the church at Stanberry shows a splendid growth. Additions to the general church, here and elsewhere, 137, to our local church 78; loss by letter 38; present membership 424. Raised for all purposes last year, $2,918. Our motto for next year is 100 additions to our local band, and more money for every church work. This is one among the best churches in the state.—J. E. Davis.

Shelbyville, Feb. 6.—The new year starts well, all departments working, splendid audiences yesterday, but weather very inclement, two additions. We are looking ahead with interest to the March offering. The parsonage was the scene of a great surprise last Friday night, it being the occasion of our first wedding anniversary. About 25 or 30 of our brethren and sisters flocked in on us and showered us with cotton goods of every description.—C. E. Wagner, pastor.

Budd Park, Kansas City, Feb. 6.—We have been in revival meetings the past week; five confessions and baptisms.—E. H. Williamson.

Marceline, Feb. 2.—There were 28 additions in the meeting at Concord, Shelby county, (twenty of this number were men): 16 by baptism, three from the Baptists, one from the Methodists, eight reclaimed. This is a splendid cougregation. They will enlarge their building in the near future.—A. Munyon, state evangelist.

MONTANA.

Missoula, Jan. 30.—R. H. Sawyer, our faithful pastor, is holding an effective revival; just entering upon the third week. The town is stirred. So far 12 additions: four by primary obedience eight by letter. Brother Sawyer's great plea for the primitive church is commanding the respect of all the denominations. All lines of church work are active. Sunday-school has almost doubled in attendance since first of the year, under the super-

Luther Against the Name Lutherans.

The following quotation from McClintock and Strong's Biblical and Ecclesiastical Cyclopœdia article, "Lutherans," seems to me to be a very just estimate of the "Lutheran movement," as it relates to Luther's motives and personal work:

"The fundamental principle of the Lutheran church prevented its formation into a new, concentrated and united whole, like that which had grown to such enormous proportions and baleful power in the church of the west. Nor was it Luther's object to form an independent church. He hesitated as much in the establishment of an independent organization as do the leaders of the old Catholic movement in our day (1872). Luther's single aim was the reformation and revival of Christianity, and the restoration of the whole church in its universal form to primitive and scriptural purity. Denominationalism he knew not. His conception of the church comprehended Catholic Christianity. In spite of himself, however, his peculiar views, which for convenience' sake we will denominate 'Lutheranism,' spread rapidly, especially after the Diet at Worms (1521), and though as late as 1522 Luther himself wrote, 'I beseech you above all things, not to use my name; not to call yourselves Lutherans, but Christians' (Works xviii, 293, in the 6th Leips. Ed.; compare also Gelzer's Life of Luther, pp. 288, 291), national churches sprang up in every country where his followers constituted the majority."

Perhaps every reformer who has sought to restore the church to "primitive and scriptural purity," has felt a repugnance to having those influenced by him, called by his name, because it savors of denominationalism. But it is most difficult to prevent people from so denominating it "for convenience' sake."

Cui Bono?

Editor Christian-Evangelist:—I am in receipt of an apportionment letter from the treasurer of the National Christian Bible-school association calling for $5 per year, but before asking the school about it or sending in a pledge, I wish to ask:

1. Is there a demand for such an organization and national secretary?

2. The American and foreign boards seem to get good results from the Bible-schools; can they not manage all that the said board and national secretary intend doing?

3. Have the various state boards failed in their duty as regards Bible-school development, or is it necessary that our evangelists and pastors have a national secretary to prod them up on Bible-school work?

4. What is the matter with Brother Waggener, the national superintendent of Bible-schools and Christian Endeavorers? I do not see his name among the worthies of the N. C. B. S. A. Was the office too great for the man? Did he have to spread himself too much, and vanish, or did he fall into some hole, and is there not danger that another man —a national secretary—might fall into the same hole?

5. Such office and organization as above seem to me to be wholly unnecessary and superfluous and will tend only to the multiplication of days and calls without any adequate return.

W. J. Hastie.

Albia, Ia., Feb. 6, 1905.

[We are not an officer in the National Bible-school association, but we answer to the best of our ability Brother Hastie's questions:

1. It is the opinion of our leading Sunday-school workers, and many of our leading men, that such an organization, represented by a national secretary, was necessary, in order to lift up the ideals and improve the methods of our Sunday or Bible-schools. The Sunday Bible-school now practically represents the teaching function of the church and the importance of its work cannot easily be exaggerated. It was believed that a specialist in this field, keeping in touch with the best thought and methods of the times as relates to this important work, and through the state organizations bringing these to bear on all the schools of the brotherhood, would be vastly worth while.

2. It is no part of the work of the boards mentioned to do the work specified above. To observe "Children's Day" is but a small part of the work of the Sunday-school.

3. The same question might as well be asked concerning any other of our general enterprises committed to the care of boards. Experience has taught that boards can accomplish but little without an active personal representative to push their interests.

4. Brother Waggener is not national superintendent of Sunday-schools, but of Christian Endeavor. It is the business of the national organization above mentioned to keep its secretary out of a hole!

5. It is not contemplated, we think, to have another "day" for this new organization. If the National Christian Bible-school association can serve to focus attention on the necessity of elevating the standard of teaching the Bible in our Sunday-schools through the employment of a wise specialist on this subject, it will prove to be neither "unnecessary" nor "superfluous," but will meet a long-felt want. —Editor.]

Church Schools for Whom?

In the last two issues of the Christian-Evangelist, our good brother, Prof. William Holland Matlock, of Berkeley, Cal., waxes warm and answers a short article of mine which appeared in a recent number of the Christian Standard, and which Brother Lord saw fit to entitle, "Church Schools for Church People." Now I wish to say that no such construction was meant to be put upon the article as our good brother has placed upon it. The article was an answer to one appearing in the same paper of Dec. 10, by A. Holmes, of Ann Arbor, entitled, "A Gap in the Fence," in which he complains of the tendency of our young Christians to drift from their moorings while in the universities. I suggested that a good remedy for the difficulty would be to send the children to our own schools. It seems to me that if the Christian religion counts for anything in character formation, it counts most when it is taught with the greatest freedom. Where is this? In the church or state schools? Certainly in the former. In which place then should our children be? As to what he concludes such a position leads to, I am but little interested. Our commission is to preach the gospel, and if either in preparing for the work or in preaching it, we shall deprive the state institutions of the beneficent influence of our children, those institutions will have to abide the consequence. George Washington was right when he said that the church schools would need to supply what the state schools could not include. When denominationalism ceases, then conditions at our state schools may change. This being true, the Disciples of Christ, a body of people standing distinctively for Christian union, are the greatest factor in the correction of the evil; her colleges are her greatest allies. Hence the most rapid progress can be made by supporting these schools. Certainly no one would maintain that the schools of any given church should exclude all but the children of its communicants; yet if our schools are not to be attended by our own children, that they may be the most thoroughly equipped for the preaching of the gospel at home and abroad, and to receive such instruction as is calculated to make the best Christians, then, pray, for what purpose were they built? I maintain therefore, if we are to have schools at all, the greatest number possible of our own children should attend them.

He says, "The whole boy must be educated by the state." But can this be done where the word of God is not allowed to be taught? He also says that "church schools are as incomplete as the state schools," which position cannot be maintained where the given schools have an equal income, as is shown by comparing the state universities of Michigan, Wisconsin and Illinois with Northwestern University and Chicago University. This will prove especially true with ourselves, because of the catholicity of the position maintained by us.

In the last issue, the professor calls attention to my feeble imagination and to my extreme modesty. Now, here again he failed to get my meaning. I was not asking for what I thought the colleges ought to have nor what I believed we were able to give, but what we might reasonably expect from the churches on education day, when we consider that it is but the second time the day has ever been observed; nor is this the only source of revenue for our schools, as his article would imply. Last year the total income of Drake university alone was $241,152.68, while but $949.81 were gifts from churches on education day. Now if we get three thousand dollars this year from the same source, we will have quite a respectable increase. The several colleges of the brotherhood received for buildings and endowments alone, last year, $453,286. The amount received for running expenses was about $250,000, making a total of $700,000 instead of $20,000 of which he tells us. He tells us also of "another New Testament religious body in this country"—Paul knew of but one—that excels us in benevolence; but when that body was no older than we, it was not giving much; also because of its age and long continuance in the same plans of collecting money it has greater wealth, and its people are better acquainted with its method of work. Our people are rather to be commended than criticised for their giving. Our schools are not yet what they should be, but our people are gradually increasing their gifts. Last year the increase was 100 per cent. At such a rapid stride it will not be long until there will be a few schools with several million dollars endowment. In fifty years I firmly believe Drake University will have $5,000,000 invested in buildings, and $10,000,000 in endowment. This is what we are telling the people; is it too modest? I hope it will prove more than mere imagination.

Memory Verses, 11, 12.

Golden Text.—I am the living bread which came down from heaven.—John 6:51.

The incident of the present lesson must be dated about a year after that of the preceding. The journey to Jerusalem to the unnamed feast and the healing of the infirm man at the pool of Bethesda occurred near the end of what we may call the First Period of the Galilean Ministry. This period extends from the return to Galilee until the calling of the Twelve and was a time of growing fame among the common people and of beginning hostility on the part of the official class. The Second Period of the Galilean Ministry opens with the calling of the Twelve and the Sermon on the Mount and closes with the crisis at Capernaum which immediately followed the feeding of the five thousand. During this period Jesus was proclaiming the principles of his kingdom, he was trying by precept and parable to show the true nature of the messianic kingdom and was using beneficent miracles freely both to reveal the character of God and to establish his own status as God's chosen messenger.

Within this period fall, besides the events already mentioned, two somewhat extended preaching tours through Galilee, the message from John the Baptist in prison, the group of parables about the kingdom of God spoken by the sea (Matt. 13), the stilling of the tempest, the second rejection at Nazareth, the sending forth of the Twelve on their first missionary journey and their subsequent return, and the report of the death of John the Baptist.

The feeding of the five thousand is the only miracle (except the resurrection) and almost the only distinct event outside of the last week of Christ's life, which is reported by all four of the Gospels, and John alone follows it with the account of the discourse on the bread of life which was its logical sequel and which led directly to the crisis at Capernaum.

The story is too familiar to need repetition. It illustrates and suggests many large principles. The most obvious is that Jesus cared for men's physical needs. Nearly all of his miracles show this. He did urge men to seek first the things of the kingdom but he was never insensible to the pressure of bodily wants and the urgency of physical conditions. He viewed the whole man as a unit and treated him accordingly, ministering to whatever needs were most immediate. The church must do the same. It cannot preach the gospel and be indifferent to the physical conditions under which men are living.

Jesus used the resources at hand. He did not create; he multiplied. In general, it is God's method to use the best instrument that is at hand, however imperfect, rather than wait for a perfect instrument or proceed without one. It is a comfort to people of small talents to think that they may be in the position of the boy who furnished the loaves and fishes. Humble abilities and small resources plus a perfect willingness to have those abilities and resources used in God's service, may be relied upon to produce more important results than can be obtained from a larger endowment and less consecration. God's work in the world goes on only as fast as he can persuade men to carry it on, and its success depends upon the willingness of men to be used by him.

The feeding of the multitude had the immediate effect of attaching the crowd to him with a greater enthusiasm than before. It brought on the culmination of his popularity and, if he had been an ordinary reformer or agitator, it would have been the climax of his power. As it was, it led to the crisis in his ministry, for he definitely put aside the leadership which was offered to him, repudiated the kind of kingship which the people were trying to force upon him, estranged many of his followers by purposely "hard sayings" about eating his body, and finally called upon his chosen twelve to decide whether, after learning positively that he was not going to adjust himself to the low current conception of the messiahship, they would still follow him. They decided to stay with him, and from this time forward the work of Jesus was primarily a ministry to his disciples.

A WORK FOR EACH ONE.

Idlers condemned. "It is as when a man sojourning in another country, having left his house, and given authority to his servants, to each one his work, commanded also the porter to watch."

It may be laid down as a fundamental principle of the Kingdom of God that every man entering into it is expected to render some sort of service for it. There are to be no idlers in the Lord's vineyard (Matt. 20:6). Every one is expected to have some work to do and do it (1 Thess. 4:11,12). So strongly is idleness condemned that the Apostle Paul advises that those who will not work should not be allowed to eat (2 Thess. 3:11,12).

Diversity of gifts. In the Kingdom of God there are many kinds of work to be done, and fortunately there are as many kinds of gifts or talents in the church. The Apostle tells us there are "diversities of gifts, but the same spirit" (1 Cor. 12:4). It is a great mistake for members of the church to think that, because they do not possess certain gifts, say the gift of speaking, or the gift of government, therefore there is nothing which they can do. It is this fallacy, we fear, that is keeping so large a part of our membership inactive in the church. It is the same sort of fallacy which causes a large proportion of the membership of every congregation to neglect entirely the duty and the grace of giving, because they cannot give as large sums as some others. They fail to see that the little which they can give is just as important for them as the larger sums which others give are to their donors. There is no man capable of being a Christian that cannot find some work to do in the church. Other things being equal, the pastor who has the largest administrative ability in finding work for every one, and finding the right man for every work, will accomplish most in the building up of his membership. Paul well illustrates this principle in 1 Cor., 12th chapter, by the figure of the human body. Each organ of the body has its own function and it takes all of them working together to make up the body. The foot, the hand, the ear, the eye, all have their separate functions to perform, and each is dependent upon the other. It is this very diversity of gifts which enables the church to be a body, and to be effective in its work.

Classes of workers. In the primitive church there were apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers (Eph. 4:11,12). In the modern church we have all these, excepting the apostles, who have no successors, because they continue in authority through their word. The office of prophet, so far as it consisted in foretelling, has given place to preaching. We have in addition to those mentioned many classes of workers rendered necessary by modern conditions, but all carrying out the same great purpose of the church. In the Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor society, prayer-meeting, C. W. B. M. auxiliary, ladies' aid society, Business Men's League, with all the related works of missions, home and foreign, education and benevolence, there is a wide field for Christian activity, and in some of these departments every one should find a place to work.

Reward of workers. There is to be a time of reckoning, and those who have been faithful will receive their reward. (Read Matt. 25:23.) While those who have neglected to use the ability which they had are to be condemned (Matt. 25:26-28). (Read also Matt. 25:34-43.)

Prayer. Our Father in heaven, we thank thee that thou hast called us to be fellow-workers with thee in the building up of thy kingdom in the world, and in the saving of our fellow men. Since thou hast vouchsafed to us thy grace of forgiveness, and thy tender love, help us, we beseech thee, to show our gratitude in some form of Christian service by which our own growth in grace may be carried on, and our fellow men may share in the blessings of this great salvation. Having received so much from thee, forbid that we should refuse to impart to others the blessings we have received. Father, may we share in thy labor here, that we may share in thy glory hereafter, in Christ's name. Amen.

For the Leader.

Our topic to-night is "Heroes of Home Missions." While we might not think it so, yet Porto Rico is, since that island came under the stars and stripes, a home mission field. This, taken with the outlying districts of our home states, makes up a field broad and deep. In this field many a noble hero labors for the Lord. The hardship of the home missionary is in under pay as well as those things that make one's heart ache for the lost who have not the gospel preached unto them for lack of preachers. Let us study the missionaries of our own church to-night. They are a consecrated band. Their work is important in the evangelization of the foreign fields, for they get the base of supplies ready. Without them, the foreign work would fail.

For the Members.

1. W. J. Wright, our superintendent of evangelism, says:

"Here is a man graduated from Hiram college. His wife is sufficiently educated and talented to be an acceptable school teacher in any city in America, or a well paid worker in a great church. The preacher and another man built the church, a building 34 by 34 ft., with baptistry and robing rooms; it is furnace heated and gas lighted. Recently the seating capacity of the building was doubled, another furnace added, also dining room and furnished kitchen, and the preacher's hands did more of the work than any other. The property is worth $3,000 and all is paid save $135. An 8-room parsonage is approaching completion, the same hands doing the work. A flood damaged the church to the amount of $200, and damaged piano in preacher's home. There have been 106 baptisms and 49 other additions, and the Sunday-school numbers 235 and is growing. The preacher's salary has been $300 per year during the four years of this work, $100 of which has come annually from the missionary society. Day laborers are about twice as well paid. Who are these heroes? Brother and Sister C A. Frick, Westmore, Pa."

2. R. S. Smedley, evangelist for western Oklahoma, says:

"The work of an evangelist in 'pioneer work' in any country, and especially western Oklahoma, is arduous. To do effective work, he must equip himself with a team and wagon, a camping outfit, that he may in his travels stop wherever night overtakes him. He carries a picket rope and his team is in a pasture the boundary of which is the length of the picket rope.

"We have been three years in the field work, we have worn out one wagon and are using the second one. Mrs. Smedley has traveled with me, led the song service and played; we carry a telescope organ. There would be six months at a time that we would not be home.

"We carry a cooking outfit, a mattress on which we sleep on the deck of wagon. It takes heroism and love of the Master for a woman to leave the comforts of home and virtually live in a spring wagon on the road.

"One year ago, in crossing a swollen stream, Mrs. Smedley was driving, the wagon stuck, singletree and harness broke and left her and the wagon in the stream with the water just touching the bed of the wagon; she remained while I went to a town one mile away and had team and men come and help us out; it took one day for repairs."

3. W. M. Taylor, recently returned from Porto Rico, says of work in that island, and we will remember this is the special home mission field of our Endeavorers:

"There are heartrending separations from friends, home and loved ones, with all that is near and dear, for a tedious and perhaps a stormy and dangerous voyage and a residence in a land infested with jiggers, ants, fleas, spiders, bugs, cockroaches, centipedes, frogs and scorpions, and among a people painfully poor, ignorant, superstitious, vicious, sensual, carnal, filthy and diseased to that extent that one's flesh crawls as he wades through this cesspool of iniquity and slime.

"There is the tropical climate and the air laden with miasma that soon saps the life and debilitates the whole system subjecting one to the contraction of native diseases among which are tuberculosis, leprosy, eczema, dengue fever, etc.

"None of these dangers and hardships move the missionary in Porto Rico, he does not suffer from fear or fright, but he suffers most from a broken heart as he sees this people with great possibilities swept away into the maelstrom of eternal death, and himself bound hand and foot for lack of funds and equipments to carry on the work of saving souls from destruction; or else, when the physicians drive him away from the field and forbid his returning to the scene of activity, then his heart aches.

"My fellow Endeavorers, if you would be true heroes and patriots, help the cause of Christ under our own flag, in our own land, through our own home board."

Quiet Hour Thought.

Have I the money to support a home missionary of my own? If not, and if I ever have enough, will I be willing to do this?

DOWNS.

Caroline Sandrige was born in Albermarle county, Virginia, in April, 1826. On December 8, 1844, she was married to James Downs. They were permitted to live together for half a century, less one year. Their journey together was long and eventful. Twelve children were born to them, six of whom are still living. The years of married life of Brother and Sister Downs were busy, useful and happy ones. They were eminently successful in material things, but were rich in spiritual things as well. For many years their house was the preacher's home. The welfare of the church of Christ was dear to their hearts. No one who, for years past, knew the family will fail to remember Brother Downs as one who gave freely of time, means, and counsel for the good of the church. He was long an officer of and very prominent in the church, and was identified with all her enterprises. His instructive talks at the communion table will be long remembered by the writer.

In January, 1894, Brother Downs passed "over the river" and Sister Downs was left behind for a little while. She maintained her home till within two years of her death. There she loved to have her children and her friends visit with her. She loved to serve others, but shrank from being a care to others. She fell asleep on Jan. 16, 1905. She was tenderly cared for in her last days by her children, to whom she had for so long given unselfish service. She lived 79 years, less about three months She was a Christian over sixty years. She died strong in her faith in Christ. She will be sadly missed by the church at Houstonia, where for so long she held her membership. Her children will miss her most, of course. But enriched by her teaching and example they will surely hold out faithful to the end and meet their sainted mother in the Father's house of many mansions.

> "Mourn not the dead who calmly lie
> By God's own hand composed to rest;
> For hark! A voice from yonder sky
> Proclaims them blest—supremely blest.
> With them the toil and strife are o'er;
> Their labors end, their sorrows cease;
> For they have gained the blissful shore
> Where dwells serene eternal peace."

HUBBELL.

At his home in western Iowa, Jan. 28, 1905, M. B. Hubbell, age 77 years, 8 months, 11 days. His remains were brought to Atlantic (his old home) and the funeral service was conducted at the Christian church Jan. 31, after which we laid him away with his wife who had preceded him to the other world. He leaves nine children to mourn his death.

McGILL.

On Jan. 27, 1905, Mary F McGill, wife of Bro. S. S. McGill, pastor of the Christian church at Dodge City, Kan., went to her eternal home. Sister McGill was born Sept. 30, 1865, in Harrison Co. Mary F. Scott was married to Brother McGill, May 26, 1884. Of this union were born three children, who, with the husband, one sister and a host of friends, remain to mourn her loss. In her girlhood days she was a faithful attendant of the Bible school, and at the age of 21 united with the church of Christ, and has lived a consecrated Christian life. The funeral sermon was preached at Dodge City by Elder J. Riley Middleton, of Lewis, Kan., in the presence of a large audience of friends and neighbors. We laid her body to rest in a beautiful cemetery, two miles west of the city. She left this earth 'mid wintry blasts to awake in a clime where flowers bloom. To our beloved sister, we only say "good-by" as a prelude to the "good-morning" salute on that heavenly shore.

J. R. M.

MORRIS.

E. M. Morris was born in Buchanan county, Mo., Aug. 2, 1842, and died at Billings, Mo., Jan. 18, 1905. His parents came from Virginia, and were pioneers of western Missouri, settling in the vicinity of St. Joseph when that city was only a trading post for the Indians on the, then, frontier, and the great trading mart, Kansas City, was unthought of. Reared on the frontier, where the facilities for obtaining an education were so meager, he had only the advantages that the common schools of the time afforded. When a boy he went to live with a childless uncle in Franklin county, Mo., where he resided when the call to arms came in 1861. Having had the love of country deeply instilled into his nature by his father, who was a Methodist preacher, he enlisted in the union army in the spring of 1861, a boy of 18. Entering as a private, his natural ability as a leader of men soon asserted itself and his promotion was rapid, from private to corporal, from corporal to sergeant, from sergeant to lieutenant and then captain, in which position he served throughout the greater part of the war, being captain of a company in the 6th Mo. cavalry. He saw hard service in the southwest during the four bloody years. He was a brave soldier and served his country well.

When the war was over he returned to Franklin county, Mo., where he soon united in marriage to Miss Susan Clark, and soon thereafter moved to Franklin county, Kansas, where he bought land and engaged in farming and was prosperous, but the failure of his wife's health induced him to sell his farm and return to Missouri. The death of his wife soon followed. In the fall of 1868 he again moved west, this time settling in Greene county, Mo., and engaged in the mercantile business at Little York, from which place he removed to Billings, with the coming of the railroad, in 1870, where he opened the first business house erected in the town, and where he continued to be a leading business man until a disastrous fire in 1888 caused him to retire from the business. Two children gladdened the home of himself and his first wife, the elder of whom is now Mrs. Alonzo Turner, of Billings, at whose home he passed the last few months of his life, and where he died. The younger one soon followed her mother to the spirit world. Brother Morris was married again in 1868, to Miss Maggie Dye, at Little York, who died in 1873, leaving him a second time a widower with two small children, a boy and girl, while yet a young man. In 1874 he married Miss Hattie Nall, who with eight children, the fruit of their union, survives him. After the fire referred to above, in which the store in Billings was destroyed, he was postmaster in that town for one term, when he again engaged in farming in Christian county, where he remained until the spring of 1904, when he sold his farm and removed to Seattle, Wash., whither several of his children had preceded him. The climate of that country did not agree with him, and in October last his physician advised him to return to Missouri, which he did at once, but the seeds of disease had already taken too deep root, and the end came much sooner than the anxious relatives and friends expected.

While Brother Morris had many noble traits of character, and was a prince among men, we love now to think of his religious life and character. He was converted under the preaching of Bro. J. H. Garrison in 1873, and at once threw his wonderful energy into the work of the church, and from that time forward was a power in the councils of the brotherhood in southwest Missouri. Though not a preacher in the common acceptation of the word, he did often preach very acceptably both privately and in the pulpit. The writer knew him long and intimately, having been associated with him in business for a period of thirteen years, and counts it one of the great privileges of life to have known and associated with him as a friend and brother. In the Christian church at Billings, Jan. 20, Bro. W. B. Cochran, an old friend of the family, preached the funeral discourse to a large concourse of his old-time friends and neighbors, after which his remains were tenderly borne to their last resting place in Rose Hill cemetery. We pass by his faults and remember only the good. Requiescat.

WOODS.

Another shadow has fallen over the little congregation at Bowling Green, Fla. On Jan. 23, Brother Jones received a telegram from Clear Water, stating that our dearly beloved brother and elder, Dr. S. R. Woods, had passed in behind "the veil." The next day we met Sister Woods and some dear friends who accompanied her, at the station, to take charge of the body, which we carried to the church, where Brother Longdon delivered a very appropriate discourse, after which, according to his request, the Masons took charge of the body, and with tender hands and sorrowing hearts, placed it beneath the sands of Florida, in the cemetery at Bowling Green. Brother Longdon, no doubt, will send you a fuller notice, but we who have been so intimately associated with him all these latter years, think it very fitting that we at least make an attempt to express our appreciation of him as a teacher, as an elder, and as a very dearly beloved brother, true and faithful in small as well as great matters. He has been the life and stay of this congregation from the date of his identification with it, down to the day of his death. He has left us for a season several times, but we had consolation in that we looked for his return, but now our consolation must be in the fact that he has left us a noble life to imitate, and wait with patience until we too are called to come up higher. He leaves a noble, faithful wife, for whom our hearts are made to bleed when we think of how lonely she will be, besides a host of warm-hearted friends; in fact if he had any enemies anywhere, they were only such as would be enemies to all that is true, good, righteous and lovely. So after all our sorrows are swallowed up by our consolation victory; for we do not have to wait for "the dawning of the morning" to know that the friendship of our fellow mortals may be, and often is, true, strong, sweet and everlasting, for we have the sweet and ever abiding consolation of knowing that even death itself cannot sever the links that bind us together in the love of Christ our Savior. Yet a little while and we too shall fall asleep, only to awake "where the mists have cleared away."

LLOYD BAXENDALE.

By G. P. RUTLEDGE.

Author of "Pledge in Sermon."

CHAPTER XX.

A HAPPY SURPRISE—THE FIRST TEA.

"Rochester, N. Y., June ———.

"My dear Lloyd:—Doubtless this epistle will be a surprise. In our correspondence, heretofore, I have, with considerable effort, avoided references to my growing conviction that the misunderstood position you occupy is right. But the time has come for me, likewise, to renounce denominationalism; and at the same time to ask your advice as to my future course.

"My resignation is now in the hands of the official board, and next Sunday it will be announced to the congregation. The battle began three years ago in Burlington. At times I have tried to believe that you were fanatical and have even prayed that you might be led to again see and accept the orthodox interpretation of the scriptures. But my study of the New Testament has persistently condemned my prayers. Whenever I open the book for a text, no matter what the theme I wish to sermonize, I invariably stumble upon statements that suggest the lack of harmony which exists between the church of the first century and the multiplied denominations of to-day. Unable to endure the strain longer, I have decided to cut loose from the ——— church, and to stand squarely by the scriptures—let them lead where they may. The truth is, upon one point I have never been in perfect harmony with my denomination. Not feeling satisfied with my baptism, I was immersed about three years before I entered college. This, I presume, will be surprising news. I have kept it from my most intimate friends—did not tell my wife about it until quite recently! Nevertheless, the fact that I have secretly believed one thing and openly sanctioned and practiced another has annoyed me a great deal. Now, Lloyd, what am I to do? I have a family to support, no money laid by, and no reputation, like yours, to lean upon.

"But I must close. It seems a long time since we saw each other—indeed, I have been puzzled, and so have Landys and Libscom, at your constant refusal to join us on our summer outings. I am glad you are recovering from the strange affliction which befell you last winter.

"Hoping to hear from you soon and wishing you well, I am, as ever,

"Yours,
"Warren."

This letter, written before its author had heard of the latest sensation in Providence and received on Saturday, was the first of the many communications to receive Mr. Baxendale's attention Monday morning. Reading it again and studiously contemplating its contents for a while, he gave a sigh of relief that indicated a careful and final conclusion, and addressed his friend as follows:

"Providence, R I., June ———

"My Dear Warren:—Yours received Saturday. Owing to recent important events, it had to be laid on the table. I have dozens of communications to answer, but yours has the "right of way." I am very much gratified to know that you have read yourself out of denominationalism. I have purposely avoided meeting you, because I feared that keeping company with a "heretic" might, in some way, involve you—hence my refusal to go on the annual outing of the "Old Guard." Now that the conditions have been so unexpectedly changed, I hope to renew the sacred associations and enjoy the old-time summer pleasures—you, too, are a "heretic"! And as for Landys and Libscom, they have nothing at stake. To my great surprise and delight, the Poplar Square church has discarded denominationalism and recalled me to the pastorate. There was some opposition, but the majority in favor of the change was overwhelming, and I felt it my duty to acquiesce. I presume you have, ere this, seen by the papers that the Poplar Square church has been read out of the denomination—strange that it should have been expelled after it had already withdrawn! The church will hold a meeting on Thursday of this week to effect the new organization. By the way, that bit of ancient history in your life surprised me, and it has likewise put me to thinking. The subject of baptism, except in its design, had not, hitherto, claimed my attention.

"I note what you say about your future, and think I can relieve your anxiety, for the present at least. If you are willing to come, perhaps I may be able to induce Poplar Square to call you as associate pastor. Or, if such a thing seems impossible, you can live in Providence anyway—doing what you can to advance the interests of the church. I will cheerfully share my salary with you.

"Wire me your decision in the matter immediately upon receipt of this, as I shall have to be advised by Thursday.

"Yours as of yore,
"Lloyd."

After a busy day—devoted to correspondence, plans for the new work, and a few special calls—Mr. Baxendale joined Mr. Randolph at the bank and accompanied him home.

At the tea table, Alma remarked that her father had neglected to tell her they were to have company, and added that they would all have to take "little bites." Her father answered that, owing to the responsibility of looking after the new pastor and getting him started, he had forgotten to mention the fact that they were to have the distinguished honor of giving him the first cup of tea. Whereupon, the preacher said, with a hearty smile: "Really, this conversation is alarming! Since the service, yesterday, I have been too busy to eat. The truth is, I have been so absorbed by surprising events, of late, that my appetite has not been in evidence. Unfortunately, however, it has reasserted itself and commands that my actions upon the present occasion shall not be tempered with mercy!"

As Alma sat at the head of the table, presiding, with easy grace and dignity, in her mother's stead, Cupid stood upon her shoulder and renewed his target practice—sending each arrow home to the center of Mr. Baxendale's heart.

When the meal was concluded, Mr. Randolph consulted his watch, remarked that it was later than he had thought, excused himself, and went to have "Old Ned hooked up," telling the preacher that he could remain at the table and finish the scraps!

"Mr. Baxendale," said Alma, when her father had left the room, "if dear mother could be here now, it would seem like old times." The tears rolled over her flushed cheeks, while in her countenance there was a sweet blending of love for the living and sorrow for the dead.

"Yes," replied Mr. Baxendale, tenderly, "your mother was one of the most beautiful and congenial of women, and to have her with us again—especially in our new work—would, indeed, be a pleasure."

"She was so disappointed—almost heartbroken—over your resignation," continued Alma. "It certainly is sad to think she is not here to enjoy the happy turn affairs have taken."

"Perhaps," rejoined the minister, "she does rejoice with us. We do not know just how the departed are situated—it is all a matter of conjecture—but, somehow, I derive great consolation from the thought that our loved ones, who have preceded us to the other world, are cognizant of our movements, and that they continue to sympathize and rejoice with us."

While they thus conversed for a few minutes—all too brief for both—Mr. Baxendale realized, as never before, that he was in love with Alma, almost to the point of distraction. For preachers are human and can be distracted as well as others of the same race. He wondered if she could really care for him and felt that he must, then and there, pour forth in her ears the surging passion of his heart; but the proprieties of the occasion forbade it.

When Mr. Randolph, his guest, and "Old Ned" disappeared around the corner, Alma sought the north veranda hammock and indulged her thoughts of Mr. Baxendale, letting them have free course. She hoped they would not be gone long and that he would remain on the porch and talk until late, after their return. She recalled the last evening he had spent with them, before that fatal Sunday; and, remembering his enjoyment of the cherries, resolved that she would have the same treat for him again. And when her father returned alone, saying the drive, added to Mr. Baxendale's multiplied exertions of the last few days, had given him a severe headache and that he had taken him home, she keenly felt the disappointment. She kept it concealed, however, and Mr. Randolph innocently took the plate, prepared for another, and ate the fruit as though he thought it had been selected and arranged especially for himself.

A Song That is Converting Its Thousands.

Charles M. Alexander, of Chicago, is regarded as one of the most successful singing evangelists in the world to-day; Sankey's mantle has evidently fallen upon him. For this reason he was chosen to go with Dr. Torrey on his recent tour around the world. One of his most effective solos is "Tell Mother I'll be There," by Chas. M. Fillmore, one of our preachers in Ohio. On his return from his circuit of the globe he wrote a letter to the author, giving the following incidents concerning the use of the song:

I shall begin by telling you how I first came to use it: A friend of mine cut it out of a little magazine and sent it to me to put in my scrap-book, saying he believed it would be a song to touch the hearts of men. I put it in my scrap-book, but did not use it for a year, and often looked at it, wondering if the space in my scrapbook was not wasted where it was pasted. But one night in Newton, Kan., I was called upon quickly to sing a solo. I had sung most of my effective solos and thought I might as well try "Tell Mother I'll be There" to see what effect it would have. It was a railroad town, and a large number of men came to Christ that night. After the meeting was over one of the most influential, and the biggest engineer who ran into Newton, came up and took me by the hand and said, "I am glad you sang 'Tell Mother I'll be There.' No preaching nor praying nor anything else touched my heart, but when you sang that song I thought of the promise I had made my dear old mother who is in heaven, and it brought me." He said, "Keep on singing it and I will bring the boys out, and we will bring them to Christ." He said, "Sing it every night," and we did sing it every night. We sang song after song and would run on into the chorus of "Tell Mother I'll be There" during the after meeting, and it proved one of the most effective songs in our great meeting. I came on to Cedar Falls, Ia., and sang it in the great State Normal school to about 1,200 teachers to see what impression it would make upon them. It melted them like wax. So I thought I would better take it to Australia with me—I was just getting ready to go—and I did. I sang it in the great Melbourne town hall to about 3,000 men at a noon meeting one day. Before singing it I told them that when President McKinley was in office his mother lay dying. She sent for him to come to see her. He hired a special car and telegraphed her the title of that song—"Tell Mother I'll be There." Now, I said, how many of you men have a mother in heaven, whether you are Christians or not? I want to know. Hands up! And the hands went up by the hundreds all over the audience. Then when the song came it carried everything with it, although I was in the poorest voice I had been at any time during the series of meetings. A man wrote a column and a half editorial upon that incident and the singing of the song. From that time on, the song was requested everywhere we went.

One of the most striking incidents I have, was told me by a prominent railroad man on the train as I went from Melbourne to Sidney about three months after our Melbourne meetings. He was over to visit a cousin's family who had all been brought to Christ during the meetings except one son about 22 years of age, a fine young fellow, who had proved up to that week to be unreachable, but they were all gathered in the parlor around the piano, singing. They had sung a few verses of "Tell Mother I'll be There," when this young fellow asked them to stop, and requested his sister to play the accompaniment for him while he went over and stood under the portrait of his old mother who had gone to heaven two years before. He said, "This is my confession," and he sang, "Tell Mother I'll be There," then turned around and told them he had settled it! He had given his heart to God! He was going to heaven to meet his mother!

I have often used the song in this way—I would sing "Where is My Wandering Boy To-Night?" straight through one verse, and at the close of the verse have the choir strike up in the same key, "Tell Mother I'll be There." Then I would sing another verse of "Where is My Wandering Boy To-Night?" and the choir came in after the chorus with the chorus of "Tell Mother I'll be There." You can see how effective that would be. The first night we used it I heard of a very wicked young man being brought to Christ.

I am delighted with the song. It has been used to the salvation of hundreds, I believe, during our tour around the world. If you have any more good music that you think I could use, I should be glad to have it, and appreciate it.

Yours most cordially,
CHAS. M. ALEXANDER.

Have You Asthma in Any Form?

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in every form in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous, therefore this remedy is of the most vital interest to Asthmatic sufferers.

Mr. Thos. Phillips, No. 267 Middle St., Pawtucket, R. I., writes May 9th, I thank God and the Kola Importing Co., for my cure of Asthma after I had given up hopes of getting cured. Mrs. Maggie Gardner, of Ackworth, Iowa, writes May 6th, suffered for several years with Asthma and could get no relief, but the Kola Compound permanently cured me. Mr. C. J. Case, Johnsonville, N. Y., writes May 5th, the Kola Compound proved a Godsend to me, as it cured me of Asthma in the worst form, and I had suffered with it from childhood. Mr. E. Aldrich, 391 Mill St., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., a prominent citizen, writes, my son suffered with Asthma for seven years. Doctors could do nothing for him, and to save his life advised me to take him to Denver, Colo. A friend advised me to try Himalya and it completely cured him. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the Importers, copies of which they will be glad to send you.

To prove beyond a doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

"Dandy" Men of Landaur, Himalaya Mountains.

By E. C. Davis.

Excepting rikshaws, no carriages are seen on these mountains above Rajpur. People travel on foot, horseback or in "dandies." These are a sort of chair provided with curved poles like a canoe frame. A cross pole at each end like a neck yoke completes the outfit. There is room in the dandy for one person, sometimes also a small seat for a child. This chair, or dandy, is carried by two pairs of men who place the ends of the poles on their shoulders, one man walking slightly ahead of the other, which gives a fore and aft position to the poles and affords the purchase on the shoulder. For long journeys two extra men are taken to relieve four regular carriers and each man receives about 12 cents a day.

For short trips of a mile or two, as for calls or church-going, and the return trip, four cents per man is the common wage. Another sort of dandy is for children, or light people. It is shaped quite like a canvas canoe, with which many American boys and girls are familiar, and the protruding bows at each end rest directly upon the men's shoulders without the cross pole. This is called a "durrie" dandy, from the stout "durrie" or cotton rug which forms the bottom of the canoe-like chair. Two men only are necessary to carry it. Churches provide themselves with dandy sheds instead of places for horses or carriages.

During time of service the number of dandy men outside the church is sometimes equal to half the congregation inside.

These men are mostly Hindoos who come out from their remote homes in the mountains to find work during the vacation season in a European station like Landaur, Mussoorie. They speak a mountain dialect of their own which is based on Sanscrit, but they understand Hindi and some Urdu. Unless given clothing or some uniform they are usually scantily clad. They wear a cotton skull cap instead of the big turban so common on the plains. Many of them carry flint and steel. For tinder they use the downy fibre from the backs of certain leaves, which they deftly strip off and dry in hot ashes. Their pipe, made of a green leaf rolled up like a tiny funnel, is a curiosity despite its odor. The pipe is not put to the mouth. The smoke is drawn in a peculiar way through the hands. One pipe is enough for a dozen men or more and is passed from hand to hand. These men assembled in such numbers at church time present an opportunity to evangelize the heathen at our doors. This season the Christian Endeavor society has had a committee to provide speakers to preach and talk to these dandy men. Dr. Martha Smith, of our mission, from Mahoba, has been the mainstay of this work. Though not able to speak to them, she has bound up their bruises and treated their sicknesses and hopes next year to visit one of their chief villages in the mountains. Though I have not been the chief speaker always, I have found much pleasure in helping in this work among these men, and I have many friends among them. They listen attentively and, in some cases, at least, thoughtfully, and have come to feel that we are their friends and care for their welfare.

While speaking of idol worship two weeks ago, this keen and deplorable reply came from one of them: "But in the church on the hill there are idols; we have seen them." And 'tis even so, in the Roman Catholic church. What could we say to make them understand, except that God forbids all such things and their worship.

They think all white people are Christians and often ask why some sahibs (white men) underpay them and oppress them. The question brings up afresh the deplorable fact of heathen-civilized hindrances which have accompanied the messengers of the gospel to China, New Hebrides, the Philippines and India.

Similar work among dandy men is being carried on by an energetic pastor who conducts a campaign among the men at the theater and rink in Mussoorie. Missions have been undertaken also in the capital of Tirhi, a native state in the hills, but with only indifferent success. Two independent workers are now engaged in tramping the lonely mountain paths and hunting out villages and preaching the gospel to these harmless, yet ignorant and lost, men. One of these men is a native who supports himself, when not touring, by carpentering. He preaches because of his devotion and love for his Master and fellow men.

The other worker is a consecrated Englishman who depends for his support on free will offerings of friends at home. He has been in India for about fifteen years and has lived as a native. He was discovered by one of our C. W. B. M. missionaries last year and holds the views of the current reformation. Some of us want to see him and his work taken on by our mission. His support is precarious and he is too good a man to be lost to our work.

Our holiday and study time is past. We soon go down to our station to resume the building of the Ohio mission in the Hamirpur district.

Miss Weston and the Grog-Tub.

Miss Weston, the great friend of our blue-jackets, found herself one day on board H. M. S. Topaze, by kind permission of the commander. After giving a temperance address she wanted to take pledges, and looking around, and seeing, as she supposed, a beer-tub, with its bright, polished bands, standing near, she asked if she might be allowed to use it as a table. "Certainly," said the commander, with a smile, "but it's the first time it has been put to such a use. Now, men, a couple of hands to roll out the grog-tub." Amidst cheers and laughter, it was rolled out, and a capital table it made, and more than 60 names were enrolled. One young sailor, after he had laid down the pen, significantly rapped the tub with his knuckles, and said, "There goes a nail in your coffin, old fellow." Running his eye down the list, the commander significantly added, "Sixty-odd nails to-day; if they all hold firm, I won't give much for the old grog-tub's life."

Girls Dislike Housework.

Factories are overwhelmed with applicants for work, sweat shops flourish on cheap and abundant labor, department stores turn away thousands of would-be salesgirls, typewriters are legion, there are more teachers than there are places, and the cry of the unemployed is often heard in the land. Yet households are broken up, cafes glitter, restaurants issue cheap meal tickets, boarding-houses multiply, and the American home is yearly growing less, because the American housekeeper cannot obtain willing and competent service. In factories are girls who would rather cook, in shops women who would make good housekeepers, hundreds of typewriters are reeling off badly spelled words who would make creditable waitresses, and many are teaching school who should be doing anything else in the world. The Woman's Educational and Industrial Union of Boston made a systematic effort to attract the workers in shops and factories to domestic service, but with signal failure. From 564 women who were asked to consider housework, only thirty-six applied, and these were not altogether satisfactory. Their dislike for the work is frankly stated to be on account of the long hours, no evenings for themselves, the isolation from other workers, and the social stigma that attaches to the occupation.—Jane Seymour Klink, in the February Atlantic.

The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, Etc.

As stated in our last issue the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered action of the Kidneys and urinary organs.

The President of the Suffolk Hospital, Boston, states that Alkavis was tested in the hospital on chronic cases of Bladder and Rheumatic trouble. It cured when old and established compounds wholly failed, and our good words are at your disposal, for all should know of the good accomplished by its use. Dr. W. H. Hawley, Physician and Surgeon, Penn Yan, N. Y., writes: "I have used Alkavis myself and in my practice with satisfactory results." Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from numbers of others, including many ladies suffering from disorders peculiar to womanhood.

The Church Kidney Cure Company, of New York, who so far are its only importers, are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free sample of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the Christian-Evangelist who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the Company, and receive the Alkavis entirely free. Address Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 404 Fourth Avenue, New York.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE FIRST NIGHT.

Before nightfall the three carpets were down, and the Woodney furniture was all under cover. Most of the things were still unpacked, but the folding-beds were ready for their occupants. That of Mr. and Mrs. Woodney was in the middle room, while the one claimed by Mace and her grandmother stood near the scarred organ in the dark back room—that is to say, the parlor. It did not look very much like a folding bed when it was closed, and by means of putting vases and books and a gilded paper-weight on the top (all of which had to be removed each night) the deception was carried still farther, and while it did not look much like a bed, it did not look like anything else. All were standing in the backyard having the utmost difficulty in getting rid of the Tumbletons—not because the Tumbletons desired to stay, but because they did not understand how to leave a place when they had reached it—when it was remembered that there was no coal oil in the house.

"Now, I'll tell you," said Mr. Tumbleton, "the store closes at supper-time, but they won't be no trouble about it. When I hain't got what I want I borrows. It saves time and then many a time, you know, it would be inconvenient to buy, not to say impossible, when to borrow is always right to your hand."

This was heard by Bob Enderthorpe who had plunged out of his house into the adjacent yard, and was walking about under his apple trees. "Do you want some coal oil for to-night?" he asked eagerly. "Let me run and get some."

"No," said Mace, hastily, "we don't want any."

Her tone was so final, that Bob flushed with mortification at this second repulse, and her mother gave her a reproving look. "We are all so tired," her father spoke up, "that we shall go to rest early, but we appreciate your kindness."

Bob knew Mace didn't appreciate it, and he went away to the apple trees on the other side of the house. He couldn't help being awkward and ungainly and homely, any more than Mace could help being dainty and well-formed, and pleasant to look upon.

"Mace," said Mrs. Woodney, "I'm surprised at your speaking so to the boy. I know he let your organ slip—"

"It isn't that," said Mace, her eyes flashing. "His father stole the sheep, and I don't want to have anything to do with a boy whose father steals sheep."

"Well, I'll be going," Mr. Tumbleton announced. "I'll send A back with the dog." And this time he really went.

"What dog does he mean?" demanded the grandmother in surprise, when he was out of hearing.

"I'm afraid to sleep in the house with only a stone to keep the back door shut—I mean the parlor door," said Mrs. Woodney. "So Mr. Tumbleton offered to chain his dog there for to-night, and he will sell it to us for five dollars. He says it is a splendid watch dog, and I think it would be a good thing to train it so it could lead Mr. Woodney about while Mace is at school. But what sheep was it Mr. Enderthorpe stole, Mace, and how did you know about it?"

"It was Mr. Tumbleton's pet sheep," said Mace, her face still flushed with anger because Bob had dared to obtrude his presence upon them again. "Mr. Tumbleton told us all about it."

"I suppose I wasn't listening," said her mother, dreamily. "In fact, I am thinking about writing a book. I imagine it wouldn't be difficult if I once went at it."

"I do hope, Geraldine," said her mother-in-law earnestly, "that you won't begin it till the house is in order." Presently A was seen, leading a dog by an iron chain, or rather to speak literally, holding him back with all his strength. The dog was an immense St. Bernard, as large as a calf, and apparently as savage as a tiger. He had detected an odor about the Woodneys different from that which distinguished the old settlers of the village, and he strained every leg to dash upon them. The last few yards of the progress, he might be said to drag A after him on a run, which the entire weight of the oldest Tumbleton could not check. However, before the dust and leaves tossed in air by this rush, had reached the rear door, the Woodneys were all safe inside.

"What must I do with him?" A called through the closed door.

"Take him away!" cried the older Mrs. Woodney with more shrillness than her placid tones usually displayed.

"He won't go away," shouted A. "He likes to stay here." The dog was, in fact, clawing furiously at the door. "I'll just fasten him up here for the night. When you speak to him, call him 'Pup.'"

Mr. Woodney, who had not known of his wife's scheme regarding the door, endeavored to remonstrate, but the barking of the dog, and the hammering of the young master drowned his voice. "He can't hear you, papa," said Mace in distress, "and I do so want him to take it away! You must climb up to that little window and speak to him. I'll get you a chair."

"I do not think," said her mother, "that one could reach our parlor window from a chair. It is much too high."

"I will put a box on the chair." She did so. "Now, papa, do be careful."

The Editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST knows of his personal knowledge a number of persons who were severely afflicted with rectal troubles whom Dr. Smith has cured. He is personally acquainted with the Doctor, and has no hesitation in commending any sufferer thus afflicted to him.

Her father, feeling his way cautiously, ascended. He opened the window upon its hinges and thrust his head outside, which was a signal for terrific barking and frantic leaps. He called to A, but there was no reply. "I fear he has gone home," he said. "Mace, you come up and see. Be eyes for me, dear." He climbed down, and Mace climbed up. "Oh, he is gone!" she cried. "Nothing is here but the dog."

"Well, my dear," said Mr. Woodney, cheerfully, "just say 'Pup' to him, and let's go to bed before it gets too dark for the rest of you to see." As it was fast growing night, this advice was acted upon, and soon after, the folding beds were showing what they were made for. Mace always slept with her grandmother, and sometimes, before they fell asleep, it was their custom to review the events of the day.

"I am sorry I grew so angry," said Mace, "but after all, my organ is ruined, and it was all his fault. And he is nothing but a sheepstealer's son after all. And his red hair and big mouth and staring eyes and the way he stumbled and fell around just made me worse than I might have been. And you know, grandmother, even if I wasn't right to be so out of humor, a Woodney couldn't apologize to a person like that Bob Enderthorpe."

The old lady cleared her throat and did not answer at once. "It is proper to keep up the family," she said at last, "but one should always hold up the best end of it. And do you not feel, my dear, that when you show your temper to an inferior, you give him a chance to prove himself your superior?"

"No, indeed!" said Mace emphatically.

"Nevertheless, Mace, that is the truth. The young man was really not to blame, for it was Mr. Tumbleton who dropped the organ. You were unjust to him and his forbearance in not scolding back, and afterwards his magnanimity in offering to lend you coal oil, gave him the chance I spoke of."

"I cannot feel" said Mace hotly, "that a person like that is superior to me. But I shall never speak to him again, and in that way I will be safe."

In the meantime, the huge St. Bernard had fallen into a groove, as it were, and seemed unable to get out. That is to say, he had begun to bark thus—"Boof! boof!" at an interval of about five seconds. It came as regularly as the ticking of a clock. His tone was harsh and distressingly loud, showing that he quivered from nose to tail at each explosion. It was impossible to sleep, and as soon as Mace stopped talking she felt herself waiting for the next bark with shrinking dread. Each terrific "Boof!" seemed to pierce her nerves. The night wore on, but "Pup" appeared as fresh as at the beginning.

"What shall we do?" cried the grandmother as the clock ceased striking twelve.

"Let us get up," called Mr. Woodney from the middle room. "We can't sleep—and we might go for Mr. Tumbleton and have him take the dog away, It is true a robber might come in, but I am sure he would receive a hearty welcome, if we could get rid of our faithful guard."

At that moment, there was a knocking on the front door. "There is some one at the kitchen!" exclaimed Mrs. Woodney. "We must keep in the habit of calling the front room the kitchen and the back room the parlor, till we have it by heart."

The knocking came again, and Pup burst into a furious storm of canine vituperation. Mr. Woodney hastened from bed, and being blind, passed into the next room without hesitation. It was intensely dark, but he did not pause. However, as the house was almost new to him, he mistook the direction and fell to the floor with a groan, causing the house to shake.

"Oh, what is it?" cried his wife.

"The pump, dear," called Mr. Woodney. "Is there somebody at the door? Pray knock again, so I can find the door."

"Mr. Woodney," came a timid voice from outside, "my mother is real sick. Will you please have your dog to quit his barking?"

"Where is your mother?" asked Mr. Woodney, crawling out from under the pump.

"We live next door, I am Bob Enderthorpe."

"I will join you as soon as I have dressed," said the other, "and we will see what can be done."

NEW MEXICO.

Roswell, Feb. 6.—Bro. Granville Jones, of Texas, assisted us in a three weeks' meeting here, that resulted in 35 additions—26 by confession and baptism. The last week of the meeting was the most disagreeable weather that I have experienced since I came a year ago, but the interest was unflagging, there being three confessions the last night.—C. C. Hill.

NEW YORK.

Niagara Falls.—Five confessions on Feb. 5, the first Lord's day after our revival meeting closed.

New York, Feb. 7.—L. D. Vosburg, of Brewerton, has just closed a meeting with nine additions by confession and baptism. Miss Maude Slingerland, of Sylvania, Pa., did the singing.—S. J. Corey.

Niagara Falls.—Evangelist Ira H. Durfee, of Painesville, Ohio, closed a four weeks' meeting here February 3 with 31 additions to the church: 24 baptized, one from the Baptists and six by letter.—J. A. Wharton.

OHIO.

Dayton, Jan. 30.—Since last report 12 were added to the Central church by confession; nine by letter and statement. In all 33 during January at regular services.—I. J. Cahill.

Marion.—One added Jan. 29. Two added Feb. 5. Work grows nicely.—O. D. Maple.

Cleveland, Miles Ave—Our meeting held with home forces closed on Tuesday evening with 120 additions. A large percentage of these are parents. This is the second meeting held with home forces within a year. We have had 280 additions within the last fourteen months. H. E. Parker was our leader of song and soloist.—T. Alfred Fleming, pastor.

Mansfield, Feb. 9.—We had a really great meeting here. I preached. Prof. T. E. Fitz, of New York City, lead the music. The meeting was so big that it was the main topic of conversation throughout the city. A prominent lawyer—not a member of the church—told me that in the last month there had been more talk about our meeting in his office than there had been about law. We had 105 additions, and seven more last Sunday. Our great building was filled all kinds of weather. The treasurer sent me up a check for $100 to-day as a present and token of appreciation of the good done in the meeting. Among the number who made confession last Sunday were Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Campbell. Mr. Campbell is a grandnephew of Alexander Campbell, and a very fine man in every way. He is a commission merchant of this city and has been a member of the Episcopal church.—Bruce Brown.

East Chesterfield.—The meeting continued 20 days. In all 21 additions—12 baptized. I begin February 4 at Michigantown, Ind.—E. L. Frazier.

Hiram, Feb. 7.—Three have been added at Orwell since last report.—H. E. Beckler.

Coshocton.—Eight have been added since Nov. 1, 1904, at our regular services—four by letter and four by baptism.—J. N. Johnston.

Cleveland, Feb. 3.—The result of the evangelistic campaign is that 64 have been added to the Franklin Circle church—51 by confession and 13 by letter and statement. Of this latter number three came from other religious bodies. In all there have been 300 accessions to our city churches during this campaign.—Edgar D. Jones.

Wilmington, Feb. 10.—I closed a good meeting for Brother E. J. Meacham and his congregation a few days ago. There were 138 additions—about 100 by baptism. Only four or five out of the number were received from the Sunday-school. I have never held a meeting where better preparation had been made by the minister, and where the interest was sustained from beginning to close as was the case in this revival. The minister is an untiring worker, and he has excellent help in the person of Miss Etta Rannals as assistant pastor. It is easy to preach where we have spiritual churches; and it is easy to roll in 100 or 200 where the church has the confidence of the community. I go next to Elyria, where John P. Sala ministers. His letters are full of hope for a good meeting. "Vim, vigor and victory" seems to be his motto. Leonard Daugherty will sing.—James Small.

OKLAHOMA.

Payson, Feb. 6.—The Christian church of Payson was organized July 3, 1904, with 11 members. W. B. Frank was elected elder, and Brethren Williams and Maxwell deacons. On the third Sunday in January of this year J. J. Bunnell and myself began a series of meetings which has resulted in 22 additions—seven by letter and 15 by confession and baptism. The meeting is yet in progress and bids fair for many more precious souls coming into the fold.—J. G. Cansler, pastor.

Henry, Feb. 3.—I have held a 10 days' meeting which resulted in 14 by baptism and one from the Methodists. I expect to hold another meeting soon.—G. W. Rogers.

WASHINGTON.

Rosalia.—W. L. McCollough, pastor, and I have closed a fine meeting in Clarkston, with 24 added and many people taught the word. I am in Rosalia with A. J. Adams.—
—R. L. McHatton.

Walla Walla, Feb. 6.—Fourteen additions in regular work recently: three confessions, one reclaimed, three from Baptists, six by letter, one from Methodists.—Morton Gregory, pastor.

Rosalia, Jan. 30.—The work at this point is doing nicely; three additions the 15th and one the 22d. R. L. McHatton, of Santa Rosa, Cal., is now in a meeting with us. The weather has been disagreeable, but the attendance has been very good. Rev. McConnell is having a very successful meeting at Albion.—A. J. Adams.

Spokane, Feb. 6.—Meeting continues, splendid interest, confessions and baptisms nearly every night for over two weeks. We close Sunday.—B. B. Burton, evangelist, B. E. Utz, pastor.

Waitsburg, Feb. 2.—Our revival meetings are still continuing. There have been 30 additions so far—22 confessions, three by letter and five from other churches. S. G. Griffith, our state evangelist, was with us in January. We are continuing a few evenings.—W. T. Adams.

WEST VIRGINIA.

McMechen, Feb. 2.—Meeting closed here Tuesday night with crowded house, splendid interest and three baptisms. Thirty-nine additions during meeting. Brother Mitchel goes from here to Hopedale, Ohio, to begin meeting there. We look for many more additions here in the near future as a result of Brother Mitchel's great work.—John Mullachy, pastor.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Vol. XLII. No. 8. February 23, 1905. $1.50 A Year

A WORLD-MOVEMENT.

NEVER was the presence of Christ among the nations more manifest than to-day. Everywhere there is agitation, overturning, political and religious ferment, and social and industrial unrest. Governmental upheavals in Russia, great revivals in England and Wales, moral and commercial reformation in America, are but the signs that Christ is shaking the nations preparatory to an upward movement. The leaven of Christianity is at work in all lands, pagan and civilized. The Church is being aroused to its obligations to evangelize the whole world as never before. These outward movements referred to are but the preparation of the nations for the missionary and his message. No church that values its own life, and recognizes its true mission, will stand apart from this great world-movement which looks to the universal reign of Christ. The churches of this Reformation are asked to fall into line for an advance movement toward world-wide evangelism on the first Lord's Day in March. Let none but those who have broken faith with Christ, as a Leader, be found wanting when the roll-call of the churches which have responded to this appeal, shall be made. The Master whom we follow is looking down upon us, and expects everyone who calls Him Lord to do his duty. Let those who desire His presence assist in carrying out His last and greatest command.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events.

The Assassination of Sergius.

The Grand Duke Sergius, uncle of the Czar, fell a victim to the bomb of a Russian "reformer," on February 17, in the streets of Moscow. It was a regrettable, but not a surprising incident. Assassination is always a villainous procedure, and it loses none of its criminality when it is directed against one who really deserves ill of his country. Sergius was one of the most potent counselors against reform. He stood for the autocracy and against all of those forward movements which the Russian people have been demanding and upon which, as we believe, the salvation of the nation depends. His death will not help the cause of reform. Perhaps it will not hinder it much either, for political assassination is too common in Russia to produce the reactionary effect against its perpetrators which it would in this country. A very large per cent of the total population of Russia soberly considers assassination an entirely legitimate instrument for carrying on an important political argument such as the present campaign for reform. Grand Duke Sergius was a much hated man. Even more than the Czar he stood as the unbending champion of autocracy. But he was not killed because he was personally unpopular. The bomb was aimed at autocracy; it struck Sergius. Other bombs aimed at the same mark within the past few months have found it in the person of one or another prominent leader. Von Plehve, minister of the interior, and General Bobrikoff, governor-general of Finland, are recent victims. But a bomb thrown at an individual can never, except in the rarest instances, destroy a system. The ominous thing is that there are thousands of people in Russia who believe that this method will be effective if they will only keep it up. So it is morally certain that, unless reforms are granted very promptly—and perhaps even if they are granted—there will be other victims. It is credibly reported that Sergius was forewarned of his fate and even of the exact day of his assassination. The Chicago Tribune publishes a statement that its St. Petersburg correspondent, in a letter written January 30 and received February 16 (the day before the assassination) wrote as follows: "Grand Duke Sergius, a few days ago, received a letter: 'You have twenty-two days to live.' The next day came a letter: 'You have twenty-one days to live.' Then: 'You have twenty days to live.' According to present calculations from to-day, January 30, Sergius has eighteen days to live." From the same informant, whose prognostication in one case proved so tragically accurate, comes the statement that Grand Duke Vladimir is scheduled as the next victim, and that others who are under sentence of death by the revolutionists are Minister De Witte, General Trepoff, Grand Duke Alexis, Dowager Empress Feodorovna, Minister Bouligan and Pobiedonostseff, procurator of the Holy Synod.

Death of Lew Wallace.

General Lew Wallace died last Wednesday at his home at Crawfordsville, Ind., at the age of seventy-seven years. It is not given to many men to win distinction in so many and so diverse lines of activity. He was soldier, diplomat and author. In the Mexican and Civil wars he served with distinction and when the Spanish war broke out he offered his services in spite of his seventy years, and so serious was he in this offer that he withdrew from a senatorial campaign in which he had fair chances of success. For three years he was governor of New Mexico, then changing his residence from Santa Fe to Constantinople, served through one administration in the difficult post of United States minister to Turkey. His fame as an author rests, of course, upon "Ben-Hur." His first novel, "The Fair God," was never a great success, and his last, "The Prince of India," is believed to have gone far toward driving its publishers into bankruptcy. But between the two came "Ben-Hur," which was both a literary and a financial success in the largest measure. It won for him both fame and fortune. The fact is worth noting that General Wallace was a hard working man rather than a genius. Things did not come easily to him. He was a notably painstaking and laborious writer, and even great success and the promise of large gain could not lure him to haste.

Cigarette Legislation.

An anti-cigarette bill has passed one house of the Indiana legislature by a very large majority and seems practically certain to pass the other within a few days. The measure makes it unlawful to manufacture, keep, sell, exchange or give away either cigarettes or the materials for making cigarettes. The opponents of the bill have been anxious to introduce an amendment to make the prohibition apply only to minors. There are some things to be said in favor of the amendment, but the convincing argument against it is that a prohibition applying only to minors never has been and never can be effectively enforced. Such laws exist in a number of states, but they have never been more than mild discouragers of cigarette-smoking by boys. A law against keeping them for sale can be much more easily enforced. The discussion incident to the passage of this bill in Indiana has shown a good deal of wholesome sentiment on the subject. It is a grave topic which is not always taken seriously and some very laborious efforts have been made to turn it into a joke. But amid all the facetiousness for which it has given occasion, there has been discovered an overwhelming body of settled convictions that the only safe thing to do with the cigarette is to kill it.

Some Contrasts.

The man who sometimes tries to see life with the eyes of his neighbor will not fail to derive some benefit from the changed point of view, if he be wise enough to be honest with himself. We are wont to believe that we are about at the top of civilization and surpass the world. But if Americans were to contrast, for instance, the telegraph system as it is handled in the land of John Bull and in our own country we would see that government control of this necessity decreases the toll charges and adds to the efficiency. In other ways, too, the post office department of Great Britian serves better the people than our own department. One can send twice as much first-class matter in England as here for the same price. One can send a registered letter from London to St. Louis for just about half that it costs us to send the same letter from St. Louis to London. Of course in this country there are more risks of robbery and accident and perhaps the extra work is worth the extra charge. Then the British postal savings banks are very largely patronized by the very class of people for whom they were established—the man whose opportunity to save is slight because of small wages. In Great Britian there are 14,362 post office savings banks and 9,403,852 depositors have in them now $730,000,000. The comparison with America can not be complete with the figures at our disposal, but it would seem that while the savings of Americans are three times as great in volume—deposited in regular banks—there are 2,000,000 fewer depositors, with double the population. This would indicate the great value of the post office savings bank. At least one-quarter of the population in Great Britain has a savings bank account, large or small, while in America the proportion is less than one in ten.

A Eulogy on Frances E. Willard.

A marble statue of Frances E. Willard was unveiled in Statuary Hall in the Capitol at Washington on Friday of last week. In that gallery of the greatest characters of the several states, she will stand as one of the representatives of Illinois. On the day of the unveiling, Senator Beveridge delivered a eulogy on the character and work of Miss Willard which was as eloquent and beautiful as it was deserved. He spoke in part as follows:

"From the beginning woman has personified the world's ideals. She was the chosen bride of art before the period of recorded chronicle. All things that minister to mankind's good have, from the very first, by the general judgment, been made feminine—the ships that bear us through storm to port, the seasons that bring variety, surcease of toil and life's renewal, the earth itself, which through all time and in all speech has been the universal mother. The Graces were women and the Muses, too. Always her influence has glorified the world until her beatitude becomes divine in Mary, mother of God.

"And now Illinois, near the very heart of the world's great Republic, and at the dawn of the twentieth century, chooses woman herself as the ideal of that Commonwealth and of this period. For the character of Frances E. Willard is womanhood's apotheosis.

"To make the homes of the millions pure, to render sweet and strong those human relations which constitute the family—this was her mission and her work. And there is no surer method of mankind's upliftment than this, no better way to make a nation noble and enduring. For the hearthstone is the foundation whereon the state is built. The family is the social and the natural unit. Spencer wrote learnedly of 'the individual and the state'—but he wrote words merely. The individual is not the important factor in nature or the nation. Nature abhors the individual and destroys him. And so by this deep reasoning of nature itself. Frances Willard's work was justified.

"But hers was no philosopher's record. She got her inspiration from a higher source than human thinking. In her life's work we see restored to earth that faith which, whenever man has let it work its miracle, has wrought victory here and immortality hereafter. Such was the faith of Joan, the inspired maid of France; such that of Columbus sailing westward through the dark; such the exalted belief of the good men who first invaded our American wilderness to light with their own lives on civilization's altar the sacred fire that never dies. The story of Frances Willard's faith in the conquest of evil by good seems incredible to us who demand a map of all our future before we take a step.

"For Frances Willard knew no questioning. The Master's message was at once her guaranty and her command. The Bible was to her, in very truth, divine. What immeasurable and increasing influence that one book has wielded over the minds of men and the destiny of the world! If it be the word of God, it comes to human ears with all the dignity and peace and power that his word should command. If it be the word of man, then the ancient Hebrews had skill to cast a spell across millenniums which, strengthening with the years, spreads wider today than ever and embraces the future as far as even the eye of imagination can behold. Not all invention, or all statesmanship, or all of literature have so touched and bettered human life as this one book. And it was the Bible that gave Frances E Willard strength and hope and argument and inspiration.

"The mother of all mothers, the sister of all wives, to every child the lover, Frances E. Willard sacrificed her own life to the happiness of her sisters. For, after all, she knew that, with all her gifts and all the halo of her God-sent mission, the humblest mother was yet greater far than she. And it was needful that she should so consecrate her strength and length of years. For how shall the service of utter unselfishness be achieved save in the utter sacrifice of self? So she gave her life and all the rights and glories of it that all other women might lead fuller, richer, happier lives themselves.

"And so, by placing her statue in the Hall of our National Immortals, the great Commonwealth forever commemorates the services this American woman rendered to humanity, and as representatives of the greatest people on this earth, in Congress assembled to-day, we pay tribute to that little American frontier maid who heard and heeded the voices that came to her from the unseen world, and obeying their counsel, became the first woman of the nineteenth century, the most beloved character of her day, and, under God, the benefactress of the race."

A Higher Value on Life.

While there are occurrences every day indicating how cheaply human life is valued by many people, it is a pleasure to note the growing feeling that some radical steps must be taken to place a higher value upon life. Many states are seeking to do this by legislative enactments. In Missouri, for instance, there is a decided public opinion in favor of very severely punishing any one who carries concealed weapons. As things now are the penalty in many states for this offense is so slight and the prospects of detection so remote that many men carry weapons merely because they know that a lot of toughs and thugs are armed and ready at the first chance to use that fact to the detriment of any who are not prepared to defend themselves. Were the laws made more stringent and then strictly enforced, those who now carry weapons with the best intentions would not feel under such necessity to do this as they frequently now feel, and even the hold-up man might be saved from murder, knowing that the chances are that his victim is unarmed. Then again there are indications that the courts show signs of recognizing the rights of the murdered person's family. A jury in the notorious Breathitt Co. of Kentucky has given a verdict of $8,000 damages to Mrs. J. B. Marcum for the murder of her husband. It will be remembered that Mr. Marcum's murder was caused by his energy in bringing to justice murderers in that county. Mrs. Marcum sued Judge Hargis and Sheriff Callahan for $100,000. They are likely to be prosecuted for a criminal charge, but in the meantime we agree with a southern paper in its remark that even the $8,000 verdict is "an evidence of progress for that state."

Sunday Rest.

No man who has a respect for moral law has much respect for Leopold, King of Belgium. We are not at all surprised that one who has tolerated such a condition as has obtained in the Congo country is opposed to the Sunday rest bill now before the Belgian Parliament, as the King is. It is always to be regretted that there should be a necessity for any legislation looking toward anything of the nature of a compulsory "Sabbatarianism." The desirable condition is that it should be in the hearts of the people to observe the Lord's day from the Christian motives. But failing that it may become necessary, without the thought of religious enforcement, to insist that one day in the week shall be a rest day. The movement for a legalistic Sunday is spreading all over Europe. The working man has found that every day alike is not to his interest and now Sunday rest laws have been enacted in republican France, have long been in force in Great Britain, Germany and Scandinavia and are being introduced into Spain and Italy. Even in Japan there is now a demand for the prohibition of Sunday labor. And yet there are some folks in Missouri who are afraid that we may all be angels before we get to heaven, and on this ground oppose bills that are safe-guards of the continental Sunday against which the continent itself is rebelling.

Recent revelations in connection with the anti-rebate and anti-trust laws, as well as common knowledge of the lax enforcement of state and city laws, especially those intended to guard public morals, suggest that the following, which has been passing from the joke column of one paper to another, is more than a joke:

"It seems to me," the foreign visitor was saying, "you have too many laws in this country."

"We may overdo it a little in passing laws," responded the native, "but we enforce 'em judiciously."

The March Offering.

The first Lord's day in March is becoming a great day in our church calendar. It is forever associated in the minds of our churches with our obligations to the pagan world. It stands for the great world-wide commission of our risen Lord. Every year an increasing number of our churches are falling into line in the observance of this day. Once a church catches the spirit of the day, and feels the blessedness of sharing with their brethren in the great work of spreading the gospel throughout the world, it rarely ever falls out. That would be a clear case of "falling from grace."

The watchword for the present offering is "A Quarter of a Million Dollars!" We ought to reach it this year, and will reach it if all the churches that believe in the genuineness of Christ's commission will make an offering in March for carrying it out. We can think of no good reason why every church among us should not participate, according to its ability, in this offering for world-wide evangelization. Neither poverty, nor indebtedness, nor the absence of a meeting house, nor lack of a preacher, nor other calls, nor "heathen at our doors," nor the indifference of many, nor the opposition of a few, not even wealth, nor "any other creature," should be allowed to separate any church, or any number of brethren in any church, from the high privilege of having fellowship with their brethren in evangelizing the pagan world.

At our St. Louis convention, and since that event, we have said a good deal about doubling our membership and our offerings before our centennial. If we are serious about this, and really intend to make an effort to accomplish it, the March offering should reflect very strongly that sentiment and feeling. If there is to be no material increase in the offerings made by contributing churches, and no very large increase in the number of churches contributing, it will be evidence to the world that we are not taking ourselves very seriously, and really have no idea of doing what we have been talking about. We are not prepared to believe this. We think our churches are in earnest in their desire and purpose to take an advance step in all our missionary offerings.

If we are to realize our expectations in this respect, the offering must be made a decidedly religious act. The first Lord's day in March should be a day of consecration to the work of missions. Preachers should see that their churches are brought up by a series of sermons to the Mount of Vision, where they can see the great world and its needs, and can hear the voice of Christ above all the din and noise of the world commanding them to "make disciples of all the nations." In many churches we know this is becoming a high day—a day of great joy—because it is a day of liberal giving. When we reach the point where the days for missionary offerings are looked forward to with joy by our churches, as days of opportunity, we shall witness much larger results from these offerings.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would urge upon its readers everywhere, and especially upon ministers and church officials, the sacred obligation of uniting with their brethren on the first Lord's day in March, to make an offering for foreign missions that shall excel anything in our past history, and give assurance that we intend to double our offerings by the time of our centennial celebration.

The New Evangelism and its Evangelists.

One of the facts concerning the new evangelism which we are only beginning to understand is that it offers the privilege and gives the power to evangelize to everyone who has accepted the gospel of Christ, and has experienced its regenerative and transforming power. There is no hint in all the New Testament or in the prophecies of the Old Testament relating to the new dispensation that there is any limitation of the privilege and duty of publishing the glad tidings of salvation to any special class of men, set apart for that purpose. There are clear intimations that men of superior qualifications should be chosen and set apart as pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc., for special work in the church, and in the extension of the gospel, but there is no authority for the idea which has become so prevalent that only those thus set apart for special work may preach the gospel and seek to win men to Christ. On the contrary, Jesus Christ confers on all who receive him as Savior and Lord, the authority to make known to others the salvation they have received, and to extend to others the invitation which they have accepted.

In the prophecy of Joel which Peter quoted on the day of Pentecost, and which began to have its fulfillment on that day, it is said:

> And it shall be in the last days, saith God,
> I will pour forth of my spirit upon all flesh;
> And your sons and your daughters shall prophesy,
> And your young men shall see visions,
> And your old men shall dream dreams:
> Yea, and on my servants and on my handmaidens in those days
> Will I pour forth of my spirit; and they shall prophesy. (Acts 2:17,18).

Not only is the distinction between male and female, age and youth, here ignored in the distribution of the Holy Spirit, but the social barrier between the free and those who were bondmen and bondmaidens is also disregarded, and the latter share in the blessings and privileges of the Holy Spirit. It is in harmony with this universal commission that when the disciples at Jerusalem were scattered abroad, they "went everywhere preaching the word." Later on we are not surprised to read that Philip, who was appointed a deacon, has become an evangelist and that he has four daughters who prophesy and preach. In the last chapter of Revelation we have these impressive words: "And the Spirit and the Bride say, Come. And he that heareth, let him say, Come." This may be said to be an inspired interpretation of the great commission given by Christ to his disciples, and it imposes upon each individual believer the duty of extending the invitation of the gospel to others.

The old evangelism laid great stress on the distinction between the clergy and the laity. The former were supposed to hold the keys of the kingdom of heaven, so far as the church was concerned, and they alone could open the door and shut it. Occasionally at long intervals, it would be announced that "the doors of the church would be opened," and of course, no one but an ordained clergyman could perform so important a function as that! The church at that date seemed to be ignorant of the fact that Jesus Christ, through the apostle Peter, on the day of Pentecost, had opened the door of the church, and that it has never been closed, and that no man has the right to close it. In those days and in some circles even yet, it would seem like profanation for one not thus ordained to attempt to tell the story of the cross; and as to baptizing penitent believers, even in the absence of any regular minister, that would have subjected the offender to severe discipline. We are coming to see that this is an unauthorized distinction, and that if this world is never to be converted until it is accomplished by the ordained and salaried ministers, we may as well indefinitely postpone any dream of the millennium. These men have their place, and it is a vastly important place. They are leaders of the church militant in its aggressive warfare. They are generals, and colonels, and captains in the Lord's army; but generals, and colonels, and captains do not do all the fighting. They are leaders only, and teach the rank and file of the army how to do the fighting.

This, we believe, is one of the greatest weaknesses in the church to-day, for we have only partially recovered from this false conception of the past. We are only beginning to mobilize the Lord's army and to teach each individual soldier that he has a duty to perform; that is, we are seeking now as never before to enlist the entire membership of our churches in some phase of aggressive Christian work, and to teach them the art of winning souls. The motto "Each One Win One" is striking into the consciences of our membership to-day as never before. It is safe to say that this world will never be won to Christ until all the forces of the church are enlisted in the work. This the new evangelism is seeking to do and in proportion as it succeeds it will prove an incalculable blessing to the church, and hasten the evangelization of the world.

Notes and Comments.

There is no theme more inspiring for a preacher nor one that has more of an uplifting power for the congregation than that of world-wide missions. It brings one into closer fellowship with Christ to enter into fellowship with his thought and plans for the conquest of the world. It broadens the mind, enlarges the heart, and quickens the faith to grapple with such a stupendous problem. It has in it enough of that which is daring and difficult to appeal to the heroic in our nature. No preacher can afford to deny himself the luxury and benefit of preaching on foreign missions, and no church can afford to deny itself the privilege and the stimulating effect of making an offering for this great cause. It is spiritual tonic to come into vital touch with Christ in an effort to extend his kingdom throughout the world. Let no church that values the presence and fellowship of Christ neglect the March offering for foreign missions.

"Just to serve, and suffer, impoverishing oneself if need be; yea, dying before one's time to relieve the sorrow and sin of the earth, simply by making heaven real to those who are in sin's grip—that is primitive Christianity. Primitive Christianity is to realize heaven, and then to be willing to suffer poverty, hardship, and death that everybody on earth may realize it; yea, and rejoice in it; rejoice in it though earth's lot may be so hard, and even so miserable. Primitive Christianity—what is it? Faith, repentance, baptism, we tell men. 'Well,' they say, 'we will accept it then.' But we tell them it means 'to give all you have for Christ; to suffer reproach, meekly and joyfully, to die for Christ, if need be, and, what is harder sometimes, to live for Christ.' 'Ah, well' they say, 'then we will reject it.' Not with their lips perhaps, but by their lives." The above is from a letter from W. H. Rogers, of Swampscott, Mass., who is now in the west engaged in a heroic effort to rescue our cause in Swampscott from peril, and to give to New England an illustration of what real primitive Christianity can do.

Martin Luther said, "I pray you to leave my name alone, and not to call yourselves Lutherans, but Christians." His followers, however, decided to accept the name of Lutherans. If they did make any effort to be known as Christians only, there were no doubt those who taunted them with making an "exclusive" claim that they were the only Christians. They have at least saved themselves a good deal of persecution by exchanging the name Christian, which Luther wished them to bear, for Lutherans, but their position is not so strong nor so scriptural as it would have been had they followed Luther's advice. It requires no little heroism, however, to depart from a custom that has become so common as that of wearing party names, and to be content with those which express our relation to Christ. There is no assumption in trying to be simply Christians—no more, no less. If not, then there is no assumption in discarding all names that express anything more or less than that. Some day the church is going to become broad-minded and spiritually-minded enough to discard all party names, and to use only those which express its relation to Christ.

Mrs. Martha J. Tuttle, of Atlanta, Ill., has sent to the Benevolent Association of the Christian church, whose headquarters are in this city, a beautiful diamond cross to be sold for the benefit of the Association. This incident reminds us of the beautiful story told of Princess Eugenia, of Sweden, who, seeing the destitution and suffering of the people of the Island of Gottland, sold her diamonds and other personal ornaments, and with the proceeds built a hospital for the sick and suffering poor of the island. On visiting the hospital, and seeing the tears of joy and gratitude in the eyes of a poor woman whose life had been rescued from sin and neglect through her kindness, she said to the matron, as she passed out, "In those tears of penitence and gratitude I saw my diamonds again." May this be the experience of Sister Tuttle. Love is the divine alchemy that can transmute the material into the spiritual.

The bringing of the National Congress of the Disciples of Christ to Missouri, this year, is an opportunity for our Missouri preachers and those of contiguous states of which they should be sure to avail themselves. The previous meetings of this Congress have proved very profitable to those who have attended them, and the one to be held at Columbia, Mo., March 21-23, is likely to be one of the very best in the history of the Congress. To say nothing of our own able men who will be on the program, it will be worth going across the state to hear President Henry C. King, of Oberlin college, on such themes as "The Central Significance of Christ," and "The Fundamental Factors of Spiritual Life." The fact that Columbia is our Missouri educational center lends additional interest to this session of the Congress. Not only the preachers but many other brethren should plan to attend this session of the Congress.

The Czar seems to have been impressed with the fact that shooting down workingmen who are asking for redress of their grievances is not sufficient to quell the riots throughout his empire, and he is beginning to make promises of better conditions for the working people, and some representation of his subjects in the government of the country. There can be no question but that one of the results—perhaps it will be the best result—of this war with Russia and Japan, will be a more liberal form of government in Russia and a higher regard for the rights of the people. Revolutions do not go backwards, and the people of Russia will never be satisfied with the old autocracy that has prevailed in Russia in the past. This will be a verification of Hosea Bigelow's philosophy, that "Civilization does sometimes get forward on a powder cart."

The Journal and Messenger (Baptist) in a "Statement of the Baptist Position as to Close Communion," after arguing that it is the baptism that is "close," rather than the communion, asks the question, "Why do not Baptists invite all who have been baptized on profession of faith in Christ, whether in the Methodist church, or 'Disciple' church, or in the Episcopal church, or any other, to unite with them in the observance of the Lord's supper?" The editor's answer is, "Besides baptism on profession of faith in Christ, it is required that a professing Christian should walk 'orderly' and not do that which must produce discord and anarchy in the church of Christ." Which, being interpreted, means that only Baptists are entitled to the Lord's supper, because all who are not Baptists are walking "disorderly"! Besides being baptized believers and walking in the commandments of Jesus, enjoying fellowship with him and with one another, they should be members of some church known as "Baptist," to be entitled to the Lord's supper! Well, if that sort of answer is satisfactory to our contemporary and to his readers, we greatly underestimate their knowledge of New Testament Christianity. As a matter of fact we know that thousands of Baptists will repudiate this statement of the Journal and Messenger.

"Every day of your life do something that you know you ought to do and that you don't want to do," is the heroic advice of Professor James, of Harvard. That advice can be followed only by those who live under the inspiration of a high ideal, and seek strength from above.

Editor's Easy Chair.

A great religious revival, widespread in its scope, sweeping thousands into the kingdom of God, is a phenomenon which may well cause us to stand in awe. We can but feel that we are witnessing the visible effects of the invisible Spirit of God, who in His chosen ways is moving upon the hearts of the people. One of the best things about a genuine revival is the sense of reality which it gives to many people concerning religion. Too many conceive of religion as a vague theory or an idle profession. But when a tidal wave of divine influence sweeps through a community, turning men and women away from their old ways of life, into new and higher ways, transforming the lives of the sordid and selfish, the dissolute and the profane, and bringing them under the spell of a holy influence, causing them to renounce their sinful ways, and come into the church and kingdom of God, there is no mistaking the reality of the power that accomplishes such results. Even the skeptic is dumb in the presence of such spiritual phenomena. There is nothing in all his category of forces to produce such effects, and he is led to wonder whether, after all, there may not be spiritual forces at work in the world which he had not dreamed of in his philosophy. The faith of the whole church is quickened, and the spiritual universe, with its sublime realities, seems to be nearer and vastly more real.

W. T. Stead, editor of the Review of Reviews, London, has written a very graphic account of the Revival in Wales.* We have given our readers some account of this wonderful movement. Mr. Stead has been present in the meetings. One of the features of the revival is that "the gospel message is being sung rather than preached. And such singing! The whole congregation sing as if they were making melody in their hearts to the Lord." "Women pray, sing, testify, and speak as freely as men, no one daring to make them afraid." "There is no inquiry room, no penitent form. The wrestle with unbelief, the combat with the evil one for the soul of the convicted sinner, goes on in the midst of the people. It is all intensely dramatic — sometimes unspeakably tragic, at other times full of exultant triumph. Mr. Evan Roberts, toward the close of the meeting, asks all who from their hearts believe and confess their Savior to rise. At the meetings at which I was present nearly everybody was standing. Then for the sitting remnant the storm of prayer rises to the mercy seat. When one after another rises to his feet, glad strains of jubilant song burst from the watching multitude. No one has a hymn-book; no one gives out a hymn. The congregation seems moved by a simultaneous impulse. It is all very wonderful, sometimes almost eerie in its suggestiveness of the presence of Another, whom no eye can see, but who moves on the wings of the wind. Who can say to what this thing may not grow? Who can put bounds to the flood of awakened enthusiasm? One thing is certain—no one could wish to erect a barrier save those who do not love their fellowmen." Such is the character of the wonderful revival which has already brought 35,000 souls into the kingdom of God.

The fact which most deeply impresses the public mind in the presence of such a revival, is its ethical effects on those who are its converts. It is the fact of the changed life that deeply impresses every thoughtful mind. Men instinctively feel that the power which makes a good man out of a bad man, turning men away from evil habits to a life of purity and usefulness, is no ordinary power, and that it must be a good power. Concerning the moral effects of the revival in Wales, Mr. Stead testifies as follows: "Employes tell me that the quality of the work the miners are putting in has improved. Waste is less, men go to their daily toil with a new spirit of gladness in their labor. In the long, dim galleries of the mine, where once the haulers swore at their ponies in Welshified English terms of blasphemy, there is now but to be heard the haunting melody of the revival music. The pit ponies, like the American mules, having been driven by oaths and curses since they first bore the yoke, are being re-trained to do their work without the incentive of profanity. There is less drinking, less idleness, less gambling. Men record with almost incredulous amazement how one football player after another has forsworn cards and drink and the gladiatorial games, and is living a sober and godly life, putting his energy into the revival. More wonderful still, and almost incredible to those who know how journalism lives and thrives upon gambling, and how Toryism is broad-based upon the drinking habits of the people, the Tory daily paper of South Wales has devoted its columns, day after day, to reporting and defending the movement which declares war to the death against both gambling and drink." Men will inquire about the permanency of these results. The testimony of history is that these great revivals lift up the nation or people affected by them to a higher moral life, and that it leaves a permanent impress on the nation in better laws, purer institutions, and a more advanced civilization.

There is no mistaking the fact that there is an increasing desire in this country for a revival of Christianity, such as will not only strengthen the churches in their spiritual work, but such as will lift up the whole people to a higher spiritual plane, rebuking our commercialism, purifying our politics, strengthening the moral forces of the nation, so that they may overcome the evils which threaten its life, and sending its stream of life-giving water through all the ramifications of our social, political and industrial life. Many hearts are hungering for a more satisfying draught of the water of life. This comes out in private and personal letters to the editor, far more frequently from private members of the church than from preachers, and more frequently from women than from men. There is an evident dissatisfaction with a too prevalent type of religion, and a reaching out for something more spiritual and heart-satisfying. These are the premonitory symptoms of a genuine revival. This conscious need of God, this hungering and thirsting after righteousness, accompanied by a burden of desire for the salvation of others, has been the prelude of every great revival. Our churches are already feeling the spirit of revival, but it needs both deepening and widening to meet the needs of the people, and of the times. May we not ask our Easy Chair circle to unite in prayer for such a revival in our own beloved land?

"Your thought in 'Easy Chair,' that God is speaking to us in the events of our lives, gives me a new interest in my own life." We can never forget with what joy and inspiration the thought came to us, years ago, that God is in all our lives; that he is speaking to us to-day in the events of history, in our personal experiences, in our triumphs and failures, in our joys and sorrows, and that this is his way of leading his children into a larger, richer and happier life. To rob us of this conception of life would be to deprive us of one of its sweetest joys, and to place a gulf between us and God. There are those who think of God as speaking to us only through his word that was written thousands of years ago. It is a glorious fact that God does speak to us through his written Word, and that we are continually seeing in it new depths of meaning under the guidance of the revealing Spirit who dwells within us; but we ought not to deny ourselves the educational benefit which comes through the events and the experiences of life. Herein lies one of the chief sources of human progress. It is also a means of Christian growth and comfort. One may indeed be a Christian, without understanding this nearness of God to us, and this method by which he speaks to his children, but it is impossible that such a one should attach the same significance to human life and glean from it so much strength and guidance without this knowledge. We commend this thought to all of our readers, and especially to those whose pathways are shadowed, and whose hearts are burdened with bitter experiences.

Who Can Go as a Foreign Missionary?

By G. L. Wharton

That the number who can and ought to go into the foreign mission field is limited all will admit. How limited that number is I do not think Christians generally realize. A better understanding of this will be helpful. Let any one attempt even for one year to increase the number of missionaries who will actually go into the regions beyond, and he will have a new vision of this matter. I will make my meaning clear by relating some of my own personal experiences during the past two years.

1. I will introduce to you a talented young man. He is a graduate of a university. He is pastor of a wealthy church, and is a popular pulpit orator. He has had a burning desire for several years to enter the foreign field. His wife is an accomplished, cultured lady, but she absolutely refuses to leave America. More than one young preacher has told me that this was his limitation. I do not judge such wives. I state a fact. Such limitations exist.

2. Not far away is another young man who is ready for the foreign field. He is well qualified. His wife likewise is well equipped in head and heart and greatly desires to give her life to the foreign work. She has spent years in careful study and preparation. She goes before the medical examiner of the society and fails to pass the examination. What a sore disappointment to husband and wife! It ought to be as sore to the college president and professors who allowed such a thing. I seriously ask if physical culture is not sinfully neglected in most of our colleges. Many a professor is no wiser in his teaching than the man who built his house on the sand. Our boys and girls in a perfect schooling will be examined as carefully physically as they are intellectually. Then such failures as this will occur less frequently than now.

3. I know a man and wife in every way well equipped. They pass well physically, intellectually and spiritually. They are ready and desirous of going to the foreign field. But they have aged and helpless father and mother whom to leave would be unchristian. Others have near relatives who are dependent on them for support.

4. A single young man is before me. He is a pastor of a cultured large congregation. He has first-class ability. He longs to go as a foreign missionary. He has failed to pass the medical examination. He told me that it was the greatest disappointment of his life.

5. A physician answered the call and gladly said: "Here am I; send me. My age is thirty five." That last sentence prevented his going. Most missionary societies refuse to send anyone of that age. There are good reasons for it. The British government refuses to appoint anyone to the civil service in India who is over 19 years of age when he passes his final examination, and it is a very stiff one. As a result the Indian civil service is the finest in the world.

6. Lastly, here is a strong, able-bodied, good-hearted, earnest young man. He longs to go to the heathen world with the gospel. But his education is defective and inadequate. The foreign mission fields need and must have well educated young men and women of sound bodies. The above examples are real limitations. Any one can see that the persons who are of the proper age, who are healthy, who are well educated, who have no genuine limiting environments are not very numerous. But of this comparatively small number a large proportion have no inclination to go to the foreign field. This service makes no personal appeal to them. This is the most serious limitation.

What shall we say to these things?

1. I believe with all my heart that every Christian minister under thirty years of age, every Christian student in college under thirty, every Christian man and woman wherever they may be whose age is under thirty, should at once find out whether any of the above six limitations apply to him or to her. I would have every one ask himself if God is not calling him to this service and opportunity. I would speak to every one in the language of the scholarly and devoted Ion Keith Falconer who said: "While vast continents are shrouded in almost utter darkness, and hundreds of millions suffer the horrors of heathenism or Islam, the burden of proof lies upon you to show that the circumstances in which God has placed you were meant by him to keep you out of the foreign mission field."

2. I beg to say further that every person who is not hindered by lawful limitations should press into the foreign field until it is as well supplied as the home field with preachers. As long as there are ninety nine preachers out of every hundred in the home field, or dismissing the terms home and foreign, as long as there are ninety-nine preachers in one country to one in other countries accessible, and as long as $27 is spent in one country and in all others only $1 there is at least very little here to remind one of "Love thy neighbor as thyself." All the persons represented by the six classes above mentioned can do good service at home, and this fact will always give the home field a much larger force than can possibly go abroad.

3. Let it be laid to heart by all who love to see the kingdom come and extend in all the world, a new, strong and moving appeal must be made for both the foreign and home service. There is a scarcity of men. But let it be distinctly known that this appeal cannot be made on the commercial basis. A young minister in his last year in college said to me, "Will you tell me how much the Foreign Society pays the missionaries per year?" I told him. He replied, "How can I afford to go? As soon as I graduate I can get much more." To all such I say this: The only answer I can give that meets your case and all such commercial questions is found in Phil. 3:4-11. Paul was the first young man of Jerusalem. No young man of to-day has more in stock than had he when he squarely faced Jesus and missionary service for him. Item by item he takes invoice. When all was summed up and balanced against a missionary career, he set it down as a minus quantity—less than nothing.

After more than thirty years' experience as a minister of the gospel of Christ, more than half of which has been in the foreign field, I want to record my undoubted conviction. Whatever the churches or missionary societies may pay or not pay, may do or not do, the spirit and meaning of an apostolic ministry is this: Christ must be preached everywhere at all hazard and at every cost of sacrifice. Whether by bonds or imprisonments, it must be done. Whether with pay or without pay, it must be done. Whether through society or independent of society, it must be done. Whether with our families or separated from them, it must be done. Whether by life or by death, it must be done. Such an apostolic ministry can restore an apostolic church that will preach the gospel to every nation under heaven.

Jubulpore, India.

[That is the missionary spirit. That is the apostolic spirit. Yea, it is the Christ-spirit. Given an army of missionaries with that spirit and the world can be won to Christ. No man who will weigh a salary with the privilege of being a missionary is worthy of the high calling. Everywhere, coming out from all our colleges, there should be young men and women saying, "Here am I; send me!" Christ wants some of the brightest minds, some of the best scholars, and a liberal proportion of our most devoted hearts to represent him in the foreign fields. Perhaps he is calling you to that work. If so, will ye say him nay? Brother Wharton is a living illustration of the kind of missionaries needed. His devotion to this work separates him from his family, as his wife's health cannot stand the climate. But they are both willing to make this sacrifice for the cause of foreign missions. In comparison with it how insignificant and unmentionable are the little sacrifices that most of us make for the evangelization of heathendom!—Editor.]

The Emperor of China

By James Ware

The present Emperor of China, Kwang Hsu, was born Aug. 15, 1871, and ascended the throne Jan. 12, 1875, upon the death of Tung Chih, his imperial predecessor. He is the ninth emperor of the present Tsing or "Illustrious" dynasty. Heaven is regarded as his father and earth as his mother, hence he is called the Son of Heaven, Tien Tsz. His reign has been anything but illustrious, or peaceful, however. Besides provincial revolutions, which have been of annual occurrence, there have been many serious outbreaks against foreigners, the first of which occurred in 1870 when the French consulate, cathedral and orphanage at Tientsin were destroyed, and twenty priests and sisters of charity atrociously murdered. This was followed by the Franco-Chinese war in 1883 which resulted in the loss to China of her Annam dependencies. In 1891 occurred those terrible riots throughout the Yangtse valley when numbers of missionaries were massacred and much property was destroyed. In 1893-94 the country was at war with Japan which ended with the loss of Formosa and some of the most important of China's naval ports.

In 1900 China became convulsed with the Boxer movement when the present Empress Dowager usurped the throne, abolished all existing treaties with foreign nations, and issued secret edicts ordering the extermination of all foreigners throughout the empire. This period of China's history has been written in the blood of the martyrs, and coming generations will tell with abhorrence the deeds of her whose prototype lived in the days of Elijah.

At the present time Russia and Japan are locked in a death struggle for the possession of Manchuria, the ancestral home of the reigning dynasty, while China stands calmly looking on, but prepared, like the impartial spectator she is, to extend the hand of friendship to whichever side proves the victor.

Nevertheless, China is awaking from its torpor of ages. The people are rapidly breaking loose from the traditions of the past, led on by their Emperor. Had he been contented to sleep on, many of the troubles of recent years would never have been. But he began to study Christian, scientific and historical literature. Moreover, he began to read the Bible and to pray to the true God. All at once his 400,000,000 subjects became real to him. Hitherto he had been the father of his people only in name, now he determined to be so in reality. Just and upright counsellors were raised up for him, men against whom the finger of suspicion had never been raised. With their counsel, edict after edict emanated from the "Dragon Throne" directed against the old regimen, the rule of an ultra-conservative and corrupt officialdom. A clean sweep was to be made of the ancient system of examinations for official positions. This was to be the death-blow of Confucianism and a state religion. Examinations based upon the best western systems were to form the basis of an educated and enlightened civil service. The finest heathen temples in every city were to be transformed into public school buildings. An imperial university was to be established at Peking with Dr. Martin at its head. The old administration was to give place to twelve new departments of state: law, treasury, educational, legislative, agricultural, commercial, mechanical, railway, postal, mining, army and navy, all on western lines.

KWANG HSU,
Emperor of China.

THE EMPRESS OF CHINA.

But early in September, occurred the coup d'etat when the Empress Dowager, fired with jealousy, and supported by her conservative statesmen, usurped the throne, imprisoned the Emperor, murdered five of his advisors, revoked all of his reform edicts, and made preparations for the extermination of everybody and everything that stood in the way of her imperious will. Now after four years we are able in the light of history to see how far the Empress and her reactionary party have succeeded in exterminating reform.

It is a remarkable fact that in spite of all opposition, nearly all of the most important reforms contained in the Emperor's edicts are surely coming into effect. Confucian colleges and heathen temples in every important city are being changed into schools of western learning, the study of the English language being prominent. Great trunk lines of railways are being rapidly constructed; the postal system has been extended to the utmost bounds of the empire and large numbers of students are being sent abroad to be educated. Yu Hsien, the Shantung Nero, Prince Tuan and other great ones of odious memory, have gone "to their own place," while their offices have been filled with some of the best and most progressive men in the empire.

The reason is not hard to discover. When the Emperor issued his famous edicts they went forth with all the authority of an eastern potentate, regarded by his people as divine. As such they carried with them a moral force well-nigh irresistible and which no subsequent mandate of an unpopular usurper, no matter how powerful, could impede. The edicts are deep in the hearts of millions of his best subjects, and are now being reproduced in countless volumes of "reform" literature, some of which contains suggestions of practical value to the nation, being the first, apart from the edicts themselves, since the days of the ancients.

Thus the country has reached a crisis, the most memorable of its long history. What will the Christian church do with it? The political and commercial agents of all nations are taking advantage of this crisis for the aggrandizement of their nations and their mercantile extension, with the greatest success. And shall the Christian church be less zealous in its efforts for the promotion of Christ's kingdom; for the promulgation of His Royal Edict, which for the countless tribes of this empire, contains their only charter of salvation?

Rome and India

By G. W. Brown

More than 1800 years ago, when the disciples first began to preach in the great Roman empire, they found a system—one can hardly say a religion—strongly entrenched. The customs, thoughts, and culture of the people combined with the laws of the land to perpetuate things as they were, and in every way frowned upon and discouraged innovation. Especially was this true in the religious realm, where mighty philosophers, whose intellect we admire even to this day, had worked out great systems whose teachings, adhered to by all the learned, and permeating the beliefs of the ignorant, were totally opposed to the doctrines set forth by the followers of the Christ. It seemed as if Satan had concentrated his forces to fight against the spread of the truth. We know the slanders, the arguments, the persecutions, the devices used to keep the people under the sway of idolatry. We know the result of the great conflict. The battle was long and hard, but it was a winning fight from the first.

After conquering in this great battle, the church of Christ rested for centuries. Not only was no headway made, but there was even a loss of ground. At last the church awoke. Missionaries were again, as in the early centuries of Christianity, sent forth into all the world. Along with other strongholds of Satan, India was attacked. For a century the conflict has been going on. As yet the strife has only just begun, but we can see that it is the old fight over again, but with a few improvements in the methods and tactics of the enemy. It is as if Satan, driven from his old stronghold in the Roman empire, had taken his stand here in India and put up newer and stronger fortifications.

Here, as in Rome, false religion was a state institution. Whether the dynasty was Hindu or Mohammedan, its cost was largely paid for from the public treasury. The whole fabric of society was built up on it. Every prominent person had an interest in keeping it alive. The powerful motive of self interest was brought in so that the leaders would neither give up the old themselves nor permit others to do so. Innumerable hermits and faquirs, the recognized guides of millions, were banded together to keep the people from seeing the true light. Thousands of idle Brahmans were supported on what was plundered from the people by force or superstitious fears. These, like the Scribes and Pharisees of old, took away the key of knowledge; they entered not in themselves, and those who were entering in they hindered. To these alone belonged the privilege of learning and administering to the gods; the common people must worship through them, and must also support them in comparative luxury. These, having all to lose and naught to gain by a change of religion, formed a strong and zealous force ready to withstand the true religion.

In other ways a better preparation was made than in the Roman campaign. A destructive pantheism—destructive of religion, of morals, and even of self—was instilled into the writings of the philosophers, and found its way, in crude form, into the beliefs of even the lowest. All is god—I am god—there is no special god—these were its teachings. Moreover, among the Hindus a sort of accommodating spirit of toleration and reception was spread, that they might ever be ready to receive new deities and place them on the same pedestal as the old. Any god might be worshiped in any manner, if only caste and the positions of the Brahmans were not interfered with. Experience was given in combating with and overcoming new religions, that the army might be ready to cope with the soldiers of Christ when they should invade the country. Buddhism came and flourished for centuries. But today Buddhism is unknown in the land of its birth. How was it driven out? Not by force, not by argument. These methods had been tried against Christianity in Rome, and had failed. A new method must be developed. The spirit of toleration must be called into play; the enemy must be given a place in the Pantheon. Buddha, though he came teaching the falsity of the gods, and professing to be merely a man, is now recognized as an incarnation of one of the chief Hindu deities! Buddhism was destroyed by being incorporated into Hinduism. By apparent yielding the Brahmans conquered. They did it again and again. Was a primitive tribe encountered, worshiping the serpent? The serpent was recognized as a god and long stories invented that he might be properly deified. Did another tribe worship the monkey? Behold, he becomes a mighty god, the chief helper of Rama, one of the greatest of the gods. Did the people worship the wild boar, the fish, the turtle? Lo, all these are incarnations of Vishnu, and have been worshiped from time immemorial. With such training as this, productive of craft and cunning, no doubt Satan thought he had founded a kingdom which the powers of Christ should not be able to shake. If we would permit it Christianity would be smothered in this way to-day.

But all his work, as far as it has been tested, is proving futile. As in the days of Rome, the force fighting against this strongly entrenched enemy is ridiculously small. One missionary to one hundred thousand heathen! But how far and how wonderfully has their influence spread! Already over one million Protestant believers are scattered throughout the country. Thousands of secret believers in their hearts acknowledge the Christ, though as yet they have not found the courage and the character to do so publicly. And a wave of Christian influence is making itself felt in all corners of the land. The priests and Brahmans complain that the people are neglecting them—that gifts are not brought as freely as before. Nor are they able to oppress the poor as they once did. Roads and wells are for all people—not for the Brahman alone. Women are being emancipated from the fetters of ignorance in which they have been bound for centuries. Widows, who had been such in many cases even from their infancy, are being delivered from the hideous life of sin to which they had formerly been condemned. Educated men are seeing the low condition which their nation occupies in almost every plane, and though they may not accept Christ, yet they realize that his principles must be followed if the welfare of the nation is to be attained.

Yes, we are conquering. It is the story of Rome over again. To make the parallel more complete, Satan is now bringing into use a plan used centuries ago in Rome. It cannot bring him success, but it may help to keep back the day of his final defeat. Like the Neo-Platonists of Rome, and the Gnostics of Asia Minor, the Brahmo and Arya Samajs, and other kindred organizations, have risen, and by combining some of the doctrines of Christianity with some of their own, are seeking to bring forth a new religion which all the people of the land may accept. They call it the religion of the country—it is a national thing, and not an invention of the hated foreigner—hated because he is doing good. Do we fear that this will succeed? Never. It may annoy us, it may delay the day of final triumph, but the great God whom we serve and whose we are has sent us forth to conquer the world for him, and with his strength we shall succeed. We fail not nor falter. The work, though slow, is certain. And as in three brief centuries the power of the archenemy was overcome in the Roman empire, so we are assured will it be in India. But we want to hasten the day of final victory; we want more consecration, more sympathy, more help and more helpers.

Jubulpore, India.

[This view of the conditions in India from one at work in that field, ought to stimulate the friends of foreign missions in holding up the hands of these brave workers at the front. India will be conquered as Rome was, but it will require the same undaunted faith and courage that captured the ancient empire for Christ.—EDITOR.]

The Spirit to Possess*

By George Darsie

If the English officer spoke truly who said that the English army alone could get a message from its sovereign to every man, woman and child in all the earth within eighteen months, it ill becomes the followers of Christ to dawdle and dally along for centuries in getting his sublime message to the world; a tardiness accented and emphasized by a national and annual outlay of a billion dollars for drink, six hundred millions for tobacco, seventy-five millions for candy, twenty-five millions for chewing gum, and only a pitiable five millions for the imperial work of world-wide missions. No wonder we have only been providing for mission stations when we might have been reaching mission fields. No wonder we have had to confine ourselves to counting converts, when we have had men, means and opportunities enough to have belted the world with zones of light. No wonder we have had to be content with reconnoitering, when we might have been engaged in an unprecedented struggle to storm and capture the pagan strongholds of the world for our King.

Unable to reconcile the delay of Christian conquest with any known theory of obedience to heavenly commands, our Foreign Society, from the inception of its work, has steadily maintained a continuous yearly procession of new missionaries to the field, assured that increased liabilities would bring increased receipts, that a corresponding supply would meet an enlarged demand. Nor has it ever been put to open shame. And it never will be. The iron qualities in our blood assure that. The whip-cord fiber of our moral earnestness and mental strength puts it beyond the faintest possibility. Whether or not "impossible" be a word found only in the dictionary of fools, it is the last word to be found on our lips who are loyal to the mission of him who said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Let the eight thousand churches which annually give the cold shoulder to this holy cause possess the mind of their Master, who, as he hung on the cross, saw the perishing nations and races of men, and ordained that living teachers fired by heaven's own message of love, should go forth to the regeneration of mankind, and the disciples of Christ will shake the kingdoms of darkness in every nation of earth. Let the churches that do support this God-ordained and heaven-owned work with holy enthusiasm, high aims, and consuming zeal, rise to the dignity and worthiness of the living link idea, and the prospects of seeing the world redeemed and saved will grow bright like the morning light. Let our people be awakened to the glorious possibilities of a million Disciples giving a million dollars every year to preach the gospel to every creature, and there cannot be long delayed the answer to the petitions of our lifelong prayer, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth even as it is in heaven." Let all who have any gift or stewardship of talents or means of whatever sort, get up and out of their sloth and ease and dilettanteism of service and get down among the people who are battling amid their poverty and ignorance, and the light of the gospel shall speedily become the star of every pagan sky.

Let all our preachers enlist at once to soldier under the Almighty captaincy of the All-Conquering Son of God, and there is not a church among us but will come to the front with a hearty and ready support of the work of world-wide education and evangelization.

A Higher View of Missions

By H. C. Garrison

In one of Paul's messages to a church which he had planted he says, "Unto me who am less than the least of all saints, was this grace given, to preach unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ" (Eph. 3:8). The striking feature of this statement is that he regards the work of preaching the gospel to the heathen world as a "grace given," a favor bestowed, an honor conferred upon him. From one standpoint he may regard it as a duty, an obligation, a debt, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." From another he views it as a privilege.

It is this higher view of the work of proclaiming the gospel to the heathen world, that we need to take, and into it lead our churches. We shall not feel the pressure of the most powerful motive, so long as we look at it merely as a duty—a hard task laid upon the church of Christ. We must lift it above the realm of mere obligation, and put it into the region of privilege, counting it, with Paul, an act of God's grace that this ministry was entrusted to us.

There was a time when the rudiments of a moral life must be enforced as duties. "Thou shalt not kill." "Thou shall not steal." "Thou shalt not commit adultery." But it is not a mere sense of duty now that restrains a well-developed Christian from these crimes. We claim it as a privilege to be vastly above these things. Not stern obligation, but a sense of decency and self-respect holds us back.

There has been a similar history in our experience regarding most Christian practices. Prayer, Bible study, the Lord's supper, the Lord's day, church membership itself, were put into the catalogue of obligations, but we have put them down now among the opportunities. The grace of God manifested in them has become more conspicuous to our spiritual vision than the authority of God lying back of them. They are duties, but they are more than duties. They are duties to those who can see no higher, but they are privileges to those who have grown a little.

Precisely so is it with the evangelization of the world. It is rooted and grounded in perpetual obligation, but it reaches up into the sunshine of privilege. We have rightly emphasized the authority of Christ as the foundation underlying missions, but we have not sufficiently emphasized the grace bestowed in entrusting this work to us. Here is a fruitful, though a much neglected, field. To make known unto the church the blessing God has for it through this ministry, is to lay upon the human heart a powerful motive.

The missionary enterprise is one of God's methods of saving us from covetousness. By means of it he would come into fellowship with us in the use of our money, and save us from the peril of riches. At this point where so many lives are broken (for "war has slain its thousands, but covetousness its tens of thousands") God seeks by this means to come near unto us with his saving grace. A church never grows in liberality till it grows in zeal for missions.

It saves us from other forms of selfishness. The individual or the congregation is in perpetual danger of becoming self centered. The winning of the world to Christ leads us out of self. It enlarges our vision. It broadens our sympathy. It deepens our love.

It saves from bigotry and narrowness. It leads us to look upon all men with the larger sympathy of the Savior's vision. It brings us into a realization of what a high estimate God puts upon the value of a human being, which is the essence of Christian love.

It brings us into kinship with Christ, into true fellowship with the Father. To feel ourselves in possession of a great message which the world needs, which will break like morning upon the world's night, which exchanges hope for the world's despair which inspires strength where men are weak, which brings salvation to the souls lost, and then to feel an irresistible yearning to deliver that message—what is this but "the love of Christ which constraineth us"? Is not God, through mission work, striving to plant and foster in our hearts that love which is to make us one with him? How could the Father bring us into fellowship with himself, and make us like unto himself other than by taking us into this work with himself?

A Symposium on Evangelism

As a further contribution to the present widespread interest in evangelistic work, we sent the following questions, along the line of our leading editorial two weeks ago, to a number of our experienced brethren, and some of the replies are published herewith.

1. Is there, in your judgment, based on your experience and observation, a lack of the proper use of prayer or reliance on Divine aid in our evangelistic and other efforts to extend the kingdom of God?

2. Have we restored, in our evangelistic work, the New Testament teaching concerning the Holy Spirit, especially as presented in the Gospel of John, and in the Acts of the Apostles?

3. What means, if any, have you to suggest to make our evangelism even more successful and permanent in its results than it has been in the past?

By John W. Allen.

I would like to answer your three questions concerning evangelism by relating a little circumstance told me by Bro. J. Z. Tyler.

Several years ago Dr. Wilbur Chapman held a great union revival meeting in Cincinnati, O., while Brother Tyler was pastor of the Central church in that city. The city was stirred and many were inquiring the way. Brother Tyler thought it would be a good thing to circulate a number of copies of "Acts of Apostles." He spoke to Dr. Chapman about it and asked him what he thought of it. He replied that it would be just the thing to do, for, said he, "That book shows where the power comes from." Brother Tyler had one thought in mind, Dr. Chapman another. Brother Tyler wanted to circulate the book because it answered the question, "What must I do to be saved?" Dr. Chapman wanted to circulate it because it "shows where the power comes from." Are not these the two sides of the shield? Have not our brethren of the denominations failed to see one side of the shield? Have we not largely failed to see the other side? It seems to me that we have studied the book of Acts almost entirely from the side that answers the question, "What must I do to be saved?" Now, if we would turn our attention to the other side, the power side, and get that into our evangelism as thoroughly as we have the side that answers the question, "What must I do to be saved?" would not our evangelism be indeed of the apostolic order? This is undoubtedly, it seems to me, the one great need of our evangelism and of all our preaching, both as pastors and evangelists.

What splendid power has young Evan Roberts, the Welsh evangelist! Within a year after he began preaching 35,000 persons had been added to the churches of Wales. All Wales is stirred and the revival is spreading in all directions.

Here is what the New York Independent, Feb. 2, says about him: "His message is the old promise from Joel, 'And it shall come to pass that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the hand maids in those days will I pour out my Spirit.' He then states the four conditions that must be complied with before the outpouring of the Spirit can occur. It is the old method of the prophets, of John and of Jesus, 'Repent,' but he divides it thus:

"1. Wipe out the past, confess your sins and begin anew.

"2. Remove everything doubtful—habit, practice, pleasure, sport or business.

"3. Obey implicitly and immediately the promptings of the Spirit.

"4. Confess Christ in public, profession privately being insufficient.

"It is a simple gospel, and it is wonderfully honored. Whenever these conditions are accepted by a neighborhood the revival begins, without any evangelist."

I wish you might give your readers the entire article of the Independent. It is entitled, "The Great Religious Revival in Wales," and bears directly upon the subject of this symposium.

By J. H. Smart.

1. I think there is a great lack. There are very few of our evangelists and preachers who hold meetings that make prayer a very prominent part of the service. And yet we all know that there can not be true conversions to Christ without prayer, fervent and effectual. There may be additions to the meeting, or to the evangelist, but not to Christ and his church.

2. I think not. Some evangelists approach this much nearer than do others. We are not always as definite in our teaching concerning the relation of the Holy Spirit and the word as we ought to be; so the gospel becomes to many a powerless, spiritless thing. That the sword of the Spirit is the word of God ought to be emphasized more than it is, and that in every genuine case of conversion the Spirit himself, through the preacher, uses this sword. Then again I think there is a lack of emphasizing the promise of the gift of the Holy Spirit as a comforter to everyone who receives forgiveness of sins through gospel obedience, as promised in Acts 2:38. Converts ought to be taught more definitely the forgiveness of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit, so that they may confidently expect such blessings.

3. Our evangelists ought to cease trying to make great reports of large numbers, but of conversions Our churches ought to demand pure gospel preaching without any doubtful experiments on the part of evangelists in gaining converts. Then we all ought to be more careful about whom we receive in our evangelistic meetings. Then in receiving persons, and especially those coming to make confession of their faith, we ought to make the matter more impressive and more important than we usually do. All who come to confess Christ ought to be impressed that if they truly confess Christ before men Christ will confess them before the Father in heaven. We all need to have more care, more prayer and more faith in God and his blessed promises.

Revival Campaign in Chicago, Ill., as Seen by One on the Field.

By H. A. Northcutt.

The work of one evangelist and one congregation will not stir our cities. It must be a well planned and united effort of many evangelists and congregations.

It brings the various congregations into close, sympathetic touch with each other, and generates a religious enthusiasm which becomes contagious.

The pastors all work according to one plan and are brought closer to each other, which inspires hope. The church and the world see the beauty and power of this united effort, and will listen to the story of the cross.

The down town meeting at noon is a very important factor in the campaign. Here ministers and members of other churches hear our plea for the Bible, one church, one Savior and one Spirit. They understand us better and love us more. We all feel the power of the gospel to save men when preached plainly, tenderly, lovingly, and see that the cross of Christ is the only hope for our cities, and to build up the cross is our work.

We can never get beyond the incarnation, the death, resurrection and ascension of Christ.

Here the church is magnified and many who were once identified with it, but have been lost to the church for years, are brought into the fold again, and sing, "I love thy kingdom, Lord."

I believe the revival campaign inaugurated in Chicago is prophetical of great good.

I commend this kind of work heartily to larger towns and cities.

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

Carnegie's hero fund could be easily and wisely distributed without naming a single person prominent in the world to-day. Obscure heroes are all about us. Men behind the guns and men who fed the furnaces had their part in the action of Manila bay and Santiago as well as Dewey and Schley. Looking down upon the streets of the capital we see bronze horses everywhere, hacks of all sorts and sizes, mounted by such men in bronze as Logan and Thomas, Scott and McPherson, Sherman and Hancock, and one would think our heroes were all of the military profession, but if we take the civil war period in which these men figure, what of Wendell Phillips and Henry Ward Beecher, of Seward and Sumner and Chase and Lincoln, what of the four millions of men in the ranks who faced each other? If we think of civil life, what of the thousands who labor in the schools, the ministry, the art of healing, the courts of justice, the offices and shops and mills, factories and fields and homes; weak women often and little children, bearing burdens, braving perils, enduring hardness, people who are not immortalized in bronze or marble? Remember the story of little Hans Vedder of Haarlem, the Dutch lad who saved the city by thrusting his finger in the crevice in the wall of the dyke and holding it there through the long night until the hole could be stopped and the flood prevented.

Among Ohio's historic characters is "Johnny Appleseed." In the town of Mansfield, from which John Sherman came to us, we may see in the public park a neat monument with this inscription: "In memory of John Chapman, best known as Johnny Appleseed, pioneer apple nurseryman of Richland county from 1810-1830." If God commanded Israel not to reap the corners of the harvest field, neither gather every grape of the vineyard, but to leave them for the poor and the stranger, surely he honors the man who sows and plants for the needy and for the generations following him. My father, when I was a boy, set out a splendid peach orchard in the field along the public road and when I said to him: "The travelers will help themselves," he said, "That is why I put the orchard there." He lived in a house by the road and was a friend to man. I am not sure but the English epitaph is a model: "Here lies the body of Deacon Peletiah Higgins who died suddenly August 20, 1816, in consequence of falling from an apple tree. He and his brother Jacob were the first to introduce the large fall pippin apples into the town of Standish. By their fruits ye shall know them. Matt. 7:20."

Johnny Appleseed was one of the most unselfish of the world's benefactors. Born in Springfield, Mass., 1775, his field of service was the Muskingum valley and his mission to plant appleseeds in nurseries in advance of the pioneers that trees might be ready for their coming, and so they called him "Appleseed John" or "Johnny Appleseed." All along the way he also scattered medicinal plants, dog fennel, pennyroyal, catnip, hoarhound, and rattlesnake root. He first appeared on the Ohio river in 1806 with two canoes laden with sacks of apple seed gathered in Pennsylvania to bless with their fruitage the Buckeye State. The site of his first nursery was a familiar spot to me when a college student at Bethany. It was at Lagrange, Ohio, now Brilliant, just across from Wellsburg, W. Va. One can still see trees that are lineal descendants of the trees of Chapman's planting, and a friend of mine, now four score, told me he had seen one of Johnny Appleseed's trees which was four feet across the stump and measured one hundred and sixty feet across the branches and yielded thirty bushels of fruit.

Every man, woman, and child among the early settlers knew Johnny. He was a welcome guest in the homes of the pioneers. His nature was deeply religious and he led a blameless life. He was a man of singular appearance, wore a broad-brimmed hat, went barefoot in summer and even in cold weather often, and wore a coffee sack with neck and arm holes cut in it as a coat. He lived in a cabin, but when on his journeys camped out; never killed anything even for food, and carried cooking utensils, among which was a mush pan which he sometimes wore as a hat. Being a man of peace he never carried a weapon, and Indians and wild beasts seemed to understand him. He never married and some thought he had a love affair back in the Old Bay State and because of disappointment was living a hermit life. He went about selling apple trees at the usual price of "a fippennybit," and if a settler could not pay he gave them away. To sell fruit trees and talk the doctrines of Swedenborg, in which he was an ardent believer, was Johnny's life.

Chapman served in other ways the pioneers. In 1812, when a number of settlers had been killed by the red men, tidings came to Mansfield, and the few families that composed the town sought refuge in the block house on the public square. An attack was considered imminent, no troops were there, and it was decided to send a messenger to Mt. Vernon, but who would undertake the journey? Night was coming on and it was a perilous trip over a wilderness trail through a forest infested with Indians and wild beasts. Volunteers were called for and Johnny Appleseed rose and said, "I'll go!" Bareheaded, barefooted, a meek and quiet man, yet full of determination, he started on his Paul Revere journey, rapping at the windows of cabins on the route, warning settlers, arriving safely at Mt. Vernon and arousing the garrison, and returning so expeditiously that at sunrise the next morning the troops were at Mansfield—Johnny having made the round trip of sixty miles between sunset and sunrise.

Chapman went as far west as Indiana, planting his apple trees and doing his deeds of kindness. He lived in the vicinity of Fort Wayne, 1836 47, and while here heard that cattle had broken into one of his nurseries and started on foot to look after it. The distance was about twenty miles, and fatigue and exposure at seventy-two years of age were too much for him. He stopped at the house of a man named Worth who recognized Johnny Appleseed and made him welcome. He declined going to the supper table, and ate a bowl of bread and milk. He declined the bed offered him, and, as was his custom, stretched upon the floor with a quilt and a pillow. Before he slept he asked permission to hold family worship and read the beatitudes and prayed for all classes and conditions of men. In the morning they found him in a high state of fever, pneumonia had set in, and he battled with it for a while and then succumbed, dying with a smile of joy on his homely face which they said seemed "as the face of an angel."

So passed a hero and benefactor whose bruised feet made whole now walk the streets of the New Jerusalem. Struggles and hardships of the pioneers to whom this nation owes so much are forgotten; legends, tales and traditions of that early period in the nation's life may pass into oblivion; but the influence of this humble, honest, uncrowned soul must endure with the beauty and fragrance of the apple blossoms.

Weary travelers journeying west
In the shade of his trees find pleasant rest;
And often they start with glad surprise
At the rosy fruit that around them lies.
And if they enquire, whence come such trees
Where not a bough once swayed the breeze,
The reply still comes as they travel on,
"These seed were planted by Appleseed John."

Do we think of the value of plain people in a world like ours? Has it ever occurred to you how much the world owes for example to Mother Goose, a real person, Elizabeth Foster, whose descendants still live in Boston, to whom nurserydom owes its ditties—a plain, honest, industrious woman of no literary culture, devoted to her household, never dreaming the world would hear her name, and who to-day has world-wide renown? Do we ever undertake to measure the infinite worth to us, to society, to the nation and to the race, of quiet people who never receive any reward in silver and gold, never get into the newspapers, but just live, love, and serve, blossom and bear fruit by the way, and go to rest and wait for God to assign their wages?

Our Budget

—Annual offering for Foreign Missions, March 5.

—Let us break all records of previous missionary offerings in our history.

—An offering from each church, and from each member in each church, will carry us up to the quarter million mark. Let that be the ideal toward which we are to strive.

—If the revivals which we are having among the churches are genuine, as we believe them to be, ought they not to tell on our missionary offerings?

—We are grateful for the steady stream of subscriptions to the Christian-Evangelist, which does not have the appearance of a boom so much as a permanent and steadily increasing flow. Show the paper to your neighbor, and ask him to subscribe.

—The bitter cold weather during February has been a severe test on all forms of religious activity, including that of securing subscriptions for the Christian-Evangelist, but we may anticipate more favorable weather and better results in all departments of our work for the next few months.

—Geo. E. Hicks is in a good meeting with his church at LaPorte, Ind., assisted by V. E. Ridenour, as singer. There have been eight additions to date.

—W. T. McConnell, a graduate of Bethany college, and a minister of several years' experience, though a young man, may be secured to hold some meetings in the immediate future, and refers to Brethren Geo. L. Snively, of this city, and Harry G. Hill, of Indianapolis. Brother McConnell has been spending some time in the Indian Territory, but may be addressed, for the present, care of Geo. L. Snively, 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis.

—Geo. C. Ritchey, minister at Roseburg, Oregon, referring to our statement that the coast states were too far away, and should be removed to this side of the mountains, says: "Now, we do not wish the coast states removed east of the mountains, either by faith or other means. We came here on purpose to get on this side! Especially we do not care to change in the winter time." All right. If these brethren feel that they can get along on the west side of the mountains, we will try to get the Christian-Evangelist to them as early as possible.

—Bro. R. L. Fox, of Burdette, Ark., thanks us for recent articles on the "Holy Spirit" in the Christian-Evangelist, and adds: "I am away out here in the swamps of Arkansas, with no fellowship of the brethren, in body, and if you take away the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, wherein, Paul said, he could be present, if not in body, then, am I, of all men, most miserable."

—We give another brief installment elsewhere of our symposium on the Holy Spirit and prayer, in relation to our evangelism. The incident related by Brother Allen is very suggestive. He is right. These are the two sides of the shield. We must have the power, and we must have the plan of salvation—both are divine. The Acts of Apostles points out both, and the one as plainly as the other.

—Bro. A. G. Smith, pastor of the Christian church at Clay Center, Nebraska, furnishes one of several answers to the query, as to the whereabouts of the quotation from Luther concerning the name, and gives this additional sentiment from the great reformer: "It is quite just that the papists should bear the name of their party, because they are not content with the name and doctrine of Jesus Christ; they will be papists besides. Well, then, let them own the pope, as he is their master. For me, I neither am, nor wish to be, master of anyone. I and mine will contend for the sole and whole doctrine of Christ, who is our sole Master." That is putting it pretty strongly, but Luther was no half-way reformer.

—Edward Clutter filled the pulpit for Geo. H. Combs, Kansas City, Mo., on Feb. 12.

—The semiannual convention of the North Texas Christian Missionary Society is meeting this week at Paris.

—S. R. Reynolds, who has gone from Des Moines to Cherokee, Ia., has begun working at once for the March offering.

—Hugh A. Orchard, of Mason City, Ill., has accepted a call from the church at Ft. Scott, Kan., and will begin his work about March 1.

—Will H. Newlin has closed a ministry of three years and seven months at Arcadia, Ind., and enters immediately upon the pastorate at Jamestown, Ind.

—Russell F. Thrapp, of Jacksonville, Ill., is the first minister to serve on a special grand jury in the history of his county. The wave of reform has struck that place.

—Sister W. M. Berkeley filled her husband's pulpit on a recent date at Marion, Kan., when he was lecturing at Logan, and she was rewarded with a confession at the close.

—W. A. McCalla, formerly a Freewill Baptist minister, who united with our church at McConnellsville, Ohio, in a recent meeting, has accepted a call to Beverly and Coal Run. He will live at Beverly.

—Claris Yeuell, of Shelbina, Mo., will work with the church at Louisville, Minn., until May, when it is possible he may accept the work permanently and move his family there. He will also preach at Willow Creek.

—A cordial invitation was extended to all Disciples in reach of Columbia, O., to attend the meeting of the foreign missionary rally in the West Fourth avenue Christian church, on March 1. A splendid program has been prepared.

—Charles E. McVay, singing evangelist, will assist Thomas H. Popplewell in a meeting at Denver, Mo., the latter part of February and the first of March, and C. A. Burton at Franklin, Ill., after that. He is open for an April engagement.

—Colyer A. Lowe has resigned the pastorate of the church at Mokane, Mo., and accepted a call from the Mitchell Park church, St. Joseph, Mo., where he has already begun work. Brother Lowe is a graduate of the Missouri state university.

—Edward O. Tilburne, of Warsaw, Ind., has been debating, sustaining the affirmative on the subject of municipal ownership of public utilities and having as his opponent Judge L. W. Royse of the circuit court. The local papers published the speech in full.

—The Indianapolis Christian ministers' association heard a paper at its recent meeting by Dr. W. B. Stewart on "The Physician and the Minister in the Sick Room." At the meeting this week the theme was "Conversational Evangelism" treated by C. B. Newnan.

—H. C. Patterson is in a meeting at Humestown, Ia. He writes: "We are having a promising meeting, although the snow is almost two feet deep on the level, and the mercury running daily away below zero. The audiences are fine, and interest growing."

—The work at the First Christian church at Norman, Okla., where Clay T. Runyon has just received a call as pastor for another year, is in a prosperous condition. Large audiences attend, and the congregation and minister are going to attempt great things for the Master this coming year.

F. M. RAINS, Cor. Sec.,
Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

—The Endeavor society has placed two windows, costing $50 each, in the new church at Higginsville, Mo. The members raised 50 per cent above their apportionment for the orphan work at Damoh. J. H. Coil is the pastor, and Louis H. Warren president of the Christian Endeavor.

—Cephas Shelburne, of Huntington, Ind., says: "I have a good man in the east (Virginia) that I would like to bring this way, and place with some good church. He is a good pastor and preacher, has an excellent helper in his wife. Both are educated and cultured. Write me."

—H. L. Atkinson, who was for two years pastor of the First Christian church at California, Pa., has been called back to that work for the next three years. He and his wife were given a very pleasant farewell reception at Chesterland, O., before leaving for their new field of labor.

—Mrs. Princess C. Long, our queen of song, called at this office recently on her way to Texas, where she is to do some concert work. While she is in the state she will give her Sunday services to some of the Texas churches that may desire her. We need scarcely say that her singing will be a benediction to any church.

—I wish to thank you for publishing in the Christian-Evangelist, "The Upper Room," by Mrs. Princess Long. It is a gem sparkling with divine luster. Thousands will join me in regret, that by some misunderstanding she did not sing it at that matchless communion service held in the Coliseum at St. Louis during our last national convention.

Columbia, Mo. Frank W. Allen.

—We have received from London a copy of a tract entitled, "Should Creeds be Mended or Ended?" by Joseph Bryant Rotherham. Brother Rotherham has taken advantage of the discussion about creeds caused by the decision of the House of Lords in relation to church property in Scotland to make a statement on the question of creeds, showing that no human creed is necessary. This tract contains three chapters, is of thirty pages, and sells for one penny. It is a timely discussion of a vital topic, with especial application to the condition of things in Scotland.

—As a result of a fine meeting at Topeka, Kansas, it has been decided to erect a new and larger building.

—Last year 862 churches reached their apportionment for Foreign Missions. Let us increase the number this year.

—No church or preacher ever made a greater mistake than in deciding to conserve resources by not taking the offering for Foreign Missions.

—The Foreign Society has received another gift of $1,000 on the annuity plan from a friend in Pennsylvania. This is his second gift of $1,000.

—E. P. Wise, pastor of Cedar Ave. church, Cleveland, will hold a meeting with the Wellsville, Ohio, church, of which W. C. Prewitt is pastor. The meeting will begin March 6.

—At the last meeting of the executive committee of the Foreign Society H. C. Saum and wife, of Prairie Depot, were appointed missionaries. They will probably go to India in September next.

—E. A. Orr, pastor at Saybrook, Ill., has received a call to Mankato, where is one of the most important churches in Minnesota. The last pastor was J. K. Shellenberger, now pastor at Duluth, Minn.

—M. F. Redlien has closed his four years' pastorate with the church at Hickman Mills, Mo., and is now at liberty to hold meetings wherever called. He may be addressed for the next few months at Excelsior Springs, Mo.

—The Board of Church Extension has just received $500 from J. P. Hieronymus, of Illinois. This is the 131st gift to the Board of Church Extension on the annuity plan. For particulars concerning the annuity plan address G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—Two years ago D. H. Bays was called to the pastorate at Madrid, Ia. We hear very good reports of his work there. The church had been struggling under extreme difficulty, but has gone forward, and Brother Bays has just received a call to remain for another year and has been granted a vacation to recuperate his health.

—J. W. Johnson has closed his work at Redfield, Ia. The church there exceeded all its missionary apportionments last year. A pastor has not yet been secured, and the congregation is trying to co-operate with another church for half time. What is needed is a good organizer and determined leader, for much talent lies dormant.

—J. D. Greer has again been called to the pastorate at Laddonia, Mo. He will preach half time there and quarter time at New Bloomfield, this being his third call there. The brethren expect to build this year. Brother Greer began quarter time at Martinsburg the end of January, and had a good state missionary offering. All these churches will observe the missionary offerings this year.

—W. T. Hilton has left Sioux City, Iowa, to take up work at Atchison, Kansas, where our church is one of the best. Brother Hilton has been at Sioux City for two years, and his work there is highly spoken of by the local paper. Plans are well matured for a new building and J. K. Ballou will carry forward the work. He is a young man of energy and ability. We all know that Brother Hilton is a "hustler."

—The Christian and Congregational churches of Abingdon, Ill., are holding a union revival meeting. The pastors of the two churches alternate in preaching, and large crowds are said to be in attendance each evening. The Abingdon local paper contains a report of a sermon delivered by Bro. T. J. Shuey, pastor of the Christian church, on "The New Birth," which is a clear, strong, scriptural presentation of the subject.

53 Cottage St., Melrose, Mass.
Dear Sirs: Jan 11th, 1904.

"Ever since I was in the Army, I had more or less kidney trouble, and within the past year it became so severe and complicated that I suffered everything and was much alarmed—my strength and power was fast leaving me. I saw an advertisement of Swamp-Root and wrote asking for advice. I began the use of the medicine and noted a decided improvement after taking Swamp-Root only a short time.

"I continued its use and am thankful to say that I am entirely cured and strong. In order to be very sure about this, I had a doctor examine some of my water to-day and he pronounced it all right and in splendid condition.

"I know that your Swamp-Root is purely vegetable and does not contain any harmful drugs. Thanking you for my complete recovery and recommending Swamp-Root to all sufferers, I am."

Very truly yours,
I. C. RICHARDSON.

Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything, but it promptly cures kidney, liver and bladder troubles, the symptoms of which are, obliged to pass your water frequently night and day, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, headache, backache, lame back, dizziness, poor digestion, sleeplessness, nervousness, heart disturbance due to bad kidney trouble, skin eruptions from bad blood, neuralgia, rheumatism, diabetes, bloating, irritability, wornout feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, sallow complexion, or Bright's disease.

If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

—Wm. Amos, of Lordsburg, Cal., has just sent to Geo. L. Snively, general secretary of the Benevolent Association, a draft for $1,000 on the annuity plan. This is the eighty-seventh annuity bond which the Benevolent Association has issued. Our readers understand that this plan involves the payment of interest on the amount during the lifetime of the donor, after which the principal, of course, becomes the property of the association.

—Sunday, March 5, may be a bad day. In that case do not be defeated in your offering for Foreign Missions. It may be you are in the midst of a protracted meeting. In that case make the meeting help to swell the offering. If you are building a new church, then help to insure the success of the building enterprise by giving larger than ever before in the March offering. If you have a debt, or must raise money soon for local expenses, remember that the light that shines farthest shines brightest nearest home. If for any reason the officers oppose the offering the objection can be overcome by patient and tactful management. Do not be afraid that a great offering for Foreign Missions will cut off gifts for other causes. The very converse of this has been true in all our missionary history. The preacher and church officers should not suffer defeat on any account. If the pastor has a deep and intelligent interest the success of the offering is probably assured. More depends upon him than any other one influence.

—We regret to learn that the church at Brazil, Ind., was destroyed by fire, and on the very morning on which a meeting was to have begun with home forces. The pastor, E. L. Day, had been called to a funeral and the first service was to have been conducted by one of the elders, but the building caught fire, and was completely destroyed, with the exception of a portion of the walls, which may be used in the new building which will immediately be erected. The brethren are bowed down but not discouraged. Brother Day writes: "Their optimism and cheerfulness is an inspiration to the minister under all the circumstances," and says that the sympathy of the whole community is with the church. The revival will be postponed, but other services will go right on, the basement of the public library building having been secured until the new church can

PROMINENT MEMBERS OF THE FUKUSHIMA CHRISTIAN CHURCH, JAPAN.

Fukushima is an important city of some 25,000 inhabitants. It is the scene of much faithful labor by M. B. Madden, missionary of the Foreign Society. There is now a good church in this important center. The gentleman with the mustache is Mr. Hasegawa, who is the pastor of the church. These are all faithful Disciples.
